THE MISSION STEAMER "PIONEER," which has been built at Wyvenhoe, in Essex, for work on the Congo in connection with the Balolo Mission, ran her trial trip on the Colne on Monday last. A few friends joined Mrs. Grattan Guinness and Dr. Grattan Guinness, jun., on the occasion, and the vessel was dedicated to God in earnest prayer. The Pioneer will navigate the southern tributaries of the Congo, which intersect and water Balololand above the cataract region. She is admirably fitted for the conveyance of a few passengers and a small cargo of commodities. She will be worked by a British engineer and a native crew, and it is expected to be launched on Stanley Pool in March next. The work of transport in sections above the cataracts will cost about £1000. The trial run was satisfactory, and the vessel held to be well suited for her interesting and noble purpose.

"Dr. Clifford's New Departure."

THE Baptist Union has evidently not done with the Down-Grade controversy. We have watched with considerable interest and anxiety the discussion which was reopened a few weeks ago, in the columns of The Baptist, by Rev. John Urquhart's letter, entitled, "Dr. Clifford's New Departure." The letter contained very serious statements, which seemed to be well sustained by published reports of Dr. Clifford's utterances, and by the manifesto of the "Christly Ethical Church of England," of which Dr. Clifford is a member. It certainly appeared as though Dr. Clifford were willing, at the bidding of the German theologians, and of their imitators in England, to regard as doubtful the authenticity of parts of the Old Testament; and at the bidding of Baur—whom he describes as "a servant of incalculable value to the Church of Christ and his work"—to surrender even the authenticity of parts of the New Testament, and as though he believed that, according to the manifesto of the Christly Ethical Church, there might be a gospel which did not require the atonement, the divinity, the resurrection or even the personality of Jesus Christ. No such serious indictment has hitherto been urged against the ex-President of the Baptist Union.

If these charges are not true, Dr. Clifford owes it to himself, and to the Union of which he is still so prominent and useful a member, to give them the clearest and most unmistakable denial. We regret to say that, after carefully reading his two letters, we cannot see that he has done this. To complain of Mr. Urquhart's want of courtesy in not first communicating with him as to the accuracy of the quotations on which the statements were based, and to hold up to censure the whole method and spirit in which they have been made, does not clear Dr. Clifford. It looks like an attempt to divert attention from the statements concerning himself.

Upon two points, however, his letter is satisfactory. First, he acquits himself of responsibility for the sentiments expressed in the Christly Ethical Church manifesto; and, secondly, he asserts his faith in the divinity of Christ in language that cannot be mistaken. We wish heartily that upon other matters he had spoken no less clearly and definitely. No one expects Dr. Clifford to adopt the ordinary evangelical phrases; but, allowing him considerable difference in his method of expression, he need not leave his readers in any doubt as to his meaning.

His reply to the doubt as to his accepting the authenticity of the whole Bible is not satisfactory. He explains that in commending Canon Cheyne for carrying "the methods of Germany into full and fruitful use," and in describing Baur as "a servant of incalculable value to the Church of Christ and his work," it was the methods, not the results of the work of these men which he had in his mind. If this is all he meant, then his commendation appears to us to be inexcusably extravagant. Nor can we understand how a man, who did not accept in some measure the conclusions to which their methods have led, can be so enthusiastic in his admiration of the men. Not the methods, but the fruit of a man's work proves of what value he is to the Church of Christ.

Dr. Clifford replies further by arguing that the Bible is a growth, in a sense which no intelligent reader applied to Mr. Urquhart's phrase. And he adds: "I should far sooner think of excluding God in thought from this material world than from the unique, hallowing, and inspiring literature of the Old and New Testaments." Is this a satisfactory reply? Is it not possible for a man of whom Mr. Urquhart's statements are true to make use of similar language? The more we read Dr. Clifford's letters the more does it appear to us that he has evaded rather than replied to Mr. Urquhart's articles.

We know the reluctance with which any true man approaches such a task as that which Mr. Urquhart has undertaken. There is the fear, on the one hand, of being unfaithful to God, and, on the other, of being deficient in the spirit of brotherly love, and of being regarded as a mere heresy hunter, eager to find fault with his brethren. There is equal reluctance on the part of others to consider carefully such charges when made concerning one whom they honour and esteem.

In a pregnant sentence, The Baptist has thus stated the present position: "Personal likes and dislikes, and the possible issue to individuals, rather than to the cause at stake, will remain the great obstacle to a settlement, doing real injustice to none, because, primarily, doing justice to God." We have italicised these few words, because they seem to us to remove all ground for fearing to look these matters fairly in the face. If, in justice to God, they ought to be considered, then no consideration for individuals—either ourselves or others—ought to have the slightest weight. We cannot do real injustice to man while being faithful to God.

Since writing the above, two other communications have appeared in The Baptist, one, a final letter from Mr. Urquhart; the other, an able and scholarly review of the controversy, by Dr. Weymouth. With every desire to avoid unfairness, both to Dr. Clifford and to Mr. Urquhart, we are bound to say that Dr. Weymouth's letter appears to us to be written in an impartial spirit, and, while justifying the interpretation Mr. Urquhart put upon Dr. Clifford's words, shows that some of the more important charges remain in full force. We do not see how the ex-President of the Baptist Union can, in justice to himself, and to the Union of which he is a member, remain silent in the face of such a letter.

We notice that Rev. C. Douglas Crouch, of Worthing, has resigned his membership in the Baptist Union, stating as his reason that he "can no longer remain a member of a Union which, while it dares to censure, for his faithful protests, its most gifted, loyal-hearted, and God-honoured member [we understand Mr. Spurgeon to be here referred to], wholly ignores the heretical teachings of others, whose tendency is fatally injurious to the faith which was once for all delivered to the saints."

The policy of the Union does seem to be one of silence with regard to those concerning whom charges of false teaching are made, and of censure for those who have the courage and fidelity to make them. We gravely doubt the wisdom no less than the honesty of such a policy. It may preserve for a while an outward semblance of union, but it ignores the fact that union, to be permanent, must be based upon substantial agreement. We do not enter into the question whether or no the statements are proved; but we do say that silence on the part of the Union is calculated to strengthen the suspicions of those of its members to whom the defence of evangelical truth is dearer than the maintenance of any outward unity.

OBITUARY.

MRS. SHIELDS, OF MALANGE, WEST AFRICA.

WITH sorrow we record the death of Mrs. Arthur Shields (née Miss Bertha Mead), five weeks after her marriage. Mrs. Shields has been very much blessed in her missionary labours in Africa for the past five years. Mr. and Mrs. Shields were married by Bishop Taylor in June.

MR. MICHAEL YOUNG.

We regret to have to record the death last week of Mr. Michael Young, of Hackney, a well-known and highly-esteemed citizen of that burgh. He took an active part in all matters relating to the well-being of the people, and was deacon and treasurer of Clapton Park Congregational Church.

Reading for the Army.

DEAR SIR,—You were so good as to insert in your issue of September 20 an appeal for funds to purchase Mr. Hastings' anti-infidel lecture for distribution throughout the army at home and abroad. May I be allowed to call the earnest attention of all Christian friends to Mr. Hastings' offer to give 50,000 copies, provided others will subscribe for 100,000 copies at £2 10s. per 1000 before January 1.

Here is a golden opportunity for all who take an interest in the welfare of our army, to come forward and help according to their ability, to take advantage of Mr. Hastings' most liberal and noble offer. If any enclose a donation direct to Marshall Brothers, 10, Paternoster-row, E.C., they must be careful to state "for Major Evered Poole's Fund." I have received from kind friends £22 16s. up to the present time.

Rockholme, Southampton. W. J. EVERED POOLE.

VEGETARIANISM, as a system of diet, has made truly remarkable strides within the last few years. Restaurants for the exclusive supply of that kind of food have sprung up in London on all hands, and each seems to be well patronised. The proprietors of the "Ceres," in Aldersgate-street (one of the best of its kind), have just opened large dining rooms at the west end of Paternoster-row. From the point of economy, as well as that of health, we hail the growth of this movement, and trust that such plain living will prove some aid to high thinking.

PRINCESS HOUSE FOR YOUNG WOMEN.—Our readers are aware that Miss Hester Needham, founder, and for eleven years secretary of the Y.W.C.A. branch of the Princess House, Brompton, recognised the call of God to her in the appeal made by Miss Priscilla Barclay, of the China Inland Mission, for a tribe in Sumatra, and is now on her way to that island. Miss Needham was a lady of means, and threw her whole energy into the work at Brompton road. Her place is now filled by Miss M. McLean, who for nine years laboured in Japan; but as the funds are only guaranteed (by the kindness of Miss Needham) to the end of the present year, Miss McLean is anxious to secure some fresh friends to interest themselves in this good work. Her address is, Princess House, 106, Brompton-road, London, S.W.

Y.M.C.A., SOUTH-WESTERN DISTRICT UNION.—The half-yearly conference, for the counties of Devon and Cornwall, was held on Friday last, in the splendid institute of the Devonport Association. The Secretary's statement showed an increase in the total numbers of the district, some of the branch reports being full of encouragement for the future. Dr. Hingston presided over the conference, at which Mr. W. Hind-Smith, of London, delivered an address on the work of the district union, and how its usefulness may be increased. Efforts in small towns and villages formed the subject of a paper by Mr. J. F. Jenkins, of Redruth. There were vigorous discussions. It was stated that Christian commercial travellers had been invited to use the rooms of the Association during their visits. Mr. W. H. Mills, of London, spoke helpfully at the several meetings.

The First Epistle of Peter.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

VII.—YE SHALL BE HOLY.

1 PETER i. 13—17.

THE "wherefore" with which this paragraph opens gathers up the premises of the preceding verses, and uses them as a massive platform of solid masonry on which to erect the battery of appeal to which the Apostle now addresses himself. Because our destiny is what it is; because Jesus Christ is what He is; because our salvation has been the theme of prophets, apostles, martyrs, angels; therefore...

And the aim of his appeal is Holiness.—"Be ye yourselves also holy in all manner of living." The cry for holiness rings through the Bible. It is the keynote of Leviticus, from which this quotation is made (compare ver. 16 with Lev. xi. 44, xix. 2, xx. 7 and 26, &c.); and it is equally the supreme demand of the New Testament. In point of fact, all the wondrous machinery of redemption, from the distant choice of eternity to the descent of the Holy Spirit on the Day of Pentecost, has had this for its purpose, that we, who have been the subjects of the grace of the Persons of the Eternal Trinity, should resemble them in the holiness which is the perpetual burden of heaven's rapturous minstrelsy—that song which was heard by the evangelic prophet Isaiah from the Temple courts, in the year that King Uzziah died; but which was still unfinished when the beloved Apostle John detected it amid the break of the Ægean Sea around the lone island of his banishment; and which will never cease, world without end: "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord God, the Almighty."

Holiness is the property of God alone.—It is the totality of the Divine attributes; the sum of the Eternal and Infinite Being of Godhead; the essence of Deity; the chord made by the harmonious blending of Divine qualities; the beam woven from the many colours of Divine perfections; the expression in a single term of all that goes to make up the moral nature of the great Spirit whom we call God. It is underived in its source; unlimited in its measure; unsupportable in its naked and unveiled splendour by the eye of any creature which He has made. "Who is like unto Thee, O Lord, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders?" No tongue then shall dare to challenge God's right to declare Himself as the Holy One of Israel, or to say in the words before us, "I am holy."

Such holiness is evidently possible to us.—See, the holy God has "called" us to it (15). "God hath not called us to uncleanness, but to holiness." "He hath called us with an holy calling." The holy brethren are partakers of "the heavenly calling." But God would not summon us to heights we could not scale, or tasks we could not perform. His call involves two facts—first, that his holiness is within our reach; secondly, that He is prepared to supply all that is necessary to effect in us that to which He calls us. God is pledged to make us holy, or He will expose Himself to the mockery of his foes. But we need not fear for Him. He counted the cost before He issued his proclamation; and He is well able to finish that of which He laid the foundation in the great depths of Calvary (Luke xiv. 29, 30).

Nor is such holiness for saints and Apostles alone; or only for the special golden days which visit most lives—days of feast and song and transfiguration. The Divine ideal is more comprehensive far. "Holy in all manner of living" (16). Zechariah foretold the time when the inscription on the high priest's mitre should be inscribed on the bells of the horses: "Holiness to the Lord." And it is God's purpose that that motto should be engraved on house bells, and office bells, and shop bells; on dinner bells and factory bells; so that in every department of our lives there might be sweet music made to life's great Lord. Holiness at every turn, and in every incident of our daily walk, like the golden tinkle which betrayed each movement of Israel's high priest.

There is only one way of becoming holy as God is; and it is the obvious one of opening the entire being to the all-pervading presence of the Holy One. None of us can acquire holiness apart from God. It dwells in God alone. Holiness is only possible as the soul's possession of God; nay, better still, as God's possession of the soul. It never can be inherent, or possessed apart from the Divine fulness, any more than a river can flow on if it is cut off from its fountain head. We are holy up to the measure in which we are God-possessed. The least holy man is he who shuts God up to the strictest confinement, and to the narrowest limits of his inner being; curtaining Him off from daily life by heavy curtains of neglect and unbelief. He is holier who more carefully denies self, and who seeks a larger measure of Divine indwelling. The holiest is the man who yields himself most completely to be influenced, swayed, possessed, inspired by that Spirit who longs to make us to the fullest extent partakers of the Divine Nature.

Wouldst thou be holier?—There is but one way. Thou must have more of God in thee. Holiness is the beauty of the Lord God of hosts. Thou canst not separate the one from the other. To have it thou must have Him. Nor will it be hard to obtain either, for He longs to enter into human nature. Thy longing is the faint response of thine heart to his call. The power that works within is matched by the grace which can do for us exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think. Man never desired so much of God as God desired of man. God's holiness has revealed itself in a human form in the person of Jesus Christ our Lord, and so it is as able as it is eager to enter human lives through that blessed Spirit who is pre-eminently the channel and medium by which we are filled up unto all the fulness of God. Ask thy heavenly Father for this Spirit. He is more eager to give Him than a father to give food to his hungry child. And, having asked, dare to believe that thou hast received, and go in this thy might.

And this holiness will reveal itself in many ways.

I. THERE WILL BE THE PILGRIM ATTITUDE AND TEMPER.—Eastern fashions suggest the figure of the girt loins. Their loose and flowing robes suit well the deliberate movements which the climate begets, but they would grievously hamper pilgrim, wrestler, or warrior. When the Israelites were momentarily expecting the summons for the Exodus, they stood with their loins girt around the tables on which the Paschal Lamb was smoking. Thus did the prophet of fire gird himself for the swift courier-run before Ahab's chariot, from Carmel to Jezreel.

Our souls are clad with the flowing garments of various tastes, appetites, affections, and propensities, which hang loosely around us, constantly catching in the things of the world, and hindering us in the Christian race. We must not let them stream as they will, or we do so at our peril. Absalom rued the day when his luxuriant tresses floated behind him in the breeze. We must gird up the habits of our souls, and trim ourselves, so as to pass as quickly and easily as possible through the thorny jungle of our world.

Hold your spirit in a tight hand. Put a curb on appetite. Say "No" to luxurious pleasure-seeking. Curtail your expenditure on yourself. Don't spread yourself too widely. Watch eye and lip, thought and wish, lest any break from the containing cords of self-control. "Keep thine heart with all diligence." Give Vanity Fair as little chance as possible, by passing swiftly and unostentatiously through.

Be sober.—Sobriety is a great word. It is constantly inculcated in the New Testament on elders, deacons, women, aged men, young men, and maidens. It means temperance, self-control, and a just estimate of one's self in the world. There are some who counterfeit it by assuming an austere and forbidding attitude, denouncing much that is innocent and natural, and looking severely on some who do not yield to their scruples. The truly sober man, on the other hand, moves freely through the world, strewn with beautiful and innocent things; using them without abuse, rejoicing in every good thing which the Lord God gives, but never allowing any of them to usurp too great an influence on his affections, or to tyrannise over his will.

When the heart is fully engaged with the Lord, his service, and love, and rewards, and welcome home at last, it can afford to look undazzled on many a captivating spectacle, and to sip of many a fascinating cup. The holy heart, filled to brimming with the Presence of God, is like a man who has been well banqueted, and who is therefore able to look calmly on the passionate heat with which starving men will fight with each other over offal.

Hope to the end.—"Set your hope perfectly" (R.V.). Go fearlessly as far as hope can go. Let her sit at her easel, painting her fairest pictures, or sing rapturously her most ecstatic lay; she cannot be disappointed. The grace which is to be brought unto us when the veiling clouds are rent, and the Lord Jesus is revealed from heaven, will far surpass all her imaginings. Hope is the lamp of the soul, passed down from saint to saint, as in the old Greek race, but destined to be eclipsed in the light which is to break ere long upon our spirits—the day of perfected redemption, of glorified creation, of a perfected Church.

II. THERE WILL BE THE OBEDIENCE OF CHILDREN (14).—Once the children of disobedience, we have been born again, and become the children of obedience—a fair mother with noble offspring. Such, at least, is the literal rendering of the Greek. And what a marvellous difference at once comes over the lives of those who have passed through this change! "They no longer fashion themselves according to the former lusts.

Lust is natural inclination run wild, over-eaping all restraint, and asserting its own mperious will. When we are yet in the dark- ess of nature, unillumined by the grace of God, hese lusts fashion us. Beneath their touch ve are moulded, as clay by the potter's hand. gnorant of the abominableness of sin, of its disastrous results, of its insidious growth, we ield to it until it becomes our tyrant and our uin. Oh, the horror of the awaking, when we ee the depths of this beetling precipice de- scending sheer beneath us to hell! Then we no longer fashion ourselves according to the former lusts, but according to the will of God—that is obedience.

It is impossible to exaggerate the importance of this truth. Obedience is not holiness; holiness is the possession of the soul by God. But holiness always leads to obedience. And each time we obey, we receive into our natures a little more of the Divine nature. "If ye shall indeed obey my voice, ye shall be an holy nation unto Me." Do, then, whatever appears right to do. Forsake all which begins and ends with self. Be not satisfied with prayer and desire, but do. And thus there will come over your face and life more likeness to the Father of your spirits, and you will be holy.

How few Christian people seem to realise that obedience in trifles, in all things, to the will and law of Jesus, is the indispensable condition of life and joy and power. The obedient soul is the holy soul, overshadowed and filled by the presence of God, and all aglow with light and love. Dear reader! resolve from this moment to live up to the margin of your light. Let this be your motto: "All that the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient."

III. THERE WILL BE A REVERENT ANTICIPATION OF THE FATHER'S AWARD (17).—God's children are to be judged, not at the great white throne, but at the judgment seat of Christ (2 Cor. v. 10). That judgment will not decide our eternal destiny, because that has been settled before; but it will settle the rewards of our faithfulness (Matt. xxv. 19; 1 Cor. iii. 14).

There is a sense in which that judgment is already in process, and we are ever standing before the judgment bar. "The Father who judgeth." The Divine verdict is being pronounced perpetually on our actions, and hourly is manifesting itself in light or shadow.

But it is a Father's judgment. We call on Him as Father. Notice this reciprocity of calling. He called us, we call Him. His address to us as children, begets our address to Him as Father. We need not dread his scrutiny, it is tender. He pities us as a father pities his children, knowing our frame, allowing for our weaknesses, and bearing with us with an infinite patience.

But for all that it is impartial. There is no respect of persons. Many years before, this had been revealed to the Apostle from heaven in a memorable vision, which affected his whole after ministry (Acts x. 35). Not according to profession, or appearance, or any self-constituted importance, but according to what we do, are we being judged.

The holy soul realises this, and a great awe falls upon it and overshadows it—an awe not born of the fear which hath torment, but of love. Not the fear of evil consequences to itself, but the fear of grieving the Father, of bringing a shadow over his face, of missing any manifestation of his love and nearness to Himself, which may be granted to the obedient child. Love casts out fear, but it also begets it. There is nothing craven, or fretful, or depressing; but the tenderness of conscience which dreads the tiniest cloud on the inner sky, such as might overshadow for a single moment the clear shining of the Father's face. So the days of sojourning pass quickly on, and the vision of the homeland beckons to us, and bids us mend our pace.

Some Scottish Missions.—III.

CARRUBBER'S CLOSE, EDINBURGH.

"IF you are in Edinburgh on a Saturday night, be sure to go to Carrubber's Close!" "If you want to get a good idea of the work at Carrubber's Close, go and see it on a Saturday night!"

Such advice, the one part obviously complementing the other, was in substance given to me by different persons, and at different places; but it was sufficiently definite to ensure my being in the beautiful capital on the Saturday night. "But would it not be seen to better advantage on Sunday?" it may be asked. No; because, the drink-shops being closed on that day, the need for this work is not so hideously apparent as on the preceding night. Before, therefore, touching upon the work of the Mission in general, and its Sabbath work in particular, I shall devote this paper to my experiences on the night in question.

Under the kind escort of Mr. G. A. Barclay, one of the directors of the Mission, I wended my way down the "High-street," which certainly to English ears sounds a misnomer, inasmuch as we reserve such an appellation for the more dignified and important of our thoroughfares. But this High-street (in which the Mission premises are situated) is important, if it is not dignified, for in its immediate neighbourhood are some of the worst haunts of the city: and it is to fight the glaring evils of drink and debauchery which are so rampant here that the Mission exists.

Pressing along through noisy groups of men, women, and boys, we hear a familiar strain—

> This is my story, this is my song, and join a group of singers outside the imposing building in which the meeting is to be held. Presently a poor fellow, in an advanced stage of intoxication, comes up to us, and, balancing himself chiefly on one leg, and steadying himself with the other, dives his hands into the depths of his pockets, leaning against us the while, and produces a penny—all that is left of twenty-three shillings received in wages that day. That alone was sufficient evidence of the need of such work as this.
> Praising my Saviour all the day long!

Inside the hall a great crowd is gathered. Fifteen hundred seats are provided, but the aisles of floor and gallery are filled with persons obliged to stand. Bright singing, led by a good choir, lends heartiness to the proceedings, and the stranger, however poor, is made to feel that here, at any rate, his presence is welcome. This meeting has become almost a rendezvous of Christian workers passing through the city, and, accordingly, on this occasion the visitors included Rev. J. Gelson Gregson, Dr. Smith (engaged in medical mission work in Glasgow), and a brother from Bulgaria. The subject was Gospel Temperance, and in the audience was a good sprinkling of those who, if outward appearances count for anything, were sadly in need of it.

Mr. Gregson, who is well at home with the subject after his life in India, led off with a telling address, delivered in his characteristic vigorous style. Presently a man, with a face red as the sun in a mild London fog, whose apparel was limited to two garments, rose in the gallery, and with more energy than coherence asked, "What's whisky for, if it isn't to be drunk?" Mr. Gregson instantly caught the idea:

"WHAT IS WHISKY FOR?"

he exclaimed; "why, to rob a poor man of all the comforts of his home; to strip him of the clothes that ought to cover him; to reduce him to beggary, while the publican's pocket is filled; and to send his wife and children into the streets, with scarce a rag upon their backs." The promptness of the reply carried conviction with it, and although the poor inebriate continued to make a stir, yet his very persistency and evidently destitute condition only emphasised the truth of the answer which Mr. Gregson had given. Subsequently another speaker showed what, on the other hand, Gospel Temperance was for—to restore a man to respectability and sobriety; in short, to undo all the evils which the whisky had wrought.

Another timely illustration was afforded when Mr. Barclay alluded to the case of the man who had met us outside. "All right, guv'nor, here I am!" said a voice in the front row of the other gallery; and sure enough there he was in an attitude of closest attention.

These cases give a fair idea of the class of persons reached, and, although the well-to-do appearance of the bulk of the audience might give the impression that not the poorest are reached, the fact is, most of these persons owe their respectable attire to the work of the Mission; for many of them were

THEMSELVES ONCE AMONG THE MOST DESTITUTE.

Presently, our Bulgarian friend, in broken English, declared that in his native land alcohol and tobacco, as used in England, are unknown; and caused some amusement by relating how, when in America, he found himself in a railway carriage with a man who was continually ejecting some evil-looking brown fluid from his mouth. Thinking he must be suffering from a disease, our friend became alarmed, and changed into another carriage. But here he found three men suffering from the same complaint. He afterwards learnt that they were chewing tobacco!

At the close of the meeting a number remained to take the pledge, and went forth trusting in God to enable them to fight against the curse by which they had been enslaved. There are now in Edinburgh who have been thus rescued, and are now also rejoicing in the forgiveness of their sins through the blood of Christ.

The appalling scenes which confronted us as we returned up the High-street might discourage some, but the feeling they produced in my mind was one of deep thankfulness that so much is being done to mitigate these evils, and that such splendid results from past endeavours have accrued.

MR. HENRY THORNE AT BARNET.

MR. THORNE was invited by the committee of the Barnet branch of the Y.M.C.A. to conduct a united Gospel Mission for thirteen days in this little town.

It commenced on October 12, and has been attended throughout with much blessing. From the first day until the last inquirers came forward, and more than a hundred persons, after receiving counsel and encouragement, professed to trust the Saviour. Ministers and workers of the various denominations were drawn together in Christian unity. Sectarian differences were apparently forgotten in the desire to see anxious souls become partakers of the common salvation. On several occasions there was not room in the Town Hall for all who sought admission to the meetings.

The converts and many of the workers will long retain pleasant recollections of this mission, and follow with their prayers the faithful evangelist in his future testimony for the Master. It seems likely that one result of the mission will be the starting of a Y.W.C.A.; many young women have already expressed a desire to join it.

Miss Papillon's Soldiers' Institute, Sandgate.—Through deaths and other causes the managers lack annual subscribers to the amount of £50 a year to carry on the Lord's work, which is being abundantly blessed in this camp. Contributions may be sent to Surgeon-Major W. E. ALSTON, M.D., hon. treasurer, at the Institute.

Dr. Pentecost in Scotland.

The Lord has of a truth made bare his arm in Airdrie; like as it was when Philip the evangelist was in Samaria, there is great joy in this city, for the Lord hath done great things in the salvation of sinners. By common consent there has never been so wide and deep a work of grace in this city before. It is not difficult to account for it. The mission was arranged for months ago. The committee consisted of all the ministers in the place, with two exceptions, besides representatives from every church, and they had the cordial co-operation of the excellent and active local evangelistic association. For months past prayer has been made to God for the success of the effort; as was to be expected, from the very first meeting the presence and power of the Lord have been manifest.

On the first Sabbath Dr. Pentecost preached three times; in two different churches, at the regular diets, and at night in the Public Hall, which was crammed to the doors long before the hour for service to begin had arrived. His text that night was: "Lazarus is dead." From this he drew the lesson that in every house in Airdrie there was most likely a dead brother or sister, or husband or wife, or son or daughter, and the imperative necessity of sending at once for Jesus, who loves, and will come and raise the dead. Then through the week Bible-readings and evening evangelistic addresses were given in one of the Free Churches. The preaching was simple, strongly Scriptural, and doctrinal in its method of presentation. Doubtless the stress laid on the final authority of the revealed Scriptures, and the emphatic presentation of the great evangelical truths of the Gospel have had much to do with the deep conviction of sin that has been manifest among the people and the strong and clear conversions that have occurred. Sin, Redemption, the Incarnation, the Resurrection, the New Birth, Repentance, Faith, Forgiveness, Justification, the Judgment, Immortality, beside scores of other subjects in which these great truths were constantly appearing, will indicate the line of the evangelist's teaching. Man's ruin, the deity of Jesus Christ, and the necessity and sufficiency of the Atonement for the salvation of sinners, have been much dwelt upon. The preacher has honoured the Holy Spirit, and constantly reminded the people that it is only as He moves heart and conscience that saving results will follow. The first week ended most hopefully with increasing audiences, deepening interest, and several scores of souls clearly brought out on the Lord's side.

The second week began with an early meeting on Sunday morning, fairly well attended, with the manifest presence of the Holy Spirit. At night the hall was again densely crowded, and the address was on "The Burial of the Unconverted Church-goer" (Eccles. viii. 10). This address aroused a deal of feeling among sinners, especially of the publican and public-house class. Airdrie is conspicuously cursed with public-houses, and the worst of it is that many of the chief publicans are prominent members of the church, and not a few of the wealthiest members of the churches, and even elders, are the proprietors of these places of death, which they let, for gain, to the liquor traffic. Dr. Pentecost did not scruple to speak plainly. He classed the drunkard, the publican, and the leasor of the properties together, and solemnly warned them that their church-going and communion-taking would not screen them from the sin of drunkard-making; it was only adding hypocrisy to sin. It was like the explosion of a bomb in the camp of the publicans and their proprietors, and caused much excitement. But the word of rebuke was honoured, and conviction of sin has followed. It is confidently believed that within a little while changes will be made in this business in Airdrie, and that it will, at any rate, become outlawed by the churches. The meetings through the second week steadily improved in numbers, power, and conversions.

The third week opened with an increased early morning meeting. In the afternoon Dr. Pentecost preached to 1500 women in the Town Hall. The after-meeting was very impressive. At the evangelist's first call for those who had believed, and were ready to leave their seats and come forward and make an open confession of faith in Christ, no one responded, nor did any at the second call; but at the third, a young woman rose from the gallery and walked down the whole length of it, and through the hall to the front, and fell on her knees, sobbing with deep emotion. Then followed a thrilling scene. In the course of twenty minutes more than fifty women, young and old, had openly confessed Christ.

At night the hall was packed with men, and at the second meeting about seventy men and well-grown boys and young men came out on the Lord's side. The meetings during the third week were in the Flower Hill Parish Church and showed steady advance in interest and power; about a hundred men, women, and young people came out on the Lord's side during this week. It was remarked by a neighbouring minister who came in to see the Lord's doing: "It was never before seen on this fashion here."

The fourth week began with an early morning meeting which crowded the Congregational Church, and was full of tenderness and power. In the afternoon Miss Tyson held her meeting for boys and girls in the Town Hall. It was a most interesting sight to see a thousand young people packed into the floor of the hall, with parents and friends occupying the gallery. For three-quarters of an hour Miss Tyson held those children spell-bound with her simple, but effective Gospel address, and her deft and striking work on the black board.

At night Dr. Pentecost preached to men only again, and though it was Communion Sabbath, and the church services were being held, the hall was full, mostly of non-church-members. The after-meetings showed fully fifty men out on the Lord's side, with clear and ringing confessions and testimonies to his saving grace. The meetings were continued during the last week in the Flower Hill Parish Church, each succeeding night showing a deepening of interest, and an increased number of conversions.

On Thursday, the last day of the mission, a tea-meeting was given to nearly four hundred, all of whom had made an open confession of Christ. It was addressed by Dr. Pentecost, Dr. Moxey, and Provost Colville, of Motherwell. It was an inspiring sight to see the spacious hall crammed by that host of converts, with eager and beaming faces. The closing meeting of the mission followed. The subject was, "The Transfiguration and its Lessons." The large church was crowded, and the power of God was present to heal. More than forty openly confessed Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord. Columns of The Christian could be filled with incidents of conversion of a most remarkable kind.

Dr. Pentecost is now at Coatbridge, where he will continue for a month. Let all your readers pray that a mighty outpouring of the Holy Spirit may be experienced in connection with the mission there also.

WIMBORNE Y.M.C.A.—A Conference of the southern district was held at Wimborne on October 24, under the presidency of Captain Dawson, of Bournemouth. Mr. E. J. Kennedy, of Exeter Hall, introduced the subject for discussion at the afternoon meeting—"The Y.M.C.A.: What it is; and What it is not?" In the evening a public meeting was held at the Victoria Hall, when Captain Dawson and Mr. E. J. Kennedy addressed a large and appreciative audience.

LIFE—or DEATH?

"Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God."—1 John v. 1.

Joyfully, joyfully, clash the bells!
For another soul is born;
To a black and sinful human heart
This is the Christmas morn.
Shout ye Christians, shout!
God hath been believed;
Spread it round about,
Christ hath been received.
Joyfully, joyfully clash the bells!

"Dead in trespasses and sins."—Eph. ii. 1.

Mournfully, mournfully, toll the knell!
For many a soul lies dead;
Souls for the quickening of whom
Christ's precious blood was shed.
Weep ye Christians, weep!
All by sloth accused,
Rouse ye from your sleep,
Christ hath been refused.
Mournfully, mournfully toll the knell!

Y.M.C.A., NEW YORK STATE.

Your readers will be glad to learn of the growing prosperity and blessing upon this special form of work in our State. The autumn season brings with it a large increase in the agencies used, and hundreds of new members are brought under the influence of our associations. The outing clubs, and various athletic sports during the summer months by our organisation, have provided recreation for the young men under healthful and even religious influences. This has the effect of uniting the Christian young men who have athletic tastes, and thus gives us in the early autumn a large number ready to engage in the active indoor work of the Association.

During the present month we have dedicated two new buildings for our use. One at Mount Vernon, costing about 40,000 dollars; and one at Addison, costing about 10,000 dollars. This last building is the gift of one gentleman, and the town has only a population of 2200. We are greatly encouraged with the special religious work of our societies. The Bible training classes and the Gospel meetings for young men are more numerous and more largely attended than ever. Over 300 young men have given evidence of surrender to the claims of the Saviour in our meetings during the past three months.

A new feature of our work is the organisation of Special Committees to foster and encourage work among young men in heathen lands. On the same day, October 2, Mr. John T. Swift, and Mr. David McConaughy, Jun., started for these fields of work, the former for Japan, the latter for India. We are especially anxious that the readers of The Christian should remember these workers in special prayer. The need of trained labourers in our fields is felt more and more each year. We have now 170 general secretaries in this State, and need seven more at once. Our School at Springfield is aiding us to secure some men; but we need constant prayer to the Lord of the harvest, to send labourers into his harvest. Thousands of our young men are outside the Church, and the temptations on every hand are successful in leading multitudes astray. How great is the demand for earnest, continued, and consecrated effort in this field of Christian work.

George A. Hall.

M. H. CHATELAIN, whose name is honourably associated with mission work on the West Coast of Africa, has sailed from New York for Loanda, Angola, in connection with the United States Solar Eclipse Expedition. He hopes on this trip to add to his linguistic and general knowledge. He expects to return in February or March next.

The West London Mission.

the two years of its existence, the results of s Forward Movement have not only vindi-ed the prescience of its promoters, but have, should think, exceeded the expectations of most sanguine supporters. At first there re heard the low mutterings of suspicion and pticism from those who are so tied down by and wont that they fancy that no move-nt can be honoured of God if it breaks up d departs from the old ruts. There are no sentient voices now. It is everywhere cognised that two years ago the hour for gressive action in West London had struck, d that with the hour came the man, or rather e men.

Last Friday was the second anniversary, and e voices of jubilation and of conscious tory were predominant. The day's pro-edings took the accustomed threefold shape a sermon at noon by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse Princes Hall, an afternoon gathering in ho, and an evening mass meeting in St. mes's Hall. This spacious building was not all equal to the occasion in the evening, and "overflow" was held in Princes Hall, pre-ed over and addressed by Mr. Pearse.

His sermon at noon was characteristic, and oked universal admiration. He took for his t the story of the widow who put into the mple treasury the two mites that made up r worldly fortune. The kaleidoscopic con-egation that listened to our Lord on that emorable day: Pharisees, Scribes, Sadducees gnostics of their time), and the religious ople, proud of the stately Temple and its appings—all were artistically sketched on the nvas, serving as a background for the most thetic picture of all, the lone widow whose lf-abnegating deed has made her immortal. r. Pearse sought to describe the way in which is woman's act moved the spirit of the Master, d skilfully applied the story to the condi-ons of modern society. He contended that ch self-sacrificing generosity on the part of e followers of Jesus will alone furnish a medy for healing the open sores of the orld. In a striking passage the preacher set rth what he described as seven great London vils—pride, drunkenness, lust, gambling, verty, ignorance, and indiscriminate charity. me reader may be startled at reading the st item in this inventory; but Mr. Pearse roceeded to explain that the experience of e Sisters of the People in their house-to-house sitation made it clear that the encourage-ent of female street mendicants and min-rels had a most demoralising effect on the ales of the household. Mr. Pearse said he d not at all desire to stop the stream of hristian charity, but it ought to run in safe nd wise channels; let them send their gifts Mr. Price Hughes, and they would be roperly applied.

Cleveland Hall, Soho, the latest acquisition f the Mission, was the scene of a crowded nd deeply interesting gathering in the after-oon, when Mr. Frederick Howard, of Bed-ord, presided. After a short statement by Ir. Price Hughes, Mrs. Hughes and two of the isters of the People told most touching narra-ives of the way in which they are able in heir visitation work to succour the poor in heir deep distress. As Mr. Bunting remarked t the evening meeting, these Christian ladies re truly solving in a degree the problem of ow to deal with London poverty and misery. everal converted victims of the drink, and thers also, testified to the personal blessing hat the Soho branch of the work had been them. One of the testifiers had been socialistic orator of the most iconoclastic ype. In his address, he said that, before is conversion, his motto was, "Down with everything that is up;" now it was the reverse, "Up with everything that is down." Dr. Rigg spoke some very friendly words, and the occasion was altogether one of much joy and rejoicing.

THE EVENING MEETING.

Anyone who expects to get a convenient seat at a Methodist evening meeting in St. James's Hall must be there betimes. Mr. Heath Mills, with his instrumental band, will see to it, however, that the waiting time is not wasted; the auditor can have a feast of music before the flow of speech begins. Punctually at seven o'clock on Friday evening, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes ascended the platform with the Lady Mayoress on his arm, the Lord Mayor bringing up the rear—the signal, of course, for great applause, of which there was plenty during the evening. Mr. Whitehead has been one of the most popular and indefatigable of Chief Magistrates within his special domain, and this incursion into the West will add yet further lustre to a bright and memorable year of office. His speech on this occasion quite deserved to have applied to it by Mr. Hughes, later in the evening, the adjectives of "brilliant and remarkable."

But first we had a financial statement from Mr. Percy Bunting, who certainly showed that quality so invaluable in a Chancellor of the Exchequer, of making statistics attractive. He told the audience that, during the last financial year, £2500 had been received in collections at the regular meetings, and £4500 in subscriptions and donations—£7000 in all. Passing to the other side of the ledger, he said he thought it a miserable thing for a religious mission like this to have to pay £1600 a year in rent; he threw out the suggestion that some Christian capitalists might lay up treasure in heaven by enabling the Mission to escape the rent tax, and have its own freehold buildings. The "Sisters of the People" were a fruitful source of expenditure, having cost £800; but it was money very well spent, for the work done by these ladies among the poor of Soho could not be appraised in hard cash. It appeared that the male officials of the Mission were a good deal more expensive than the sisters; but, of course, their responsibilities are much greater. The musical machinery of the Mission had cost £500, and Mr. Bunting regarded that as one of the most necessary and successful branches of the work. The nett deficit for the year was £1600 (a good deal less than last year); to that they would add £400 for contingencies. If the friends of the good cause would now raise the small sum of £2000, the work would be set afloat again, and the donors would never repent it.

We must refer our readers to The Methodist Times for a full report of the Lord Mayor's speech. He began with a promise of £50 to the Mission, and on such a good foundation built up a powerful plea for the "Forward Movement." Some years ago he had been driven to the conclusion that the Methodist body were losing their primitive zeal and aggressiveness, and were becoming a little sleepy. He could recollect something of the grand spiritual revivals of his young days, that had done so much to make Methodism a great power in the nation, and he was therefore rejoiced to know that the old spirit of aggressiveness was breaking out. His Lordship, in the course of his address, touched on many topics — the agitation for music-hall purification, with which he heartily sympathised; the recent dockers' strike, in the settlement of which he was sorry not to have had the co-operation of leading Nonconformists; the need of the rich equally with the poor to be evangelized; the unsectarian character of this West-end crusade; the prominence given to temperance work, &c. He waxed pathetic on the sorrows of poor children who have to go to school and cram their little brains with next to nothing in their stomachs, and he ventured to suggest that the West London Mission ought to have a finger in that pie also. A reference to the great advantage of having so many benevolent Christian women as helpers, led up to the mention of the Lady Mayoress as sharing in the great satisfaction with which he had come to the meeting, and he closed a capital speech by wishing that the work might continue to be crowned with such success as would increase the happiness of the people both temporal and eternal.

Dr. E. E. Jenkins, in very courtly and almost too complimentary phrase, praised the Lord Mayor for all the good deeds he had done, and for the distinction he had conferred on the Mission and the meeting by his presence and advocacy. At the same time he gave utterance to some excellent sentiments about the duty of wealth, social position and power, to do all they could in helping on good causes. Speaking of the scope of that Mission, he said it left alone nothing that ought to be turned upside down, and permitted nothing to live that ought to die. It was the broadest of Broad Churches, inasmuch as it sought to reach and meet every kind of social misery. That was the only kind of Broad Churchism he believed in. Then the venerable Doctor launched out into a hearty eulogy of the work, and expressed genuine congratulation at the progress it had made during the past year.

Rev. J. E. Clapham felt bound to confess that this Forward Movement in London and elsewhere was having a very beneficial effect in kindling Wesleyan aggressiveness up and down the country. All the Christian Churches are discovering that their methods in the past have been insufficient to grapple with modern social conditions, and they are learning to adapt themselves to these conditions so as to get hold of the masses of the people. God is making great and glorious opportunities for his servants, and these must be taken advantage of. There are, always have been, and probably will be, those who object and oppose. We cannot waste time in argument with such people; it is our part to go on, and even the laggards will follow rather than be left hopelessly in the rear.

A "War Note," from Mr. Josiah Nix, took the form of a triumphant ascription of praise to God for all the wonders He had wrought in enabling them to get the goodwill of the poor in Soho, and to relieve to some extent their bodily and spiritual distresses. Mr. Nix said he was only sorry they had no new project to put before their friends this year. Whereupon, Mr. Price Hughes reminded him of the coming fourteen days' mission at Princes Hall, Piccadilly, and Mr. Nix expressed the belief that this special effort would be a time of Pentecostal blessing among the wealthy residents of the neighbourhood. Mr. Nix's speech well sustained his reputation as a dauntless Christian warrior; may his bow long abide in strength.

Rev. H. P. Hughes, referring to a remark by the Chairman, said it was, in truth, the desire of the workers of the Mission to carry it on upon strictly unsectarian lines, though it was under the fostering care and sanction of the Wesleyan Conference. The work in Soho, he said, was of a very varied kind, and embraced plenty of temperance endeavour, social entertainment, and medical help; the care of the children, the aged poor, the friendless girls, and other classes. At Cleveland Hall a most encouraging saving work goes on through varied channels. A Christian centre for London cabmen is being established there, and a most auspicious beginning has been made. The Sunday-school, though not three months old, has now 350 children in attendance. At Princes Hall and at St. James's Hall the work proceeds apace; what is needed at the latter place is more room for the crowds who come week by week. The "Pavilion" music-hall close by cost £50,000; why should not the wealthy Christian men of London give £50,000 to erect suitable buildings in the West-end that would be wholly used for the highest benefit of the people? Mr. Hughes declared that the Peace Movement must receive greater attention; if the Churches of Christ cannot prevent national wars, they are nothing less than an organised hypocrisy. After some sympathetic references to the dockers' strike, and the effort being made to elevate the working women of London, Mr. Hughes passed on to the question of the music-halls, and vindicated his recent action. He held that this Mission was now a "garrison in the centre of the foe," and had rendered valuable service in promoting the cause of public morals. He was thankful to know that the Forward Movement in London is proving infectious in so many places. Then came an announcement that they had set their hearts on doing real rescue work in that neighbourhood, not only among fallen women, but fallen men. The state of the streets in the early hours of the morning was simply disgraceful, and it must be altered. The coming mission at Princes Hall would cost a good deal of money, and he thought that many of the rich people ought to spare some crumbs from their loaded tables for this blessed work. The workers of the Mission were ready, in the sight of God, not only to live, but to die for the salvation of West London; surely the least the Christian public could do was to furnish them with the needful sinews of war.

Then the drum financial was vigorously beaten, as Mr. Hughes only knows, by long and persevering practice, how to beat it. Promises of more than £1000 were read out to the meeting. It will not be creditable to wealthy London if it does not keep the coffers of this truly splendid work full to the brim. We may add, in the words of the Lord Mayor, that the new report of the Mission is in the best sense a "precious record"; copies may be obtained from Mr. Jackson, Lincoln House, Greek-street, Soho.

GIRLS' GUILD OF GOOD LIFE.

It is four years since the Girls' Guild of Good Life was started at that well-known centre of earnest and patient effort among London poor, Hoxton Hall, N. Formed for the cultivation of such habits and graces as tend to the building up of a pure and happy home life, the Guild has made encouraging progress, and influenced in a wholesome direction many girls who would otherwise have spent their evenings in low music-halls, dancing-saloons, and clubs. From a small beginning the membership has increased, until now there are more than nine hundred names on the books. Meetings and classes are held every day in the week, the most popular of all being the parlour meeting on Tuesday evening, at which there is an average attendance of nearly three hundred girls.

Temperance work is kept well to the front, and efforts are made to teach sewing and cookery. Mrs. J. T. Rae, the honorary president, has some devoted helpers, but she sadly wants more, especially ladies, to superintend games, needlework, &c., at the Tuesday night meetings. In a communication to us she says: "The work is not difficult to accomplish, and none need fear to attempt it. It is, however, very important, as it helps to bring the girls under cheering influences, and tends in many ways to lighten their labours." Ladies willing to assist can have particulars by writing to Mrs. Rae, at 7, Westrop Villas, Canonbury-street, London, N.

HOUSE OF REST, CRIEFF, N.B.—There is a pretty and comfortable little "House of Rest" nestling among the hills at Crieff, for clergy, Christian workers, and others, conducted by a lady who for many years laboured as a deaconess at Mildmay. It commands an unintercepted view of the mountains, and the air is bracing and invigorating, but at the same time equally suitable for summer or winter residence. Particulars may be obtained from the Lady Superintendent, Sweet Briar Villa, Crieff, N.B.

THE WORK AT COSTERS' HALL.

Mr. W. J. Orsman, Founder and Hon. Superintendent of the Golden Lane and Hoxton Costermongers' Christian Mission, has issued his twenty-seventh report. When the work was commenced in 1861, Mr. Orsman had been five years in the Queen's service, and, as he adds, "four years in the service of the King of kings." He was one of the early converts under Mr. C. H. Spurgeon's ministry, and still remains associated with the church at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. Though still in the prime of life, he has now, at a considerable sacrifice of income, retired from his position in the General Post Office; and purposes in future to devote the whole of his time to mission service, and to the work of the London County Council, of which he has recently been elected a member.

Contrasting the old times with the present, Mr. Orsman remarks: "Twenty-eight years ago the term 'Mission' was sparingly used; in fact, excepting the home and foreign missionary societies, there were few 'Missions' in existence. Undoubtedly in the Ragged Schools of that period considerable evangelistic effort was carried on in the slums, but it was desultory in its character, and did not reach the concrete form of a large evangelistic centre, with its voluntary evangelist and pastor, and the converts bound together in a Mission Church by the holy ties of fellowship and discipline."

Mr. Orsman wishes that a little help like that which is freely accorded to the East-end could be accorded to the equally poor area of Hoxton. Still, his own voluntary services, and the services of 126 other helpers, reduce considerably the expenses of this Mission, while at the same time the moral effect in the district is an immense power for good. It is cheering to find that the people who in many cases thus engage in the work are converts of the Mission, and "all hard-working men and women in the lower ranks of life." The spiritual work was never more prosperous, and on Sundays Mr. C. Hart, the theatre preacher, and Mr. Orsman himself, commonly preach at Costers' Hall, where there are also Bible-readings on week evenings, while meetings for prayer, praise, and Bible study are held several times a week. The Christian Workers' Association has 93 members, some of whom preach in the open air, others being tract distributors and visitors of the sick and needy. The Sunday-school has nearly 800 scholars. The Band of Hope and Mercy also has hundreds of members, and several temperance societies make Costers' Hall their headquarters. The Donkey and Pony Show, which has now become annual, has exercised a striking effect in improving the condition of the street-traders' animals throughout London. The costers' thrift and benefit societies also confer great advantage on their members. The cottage for convalescent women at Shacklewell is much appreciated; and an effort is being made to establish a Seaside Home. In the year 154 children enjoyed a fortnight's holiday in the country.

The winter work includes some help to those "who by reason of poverty, crowd the insanitary hovels round the Mission Hall at Hoxton." It is added: "The last winter was long and trying even to the well-to-do, and among the poor we had never previously experienced such a demand for our nourishing meals. Our experience is that free cocoa breakfasts for the children, and cheap Irish stew for the general mid-day meal, go a long way towards helping the poor, and we cordially invite our friends to aid us in this labour of love." About 160 famishing Board School children were breakfasted morning by morning, the tickets being given away by masters of neighbouring schools. Soup is also made at a penny a quart with bread, and this is eagerly purchased in severe weather.

The work thus represents a thoroughly genuine all-round Christian mission, the influence of which in one way or another extends far and wide throughout London.

YOUNG WOMEN & TEMPERANCE.

The second total abstinence conference for Y.W.C.A. secretaries and workers among young women was held on Wednesday afternoon last week in Morley Hall, Regent-street, W. Several questions were discussed in connection with the advancement of temperance principles among the members of Young Women's Christian Associations. In the evening a largely attended meeting was held in Exeter Hall, presided over by Lord Kinnaird.

Mrs. Temple, wife of the Bishop of London, in a brief address, dwelt upon total abstinence as the safest line of walk, and the most beneficent by way of example to those who have fallen victims to drinking habits. She urged young women to make the teetotal resolve and stick to it; when taunted with maintaining a position indicating weakness, they can say: "We have courage enough to maintain our own opinions." Thus they will show strength and not weakness, and also that, when they choose to use it, women have plenty of determination. Miss Coles, total abstinence secretary, expressed a hope that the secretaries of all branches of the Y.W.C.A. will, without delay, take up and persistently work in the cause of temperance. Sir Philip Cunliffe-Owen delivered a capital address in vindication of total abstinence. There is, he said, fifty per cent. more drinking in England than in America. Why? Because in America nearly every woman is a total abstainer.

Canon Wilberforce followed with a stirring address. Having enlarged upon the great influence of woman, illustrating his remarks by reference to the great temperance work done in America by Miss Frances Willard, he urged his hearers, first to be right in their attitude to God, and then to do real work for eternity. Unless our temperance work starts from a realisation of sin forgiven, it will not be worth much. He would like to see the nation moved against the enemy of the Anglo-Saxon race, but the body-guard of the movement must be made up of hearts touched with the blood of Christ. The publican is defying all our educational and religious efforts in every direction, and is the greatest modern enemy of the kingdom of heaven. He knows how to break all the ten commandments at once, and everyone who fights against his trade fights on behalf of the people. If intemperance is a great evil, then to produce intemperance is a crime. The nation must be made to know this, and the power of the temperance movement lies in patiently teaching public opinion. Dwelling upon Christian duty in relation to the drink evil, the speaker said: To critics I simply say, alcohol may be tenfold the good gift of God, but it is ruining my brethren in every direction, and I will separate myself from it, root and branch. Saved by the cross, will you not carry any cross? To be saved by a religion based on sacrifice, and to be unwilling to make any sacrifice, is an anachronism, a paradox, and a sham. Don't tell me moderation is the highest line; but, if, indeed, you think it is, just be humble, and come down to our lower line! But if moderation is the highest line, then I say it is Calvary upside down. God did not say, "Sons of men, carry sinlessness up to heaven," but He heard our cry, and brought sinlessness down to us in the incarnate Son. It was to everyone of us, and not only to a class of his servants, that Christ spoke when He said, "As my Father sent Me into the world, even so send I you."

In conclusion, the speaker referred to the encouraging spread of a healthy sentiment on the temperance question, and called upon those present to sign the pledge. A goodly number of people responded to this. Canon Barker also spoke briefly.

GHWAY and HEDGEROW MISSION.

IE good work which Captain Bruce Moor-use and his devoted wife have for some years en carrying on among some of the most glected classes of the community is not so dely known as it ought to be. On Thursday ening last, at a meeting at the Conference all, Mildmay Park, these workers delivered ldresses descriptive of "Life in a Gipsy Van, d Mission Work for Christ in the New brest." Mr. J. E. MATHIESON, who presided, oke kindly of the Highway and Hedgerow ission, the operations of which are certainly r-reaching beyond anything that those who ve not followed them would calculate.

Mrs. MOORHOUSE enlarged upon the import-nce of evangelisation in the villages, seeing at the population of the towns is constantly eing increased by arrivals from the country. he spoke of nearly ten years' labour, in which ie way has been wonderfully opened to them carrying the Gospel to outlying places. Only y living in a gipsy van have they been able to each the constantly moving people, upon whose nlightenment they had set their hearts. In ne villages on the borders of the New Forest nany kind friends had been met with, and real lessing has followed the efforts put forth, espe-ially the meetings held in the movable hall, hich accompanies the van, and is used for ublic meetings. Details were given of work in everal southern and western counties, also in uernsey and Northern France. In many irections there is true hunger for the Word of ife.

Captain MOORHOUSE spoke of the general ffairs of the Mission. There are now two nissionaries and their wives at work, one in he New Forest, and the other at South Wick, Sussex. At the latter place a Sailors' Institute as been established, with a spacious room for neetings. The labour has been owned of God. The New Forest material is very rough. Yet leanliness and tidiness have been increased, and some of the poor people have been brought o know the Lord. Life is very slow in that egion, and, what with dense ignorance and gross superstition, the people are in pagan dark-ess. The efforts put forth have on all hands been owned of God, and therefore the speaker was able to encourage, as he strongly urged, Christian men and women everywhere to do as he had endeavoured to do in the southern counties, in the interest of the neglected and for the glory of God. At a comparatively small expenditure every county might have its high-way and hedgerow missionary. The story was a simple one, listened to with deep interest.

SYDNEY, N.S.W.—From Sydney papers just to hand we find that the dwellers in that famed Australian city are enjoying visits from Mr. Henry Varley, Miss Von Finkelstein, and the Fisk Jubilee Singers.

LADY MISSIONARIES FOR INDIA.—A valedictory meeting was held in Edinburgh on Thursday, the 24th, in connection with the departure for India of three lady missionaries of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission. Principal Sir Wm. Muir occupied the chair. Great interest was felt in the presence of Miss Grace Mackinnon, who is the first medical missionary for the city of Patna, and who is sent out by the Scotch committee of the society. Miss Gault, who returns to Benares, her former sphere of labour, was also present. The third lady, Miss Aitken, who returns to Lahore, was unavoidably absent. Rev. H. Duncan, of Crichton, addressed the missionaries, while Messrs. Wellesley, C. Bailey, and Dr. Lowe, of the Edinburgh Medical Mission, spoke of the field to which they were called, and of the importance and difficulties of medical mission work. A special appeal was made on behalf of Patna, where two lady missionaries have for some time been stationed alone, and, in spite of much opposition, have "held the fort," with manifest tokens of the Master's presence.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CONGRESS

THIS gathering at Birmingham has been a gratifying success. The Congress was inaugurated on Sunday, October 20, by a powerful appeal to the Christian conscience from the pulpits and platforms of nearly sixty churches and halls in and around the Midland city. Archdeacon Farrar preached in St. George's Church, Edgbaston, to an immense congregation, from Jer. v. 9: "Shall I not visit for these things? saith the Lord; and shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?" In language which created a deep impression, he enforced the responsibility of Christian men and women, pointedly inquiring, Of what avail will a threadbare common-place be, when we have to answer before the throne of the Most High?

Dr. Macfadyen preached at Edgbaston Congregational Church, his text being 1 Cor. x. 23, 24 (R.V.): "All things are lawful; but all things are not expedient. All things are lawful; but all things edify not. Let no man seek his own, but each his neighbour's good." Dealing with the nature of Christian liberty and its limitations, he drew a clear line between freedom to do evil and the duty of doing good, and advanced the little-perceived truth that total abstinence was, in the days of the Apostles, an already accepted part of Christian practice in relation to personal, commercial, and social life. In the afternoon, a meeting was held in the Town Hall, attended by working men, many of them being members of adult schools. Alderman White presided, and the proceedings were of an encouraging character.

An interesting feature of the inaugural proceedings was the opening of the Temperance Institute, on Monday morning, by a breakfast, presided over by Mr. Richard Cadbury, the munificent promoter of the undertaking. In the evening of the same day, the opening address of the Congress was delivered by the Bishop of London. It was an exhaustive argument for the position maintained by temperance reformers. On Tuesday, Dr. Richardson dealt with the scientific aspect of the cause. In some words of congratulation to medical abstainers, he said that he was president of a society consisting of 400 medical men actively engaged in practice, and 100 students earnest in their studies, everyone of whom are total abstainers. The march of sympathy with temperance in scientific circles has, in recent years, been very rapid, and some of the most cheering signs of the times were dwelt upon at length. Dr. Norman Kerr contributed a prayer on "The study of inebriety, and its relation to the temperance movement." At a conference in the afternoon, attention was directed to the need of temperance work among women.

On Wednesday morning a national system of temperance education formed the subject of discussion. The need for teaching animal physiology in elementary schools was very properly emphasised. In the evening a large meeting was addressed by the Archbishop of York. On Thursday, Mr. George White, Sheriff of Norwich, dealt with the drink traffic in its relation to work and wages; and Mr. Stephen Bourne read a paper showing that the manufacture of alcoholic drinks is wasteful and destructive.

The closing meetings of the Congress were held on Friday, when Dr. Lees advocated the principle of Prohibition. A paper on "A Sober Sunday through Closing the Public-houses on that day" was read by Mr. Joseph Malins. Much that was helpful and stimulating was brought forward in the discussion of these burning topics. It was resolved to memorialise the Prime Minister on the necessity of bringing forward in Parliament a Bill for the prohibition of the drink traffic on the African coast.

PRAYER FOR ROMISH LANDS.

DEAR SIR,—Allow me to suggest that on Sunday, November 3, special prayer should be offered in Protestant Churches on behalf of Romish lands. On the previous day Roman Catholics will resort to their cemeteries to pray for their departed friends, and on November 3, as it happens to be the first Sunday of the month, French Protestants will celebrate the Fête de la Réformation by thanking God for their departed heroes now in glory, and by praying that the work they began may go forward with ever-increasing success.

In this place of pilgrimage one sees the ripe fruit of Romanism. The dominant worship, authorised by the Bishop, is that offered to the Virgin, whose statue meets you at every turn. The chief business consists in the sale of scapularies and rosaries. In this region Rome's power is tremendous, as our evangelistic brethren know too well. Let the cry go up from all true churches, that God would hasten the downfall of this gigantic system of superstition, and give increased faith and courage to all who are seeking to promote his Gospel and his kingdom.—I am, &c.,

R. S. ASHTON, Sec. Evan. Continental Soc.

MAJOR WHITTLE IN GLASGOW.

LAST week was spent by the evangelist in Bethany Hall, that well-known centre of evangelistic work in the densely-crowded East of Glasgow. At the opening meeting, the Major recalled his former work among them nine years ago, and referred with deep feeling to the co-operation of his beloved friends, Mr. and Mrs. MacGranahan, and to the serious and long-continued illness of Mr. MacGranahan, which, but a short time ago, threatened to end fatally. He spoke of the great blessing that had on their former visit accompanied the preaching and singing of the Gospel, and paid an earnest tribute to the memory of their superintendent at that time, the late Mr. Hislop. Miss Whittle now occupies Mr. MacGranahan's place at the organ. Her sweet young voice is also much appreciated in the singing of solos.

During the week the attendance and interest gradually increased and intensified, till Thursday, when it culminated in a large audience, composed in great part of men and women, who had become social wrecks through strong drink. The sympathy of the Saviour with such lost ones was lovingly dwelt on, and his power and willingness to save was placed before them. When, at the end, the preacher cleared out the front seats, and invited the weary and heavy-laden, to come forward and yield to the pleading Savionr, thirty-eight men and women at once responded.

Dr. Moxey has been helping by reading the Scripture-lessons and some of the hymns, and on Wednesday night he gave the address; many remaining to be conversed with after having risen for prayer, on the Major's invitation. The meetings conclude this week, and prayer is asked for further and deeper blessing.

On Sabbath mornings, the Major has addressed large gatherings of Christian workers in the Christian Institute; and he has been giving a most instructive series of Bible-readings at the daily Noon Prayer Meeting, on the subject of, "Looking unto Jesus." The Christians have been greatly refreshed and quickened.

PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR.—A correspondent writes to suggest that prayer should be made for this Prince, now on his way to India—that, in addition to the enjoyment his tour in that land may give, his attention may be given to the wants of the country, so that in after years there may be some enduring benefit towards the evangelisation of our mighty Eastern possessions.

A Talk about Colportage.

MR. H. D. BROWN, Secretary of the Christian Colportage Association, speaking on this subject at the recent Salisbury Conference said :—

The work of colportage is simply a means of combining the living voice with the printing press, and using them in the name of God for the advancement of his cause and kingdom upon the earth. The Christian Colportage Association has a Bible-carriage at work, and this means of disseminating Bibles and Gospel literature is most valuable; but the special feature of colportage is that it goes to the people, hunts them up, so to speak, in their own homes, and deals with them personally.

The need for this is all the greater, because of what is being done by the enemy in connection with popular literature. Long ago, John Newton spoke of a "black inspiration," in the writing of many of the books of his day, and in these days there is, undoubtedly, a still blacker Satanic inspiration in very much of the literature which is generally read. I could give a great deal of information upon this point, but have only time to make a few general statements; but I am quite prepared to show, on the testimony of booksellers themselves, that by far the greater proportion of the literature that is sold to-day is of a more or less demoralising character.

DESTRUCTIVE TO BOYS AND GIRLS.

There is first the boy-literature, in which tales of burglars, robbers, and pirates, are set forth in glowing colours, or, in which boys and young lads are the heroes, who cut, and hew, and slay, in a most wonderful manner, defying authority of every kind—the authority of parents, masters, and magistrates. Everyone knows how imitative boys are, and if they read or hear of anything that has a spice of adventure in it, they are eager to do the same.

Multitudes of boys are continually being led into crime through this, many of them the sons of respectable parents, and even some who have been brought up in Christian homes. Indeed, the Rev. Mr. Lloyd Jones, who was formerly Chaplain at Newgate Prison, told us that from his conversations with the boy prisoners, he found there was scarcely one who did not own that he had been led into crime through the tales which he had read.

Then there is the vast number of novels, novelettes, and penny serials, full of stories of a more or less sensuous character, which are read by girls and young women, not only of the lower classes, but of every class; for this evil reaches right up to the tip-top and down to the very dregs of society, and the effects are often more lamentable even than that upon the boys. Again, there is which is not left to the ordinary law of supply and demand, but is being disseminated with much effort and enterprise. Men are paid to go round from house to house, both in town and country, handing in infidel tracts of the most infamous character, and even taking pains to put into the hands of little children. Not long ago a gentleman sent £100 to the infidel club (or secular society, as they call it) in a midland town to be spent in the circulation of infidel literature among the working men.

It is important that the Lord's people should know of these things, for not only is grievous harm being done outside by this evil, but our own homes are being invaded, and many of us know how difficult it is to keep it out.

But the printing press can be made just as powerful for good as for evil; the difficulty is in getting people to buy and read the good. A Hindoo once remarked that if you want to sell "arrak" (native strong drink), you have but to open a shop and your customers will come for it; but if you want to sell milk you must carry it round. It is the same in this country, and if we want to sell books that will do good to the souls of men, we must carry them round, too. Some time ago we made the following

EXPERIMENT :—

Taking a list of fifteen excellent books, such as "Grace and Truth," "God's Way of Peace," "Robert Annan," &c., we sent to over thirty large bookshops in the West-end of London, to see how many we could purchase, and out of all these shops we only got one copy of a book on this list. The shopkeepers offered to order them for us, but did not keep them in stock; they said there was no demand. Now, of these fifteen books, our colporteurs have sold over 80,000, showing what can be done by taking them round.

This work is intensely aggressive. Someone said the other day that he "liked this Society, because its agents had the impudence to call at everybody's door." It is true that "the Englishman's house is his castle," but his front door knocker belongs to the public; anyone who has any business there has a right to knock, so our men go round knocking at the doors of rich and poor, and they meet of course with all sorts of people. We have colporteurs working in the poorest parts of the East-end of London, and in the wealthiest parts of the West-end, where they find perhaps as much heathenism existing as in the East. We have men visiting also among country villages, little hamlets, and lonely roadside cottages.

These men have never been to college, they are simple, uneducated fellows who love the Lord Jesus Christ, and gladly seize every opportunity they can to speak of his salvation, so that, by the living voice and the printed page, they carry the Gospel message from house to house.

INCIDENTS.

They need to have tact and readiness as well as zeal. A colporteur, for instance, wanting to visit a large country house, was stopped at the gate by the lodge-keeper, who told him they were "all racing people there." "I am a racing man, too," said the colporteur, "and have got books about racing," so he passed on, and got up to the house, where he saw the cook, and told her he had a "racing book" he wanted to show her, producing a Bible. He said it would tell her about "running with patience the race that is set before us." The cook was much astonished at a man coming there with Bibles, and was not inclined to purchase; but she called some of the other servants, and before the colporteur left, he had sold three or four Bibles to them, and a number of books full of Gospel teaching.

Another colporteur, having called at a house several times, but gained no admission, was at last met by the master, who turned out to be an atheist, and he, on learning his business, swore at him, and ordered him never to come near his house again. This was an order the colporteur could not obey, for there were immortal souls in that house for whom Jesus died, and on the very next occasion he saw one of the servants, and persuaded her to purchase an excellent book. The results have been most blessed; the book has been the means of leading this young woman to the Saviour. She again, has been the means of the conversion of her two fellow-servants, and the three are now, they tell the colporteur, uniting in prayer daily for the conversion of their master and mistress. Such instances of blessing are continually occurring, for which we thank our God.

Fifteen years ago we began with one colporteur, now we have 106 labouring in many parts of England; but our ambition is to have the whole country covered with a net-work of colporteurs, so that every house, rich and poor, high and low, may be visited.

Half a million of Bibles and Testaments, and five and a half millions of books and magazines sold, besides six millions of tracts distributed, is something to be thankful for.

God has made the work very successful in counteracting the evil I have already spoken of; but still more has He gladdened our hearts by giving abundant evidence of spiritual blessing, for the one thing we aim at is making known the salvation of our God and winning souls to Christ.

Personalia.

Rev. Jacob Freshman has recently been addressing meetings at Edinburgh and Liverpool, from which latter place he and Mrs. Freshman embark this week for their home in America, which is at St. Mark's-place, New York.

Pastor Frank White writes from Switzerland on October 25 :—I am fully hoping, by the grace of God, to resume my pastoral labours, much strengthened, on Sunday, November 3, and to preach in the Talbot Tabernacle morning and evening of that day.

Mr. Graham Wilmot-Brooke has arrived in London from West Africa. He will speak at a meeting to be held in Exeter Hall this (Friday) evening, at the anniversary of the "Gleaner's Union for Prayer and Work," in connection with the Church Missionary Society.

Rev. Dr. Fulton continues to wage war against the Papacy on the American Continent. After great meetings in Boston, extending over three weeks, and a week's vigorous protest in Washington, D.C., he went lately to Toronto, where he exposed the dogmas and tactics of Rome to large and highly appreciative audiences.

Mr. Joseph Rabinowitz, the remarkable Christian Rabbi of Kischeneff, Bessarabia, passed through London last week on his way to Scotland. His faith, energy, and courage are unabated, and he is only anxious to extend among his kinsmen the work to which he has been so singularly called. Early this month, it is hoped, on his return south, he may be enabled to address one or two meetings in the Metropolis.

Mrs. Margaret Bright Lucas.—The Echo, in its series of sketches of "Representative Women," has given a worthy place to Mrs. Margaret Bright Lucas, sister of the late John Bright, and foundress of the British Women's Temperance Association. Mrs. Lucas has been a foremost worker in various philanthropic enterprises over a long period of years. Though nearly seventy years of age, she is still full of earnestness and zeal, and is constantly to be found presiding at "British Women's" meetings.

Miss Janet Hunter, M.D., of Ayr, sailed for India last week in the s.s. Goorkha, with several other ladies, to engage in medical missionary work at Madras, in connection with the Ladies' Society of the Free Church of Scotland for Female Education in India. Miss Hunter is a distinguished student of the London School of Medicine for Women, and has taken the double qualification from the Royal Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons, Edinburgh, and the degree of Doctor of Medicine at the University of Brussels. She has recently spent some months in further medical study in the hospitals of Vienna and Prague. During her residence in London Miss Hunter was a member of Regent-square Presbyterian Church.

MR. WILLIAM FORBES has been giving addresses in and near the Metropolis. He goes to the West of England in a few days.

CAPE GENERAL MISSION.—Mr. Spencer Walton's first quarterly letter has been issued, and copies may be had from the hon. sec. of the Mission, "Mayfield," Lancaster-road, Wimbledon. After briefly describing the voyage out, and the cordial reception which the band of workers experienced, Mr. Walton gives some account of evangelistic effort in various parts. His plans include work over a wide field, and his hopes for fresh helpers are large. There is great need for a lady worker of linguistic talents, in connection with the Sailors' Rest, Cape Town. Acknowledging obligations, Mr. Walton says: "Mrs. Osborn began the work at the Cape nine years ago. A few months later Mr. Howe joined her, and they have continued the work hitherto, almost entirely at their own charges. The work is still very precious to them, and nothing but the desire to see it furthered in the Colony has led them to hand it over to the Cape General Mission. They will continue to give the Mission their valuable assistance."

ISABELLA MACPHERSON:

The Story of a Devoted Life.

By her Brother, Rev. JOHN MACPHERSON, Dundee.

CHAPTER II.—DIVINE FOOTPRINTS.

ONE bright Sabbath evening the people of Cullen were assembled in the open air to hear an itinerant preacher. A steep grassy brae served for a gallery where the audience sat in rows. Behind, at a little distance, the Castle Hill, a picturesque eminence, was looking calmly down; not on scenes of bloody feud as in olden times, but on a people worshipping the Lord of Hosts beneath the canopy of the peaceful heavens. In front, a little way below, the waters of the North Sea, gleaming under the rays of the summer sun, were breaking in gentle waves upon the beach; in psalm-like tones murmuring the praises of the Most High, as if they said:—

> All people that on earth do dwell,
> Sing to the Lord with cheerful voice;
> Him serve with mirth, his praise forth tell,
> Come ye before Him and rejoice.

Even now I can recall the scene: the stalwart form of the preacher; his long arm stretched out; his gleaming eye; his stentorian voice ringing back in echoes from the steep side of the Castle Hill; the moaning of the sea, mingling with the psalm-singing; and the eager faces of the listening multitude glowing in the slanting rays of the sun now descending in the western sky. There seemed a deeper, tenderer hush than usual, as the preacher began his discourse. He had scarcely begun, when a young man, standing in a prominent position, drew all eyes upon himself. With a cane in his hand he began to mimic every gesture and motion of the preacher. And this he continued to do with only too great success; the service became a farce, the minister was covered with ridicule. Long and patiently did the preacher bear with the youthful scoffer; bravely did he hold on his way in the hope of overcoming by meek endurance; but all in vain. The profane mockery went from bad to worse, till further progress became impossible. At length, pausing, the preacher raised his hand, and, pointing to the impious offender, said, in tones of awful solemnity: "Young man, if you die in the ordinary course of nature, God has not sent me to preach the Gospel!" The terrible words sent a thrill through the audience; the fear of God seemed to fall on the congregation; and probably the only person not moved was the hardened mocker himself.

Next Lord's Day that young man was amusing himself by climbing a dangerously steep cliff at the seaside. Getting astride the ledge of the crag, he began, after his manner, to shout certain profane words to his companions below, when the rock on which he sat gave way, and he was precipitated to the bottom and killed. It was a loud sermon to the youth of Cullen when the fragments of the young man's body were borne home that Sabbath afternoon. For this incident, in all its details, there may not be a pigeon-hole in modern philosophy; but in those days men had scarcely begun to dream of an infinite gap between nature's laws and nature's God. Many believed they heard in it the voice of Him who governs the world. The tender conscience of the young received a Godward impulse; to some of them, indeed, the incident was an epoch, and became a memory to mould and inspire a better future. The preacher was John Murker, of Banff. Twenty years after this event, when I asked that venerable man of God how he had been led to utter the strange speech in question, he said he did not know; it was one of the things he had never been able to fathom. "The foolishness of God is wiser than men."

The preaching of Murker and the memorable incident on that Sabbath evening were only ripples on the surface of a tide then rapidly setting in, the waters of which laved the feet of Isabella while she was yet a child. The revival of 1839 was the first resounding breaker of that tide which reached a high-water mark in 1859. Those twenty years marked a new era in the preaching of the Gospel throughout Scotland. The long winter of spiritual death was now passing away; the sweet breath of a genial spring was working its beneficent miracles; dead churches were quickened; slumbering communities were awakened; everywhere glad voices were heard singing the "new song."

The family to which the subject of this memoir belonged came under the sweep of this gracious awakening. The parents were conscious of a distinct spiritual visitation, and their personal experience made itself apparent in their family life. A warmer light shone in the house; a ruddier glow fell from above, colouring and brightening every element of home. Salvation came to be regarded as a clear-cut, outstanding matter of immediate concern. It seemed as though the Saviour, heretofore only about the door, had entered the house, and was come to stay. The children well knew why their father at regular seasons went into a certain room and shut the door. They can yet recall the feeling of awe that stole over them when they thought of the solemn conference proceeding in the solitude and silence of that closet. Sometimes near the door stood a little watcher, waving her hand, and, in a child's whisper, saying, "Don't go there! God is in just now speaking to father."

This revival in the house took place not long after 1843, the memorable year of the disruption in the Scottish Kirk and the formation of the Free Church, to which our parents attached themselves. The first more striking result in the family was the conversion of Hannah, the eldest of the children, then in the bloom of girlhood. From her beauty and sweetness of disposition, naturally attractive, she became through grace the brightest sunbeam in the house. Her joyousness, her constant singing of psalms and spiritual songs, her kind-heartedness, the naturalness and sweetness of her piety—placed religion in a new light before the rest of the children. It was very well, they used to think, for older people to be religious and holy: but now here is religion in the merry days of youth; here is one of themselves converted; and, strange enough, there is no gloom—it is all sunshine. Hannah became the evangelist of the house, and laboured for the salvation of the rest. In particular, she was wont to spend whole nights in prayer for the conversion of her only brother, then a youthful student at the University in Aberdeen; and, in a marked degree, her youngest sister Isabella, though but a child, came under the spell of her love and piety.

Two incidents that occurred in Isabella's childhood served more than anything else to deepen her religious impressions. These were—first, the death of a maternal uncle, and, next, the death of her eldest sister. "Uncle Archie" had seen much of the world—had fought in Spain; had endured many hardships; and, after a life of adventure and vicissitude, had returned to his own country, a brave, gentle, upright man—a soldier, if not of fortune, at least of honour. He was on a visit to his friends in Cullen. A reader, an observer, a thinker, he was a man of few words; and only when his young relatives provoked him to lay aside his usual reserve, would he describe the lands he had visited, the scenes of battle through which he had passed, and the romantic changes of fortune in his chequered career. When here he was taken seriously ill, and lay down to die. What about his soul? Never a word. He loved to read the Word of God, and to hear it read, as it was continually read to him by his young nieces in turn; he was also pleased to be talked to on spiritual topics, and to have prayer offered at his bedside; but as to his own case, his lips were sealed. Day after day, night after night, passed; but the watchers by his bed could not draw from him or catch a single expression in reference to his soul's state. At length one day the grave pallid countenance, the deeply thoughtful eye, brightened; and, in tones of rapture, wholly in contrast to his undemonstrative habit, he exclaimed: "I have Christ by the hand! I have Christ by the hand!"

In this new joy he lived, in this strong assurance he died. His long unbroken silence in regard to his soul had been due to his profound thinking and his lack of assurance. At length, when by the teaching of the Holy Spirit he was enabled to grasp the marvellous significance and grace of the Saviour's words, "Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," and "Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out," he immediately passed out of darkness into light. In grasping the word of Jesus he felt sure he had Christ by the hand. In that gracious invitation he saw held out to him, a weary sinner, the hand of omnipotent love, the hand with the print of the nail in it. So calm and bright was the last stage of his life, that a rough man of the world, on visiting him, said, using a curious and homely metaphor, "He is being carried to heaven in a hand-basket." Yes: the basket was the Gospel of God's grace, and the hand that carried it was the Lord's.

This incident, and the last solemn scene of her uncle's life, made a deep impression on the tenderly susceptible nature of Isabella, at that time some five years of age. She did not then understand that Christ's word is his hand: she fully believed that the Lord Jesus and Uncle Archie literally shook hands, as any two friends would do. She thought it beautiful; and fancied that when Christ saved her He would shake hands with her in like manner. Uncle Archie parting with his friends around his bed, and bidding them a kind "good-bye," just as if he was going away again to Spain, and dying with a sweet smile, was to Isabella one of those outstanding memories that never fail to touch the imagination and mould the character.

Some four years after this Hannah was laid low in wasting sickness. For a whole year she pined away, all the time rejoicing in the Lord, and spending her weary days and nights in prayer and praise and preparation for her departure. Shortly before her death, her brother announced to her the fact of his conversion, and his resolution to devote himself to the service of Christ in the ministry of the Gospel. Great was her joy: she broke forth in thanksgiving and praise. "My prayers are answered," she exclaimed; "my work is done. I prayed that you would be converted and called into the ministry, and made instrumental in winning souls. The Lord has granted me my desire: I am satisfied; I have nothing to do now but to die!"

Her early death, her joyful end, her entrance into the gate of the city as if before our very eyes, added to the triumphs of her holy life. The family sorrow was an illuminated Gospel with a dark edging. Hannah's departure was at once an angel going and an angel coming. "Where the tree in the forest falls," someone has said, "there a fuller light shines in." Isabella had been the object of her sister's fondest love. During that long year of Hannah's illness she was every day, often all the day, beside her dying bed, whose growing lights and deepening shadows even a child could see. When Hannah's warm heart ceased to beat, Isabella's sorrow was touching to behold. The impression was too deep to be ever wholly effaced. The sweet memory was more than a beautiful dream—it was a living picture, which grew more vivid with the years. Her prayers, her serious thoughts, her religious strivings—received an impulse and a direction such as perhaps the living example could not have so efficiently imparted. For the departure of a loved one to the world unseen frequently brings the invisible near, and gives it a definiteness, a colour, a tangibleness that ultimately becomes a spring of life in God to those who are left behind. The hallowed memory is a golden link entering within the vail. It is the pure, pale shadow cast by a sainted spirit, the refraction of a light too bright for mortal eyes. A sanctified sorrow is one of God's mightiest forces in the lives of men. So, man's life goes in tides; each tide in its ebbing and flowing prepares for and plays into the tide that follows. After her sister's death, little Isabella felt more than ever that she needed to be converted; and she often prayed, believing that somehow some day, if she kept on praying, she would be saved. But her faith in the efficacy of prayer not long after this sustained a severe shock. It happened in this way.

Her brother was taken severely ill, and lay in agonising pain. Isabella, then a girl of eleven, betook herself to a place apart, and besought the Lord to take away the pain. Returning in full expectation of finding the sufferer relieved, what was her disappointment on hearing the same dolorous cry, and marking the signs of unabated agony. Again retiring to her little oratory, she prayed more earnestly, in most explicit terms reminding God that He was the hearer of prayer; and expressing wonder that He had forgotten to answer the first time. Again she returned; but only to find the sufferer no better, but rather worse. Once more she betook herself to the throne of grace, and poured out her heart in fervent pleadings and bold arguments; hinting, after the manner of a child, that if God did not answer this time, she would be very angry; there was no use praying, and—what then? Once again she repaired to the bedside of her brother, feeling certain that now the answer would be given. It was not so. Then the little heart rebelled. She was angry with the Lord. "Did He answer prayer at all? Was it not a mere pretence? Or, perhaps He couldn't! Or, what if He didn't mind people being in pain? Worse still, maybe there was no God!"

This last thought filled the mind of the child with unutterable anguish. This was her first encounter with the devil on purely spiritual ground. She did not then know—what older persons are slow to learn—that no answer to prayer is sometimes the best answer; or that the real answer lies somewhere else than where we expected to find it. The answer often comes not in the little piece of money, we know, but in a mysterious cheque; not in the trinket we asked, but in a jewel of unknown value; not in the good desired, but in some evil, with a greater good at the bottom of it. Despite her bitter feelings, Isabella began to pray again: but one thing she yet lacked.

THE SOUTH LONDON REFUGE for men and women, an institution opened and for some years superintended by the late Mr. William Carter, still exists. The work is carried on at Lancaster-street, Blackfriars, S.E.

THE WORKING MEN'S LORD'S DAY REST ASSOCIATION, 13, Bedford-row, W.C., has again appealed to the trustees of the People's Palace to keep the building closed on the first day of the week. The memorial states:—"The Sunday opening of national institutions like the People's Palace, or portions of them, for secular pursuits, concerts or amusement, is a breaking down of the Sunday closing principle. For many years a noble band of Christian workers have been labouring devotedly to lead the masses of the East-end in the right way. They have taught them to attend the house of God, to study his Word, and to observe the Sabbath as a religious duty. The trustees of the People's Palace have injured their work, and, notwithstanding numerous protests, taught the people to spend the Sunday in secular pursuits." In 1888, no fewer than 20,240 persons, nearly all residing in the Tower Hamlets, signed protests against the Sunday opening of the Palace. Now, more than 680 clergymen and ministers of London and its suburbs have signed an appeal, earnestly asking the trustees to reconsider their policy, and close the institution for all secular purposes on the Lord's Day.

THE POOR OF EAST LONDON.

The purchase of "Hawthorn Model Dwellings" in Devon's-road, Bow, and their presentation to Mr. Archibald G. Brown for Christian uses, is an incident pointing out the way in which the hard lot of many lonely widows and aged poor in the East of London may be greatly alleviated. By the generosity of Mr. T. A. Denny, a large block of buildings, which has long been the habitation of sin and misery, has been secured for higher purposes, and will speedily be the home of respectable Christian people, who would otherwise, on account of their poverty, be struggling to pay impossible rents in far less comfortable surroundings. In all parts of London there are similar opportunities for Christian philanthropists to show their charity by putting in trust buildings in which the aged deserving poor may live at rents which they can reasonably be expected to pay. A few days ago a member of our staff accompanied Mr. Brown on a brief round in Bow. Describing what he saw, he says:—

"The newly acquired block, to be called 'The Christian Buildings,' is a capital triangular pile, including twenty-four sets of rooms—three rooms and a wash-house to each set. It has been put in trust by Mr. Brown, and as soon as the cleaners and decorators have left the place, really worthy people will be received as tenants, paying 2s. weekly. At this rent the place will just prove self-supporting, and certainly the accommodation is quite sumptuous in comparison with that which so many thousands find it difficult to command in the district. The benefits of the buildings will in no way be limited to persons attending the East London Tabernacle, but will be extended to members of any Evangelical church. The Tabernacle workers have undertaken the business for Christ's sake, and Christ's poor, irrespective of denominational distinction, are to enjoy the blessing thus provided. For ten years the 'dwellings' have been visited regularly by Mr. Brown's missionaries, gallery by gallery and room by room, and with but little encouragement. Taken as a whole, they have been a byword of evil significance and omen. and Mr. Brown little dreamed that he would ever have the pile thrown upon his hands to administer for God and his righteousness.

"Accompanying Mr. Brown upon his round of visitation, I saw some sights which were grievous in the extreme. The sad circumstances in which the young are being launched into life, were especially moving. I saw some who had been kept indoors for weeks because they had not adequate clothing in which to take healthy exercise out of doors; their parents were of the class who would willingly work, but they could get nothing to do. The women suffer greatly while their husbands are out in search of work; for they not only spend long hours in their cheerless rooms anxiously awaiting news of success, but they have often to withstand the cries of their little ones when they ask for food. The cases I saw were of genuine need. The rent book showed weeks in arrear, and the outlook was dark and dreary. Yet the poor women were not cast down. They were, indeed, full of hope that work would one day be secured, and their daily wants be supplied. They acknowledged the kind leniency of their landlords, and, though their lot was specially hard, they spoke no word of complaining. The room of one poor woman, a widow of sixty, who had all her life been diligently "plying her needle and thread," was clean and orderly above the majority. She was a trousers' finisher, and, working twelve hours a day, could earn 5s. a week. Out of this she paid 2s. rent, and had to buy cotton, soap, and firing, for pressing the work when done. Thus she had about 2s. 6d. a week to live upon. Being spiritually-minded, this woman was not over anxious; having treasure in heaven, she was patient in her straitened condition of life. 'A great hope, a great patience beseems.' It was a means of grace to see her tenement and hear her little story. Going round to the Denny Soup Kitchen, Tryphena-place, Bow-common, I was glad to see with what joy large numbers of ragged little ones, and grown-up people as well, fetched excellent soup at a halfpenny a quart.

"All that I saw impressed me with the great scope there is for the multiplication of cases of generosity such as Mr. Denny has shown, in respect of The Christian Buildings. Why should not philanthropists help on the work of Christ, by purchasing property and putting it in the hands of Christian men to look after, in the interest of the deserving poor? Such property would, generally speaking, be self-supporting, for it would always command good tenants. Moreover, happy colonies of people such as Mr. Brown hopes to admit in occupation of the block in Devon's-road, will act as a preserving salt in the midst of moral corruption, and a light of life in the midst of spiritual darkness."

KENTISH TOWN MEDICAL MISSION.

This youthful Mission has opened its third session, the workers full of earnest desire for the salvation of souls, as well as for the temporal blessing of the patients. The Mission is situated in one of the poorest districts of Kentish Town, and its efforts are restricted to the absolutely indigent. The medical work and meetings are carried on in the Dickenson-street Hall, which has been most kindly placed at the disposal of the Mission on Thursday afternoons, and part of which has been fitted up as a dispensary by the generosity of Mr. J. D. Allcroft. The whole of the workers, lay and medical, are honorary, and the expenses, being thus confined to the actual outlay for drugs, appliances, &c., are very small. The staff consists of the medical officers, at present four in number, of the dentist and several lady dispensers and other ladies who work amongst the patients, speaking to them individually on spiritual matters, and offering words of cheer and comfort to the sick and the sad. Mr. Charles Cox, of the London City Mission, is an earnest and zealous worker for Christ and helper in the Mission.

All the patients are present at the service, which lasts half an hour, and consists of an earnest Gospel address with bright singing. The patients are then seen in the consulting-room, and receive their medicines. The hall is often made bright with gifts of flowers for the patients. Whenever it becomes necessary they are visited in their homes, and many of them who have been in the habit of going nowhere on Sunday, become regular attendants at the services in the hall on the Lord's Day.

The patients are admitted only by card, and these cards must be signed by an authorised district visitor who knows the patient personally and is herself responsible for the case being a suitable one. The Mission is entirely unsectarian, and the cards are distributed among representative district visitors of all the parishes round.

Last session, a fund, separate from the general fund, was raised to provide meals or supplies of milk, &c., for the specially needy, on the recommendation of the medical officers. Warm garments sent by kind friends were distributed in a similar way. The medical work was greatly helped by these advantages, and contributions towards this branch of the work will be acknowledged by Miss J. Johnston, Highfield, Willoughby-road, Hampstead, or by the secretary, Mr. T. F. Lardelli, 15, Well-walk, Hampstead. Letters for Convalescent Homes are much needed and appreciated. The second annual report, now ready, will furnish further details, and will be sent to anyone interested.

ADULT SCHOOLS FOR LONDON.—The recently formed London Adult School Union have arranged for a conference on this subject, to be held at the Bunhill Adult School, Roscoe-street, E.C., at four p.m., to-morrow (Saturday). This will be followed by a public meeting at eight p.m., when Alderman William White, J.P., of Birmingham, and others, are expected to deliver addresses. Mr. W. F. A. Archibald will preside.

THE MOTTO OF THE GOLDEN GORSE.

By Eva Travers Evered Poole.

It was a dull, dark November day, when twenty or thirty lovely golden gorse blossoms opened their eyes for the first time upon the wide, bare expanse of Southampton Common. They grew in clusters on a parent stem, well protected by thick, sharp spikes from any rude passing hand. It seemed strange that the plant should have chosen such a blossoming time, but we all know that our common gorse is one of the hardiest plants, to be seen on every heath, at any time of the year, gladdening the eyes, and lightening the dark landscape. Some of our sweetest poets have sung about this habit of the gorse, whose golden blossoms may be seen, gleaming in beauty, even when cold winds and snow have chilled and withered almost every other flower. Still these remain—"A token to the wintry earth that beauty liveth still."

No sooner had our blossoms burst forth than their tongues were loosed, and the chatter that went on was wonderful. Flowers have their own way of talking, and it is but seldom understood by mortal ears. You might have fancied their voices were but the rustle of the dry, dead leaves hanging still upon the bare boughs, or the play of the winter's wind amongst the bushes and dry grass; but all the time you would have been mistaken. The sounds you heard were flower-voices talking.

"Brothers! sisters!" cried one eager little blossom, in a merry, cheery voice, "is it not good to be alive? How pretty we are! How gay is our dress! How beautiful everything is! How happy I feel!" And all the other blossoms joined in the chorus, murmuring pleasantly—

"Yes, we're pretty, and gay, and happy, and everything is beautiful."

I must tell you that gorse blossoms are the most contented of all flowers. They are never sad, never cast down; come summer, come winter, cold wind, drizzling rain, sea breeze, or summer shower, they always smile and chatter, and give out sweet fragrance, whispering—

"We are happy!"

By and by all the gorse blossoms fell to asking questions. First to one another, then, finding no one amongst them knew more than the other, and some who pretended to only jumped at conclusions, they wisely turned to the parent stem, in order to gain information. Like most children they all spoke at once, until the wise mother hushed them and bade them talk in turns, beginning at the first bloom.

"Mother," she said, with no little pride, "are we not all beautiful?"

Of course the mother plant thought there never had been and never could be more beautiful flowers in the wide, wide world, than the children of her own bringing forth, but she did not say so. She merely answered:

"All gorse blossoms are beautiful. God made them so." There is an old tradition that when one of the world's greatest naturalists* first saw a field of gorse in full bloom on an English heath, he fell on his knees, and thanked God for its beauty, declaring it to be the loveliest of flowers.

At this, all the blossoms swelled with delight, and breathed forth a richer fragrance than before.

"Mother," asked another flower, "are we only meant to be beautiful, or can we be useful too."

"Both, my child. God has made us by nature resolute and independent, and although we are but weak, we can do what grander plants cannot, for we can grow where they cannot. We can blossom at all times and seasons. We can draw nourishment from the barest spots, and can spread over barren ground in a very short time, making it look bright and beautiful. There is no accounting for tastes, you know, and the gorse family have a fancy for making ugly things pretty, and covering up bare, unsightly patches. Indeed, you may say that is quite our mission in life. The motto of our family has always been: 'Make the best of everything.'"

"It is pleasant work and a good motto," said a little blossom, more thoughtful than the others. "I think I would rather be useful than beautiful, if I had my choice. However, it is nice to be beautiful, and with one's beauty to cover nakedness and ugliness, and to supply need in others, is it not?"

"We seem to be rather common. There are a great many gorse bushes about here," remarked another blossom, of a very exclusive turn of mind.

The old pine trees, in the clump hard by, laughed till their sides cracked, when they heard this remark, but the mother made answer gently:—"We should not be so useful if we were not abundant. The earth is full of bare places. Think of the mountain slopes, think of the dull, dark soil which would be sadly bereft of beauty without, us, but which our abundant growth covers. But if it comforts you, let me tell you that in some countries we are as rare as hot-house plants. In Russia and Swedon we are kept in greenhouses, and carefully cultivated."

At this all the blossoms opened their eyes very wide indeed, as I daresay you are doing too.

"What should you say we are made for, mother?" questioned a very delicate blossom, and all the others held their breath to hear the answer, which quickly came:—

"Just to be beautiful everywhere, and to be useful anywhere, my children. Be bright and cheerful when dark skies are overhead, be brave and resolute when dreary places lie before you. If people only made the best of things, how different the world would be!"

"Yes," echoed some soft green moss, which grew on the gnarled roots of the rugged old pines, "that has always been my motto through life. See how I cover and enshrine these unsightly roots with my fairy handicraft. I never leave a stone as I find it, but I toil and work until I round its sharp edges, and cover its barrenness, and make it beautiful. Always make the best of things!"

"Ha, ha!" croaked the pines, laughing hoarsely to themselves.

"Good!" cried the green grass growing all around, each tiny blade finding voice to speak. "This is our life motto. Trodden down by the careless feet of man; devoured in our fairest prime by hungry cattle, unnoticed, unpraised, we carpet the earth, we beautify the slopes, we cover the hillside. Wherever we are, we make the best of things. It's the only way to get on, the only way to be happy. Be beautiful in yourself, and of use to somebody else!"

"Then we are perfect, are we not, mother?" chorussed the blossoms. "Lovely and useful; what more can we be?"

But the gorse-mother shook her head, and as she did so all the blossoms trembled.

"No, my children, we fail in one point, and a very important one. Our friends the grass and the moss have the advantage over us in this matter. We are lovely and useful, but not lovable as we ought to be. See how we surround ourselves with sharp spikes and cruel thorns. We are too unapproachable. We wound the friendly hand that would pluck us. Ah! children, we do need to be very humble, we are not perfect," and the mother sighed again.

But the little blossoms were too happy-hearted to be long depressed, even by lack of perfection, and they cried merrily and cheerily, as of old—

"Never mind, mother, make the best of things. If we are not perfect, still we are very, very happy."

Now, don't you think the golden gorse, the soft, green moss, and the patient, enduring, down-trodden grass, were wise? Don't you think we mortals might turn to the "grass of the field," as the Master bade us, and learn many a wise lesson therefrom (Matt. vi. 30).

First, that God means us to be beautiful—not with beauty of person alone, although I cannot see why we should not all try to make ourselves as pleasant in other people's eyes as possible; but with that loveliness of character and soul that He alone can give. We must be lovely and lovable under all circumstances, shining brightly for Jesus under wintry skies, and in dark places, so that men looking at us may have their hearts cheered and gladdened by our soul-beauty and praise God for it.

Let us be found always and everywhere "making the best of it"! We must be useful, too, and I do not know a better way than by covering up and hiding everything unlovely and unsightly round about us. There are plently of bare and disagreeable places in life; ugly twists and turnings in temper and circumstances and surroundings; long stretches of waste and weary hours, which you can cover over or soften down. Then there are rough angles and sharp edges in yourself and other people which a little gentle effort may round and beautify, and all of us may help in this sort of work every day and all day long. It may be our mission in life just to fling a soft flower-mantle over the roughness and rudeness of other people; to bury and hide the faults and sins of friends, schoolfellows, brothers and sisters, smoothing over sharp little points of difference, and making all things beautiful by our love and gentleness.

Ah! we want a great deal more of this loving spirit, about which the Apostles speak:—"Love covereth the multitude of sins" (1 Pet. iv. 8); "Love never faileth" (1 Cor. xiii. 8). And about which Solomon, the "peaceable" king, writes:—"Love covereth all sins" (Prov. x. 12); "He that covereth a transgression seeketh love" (Prov. xvii. 9).

Nay, we must earnestly pray for an increase of this all-hiding, all-hoping love, for St. Peter bids us, "Above all things, have fervent love amongst yourselves, for charity (or love) shall cover the multitude of sins."

So that to-day we have learned of the flowers and grass of the field to be lovely in our lives and loving towards others. We have learned that in our humble way and lowly sphere we may fulfil God's sweet will as faithfully as the flower creation which flings its covering veil of greenness and beauty over the face of the earth, and that in spite of difficult circumstances and dark surrounding ours may be the gorse's motto—

"Always make the best of things."

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., Nov. 3, 2 Cor. ii. 1—17; Mon., Nov. 4, 2 Cor. iii. 1—18; Tues., Nov. 5, 2 Cor. iv. 1—18; Wed., Nov. 6, 2 Cor. v. 1—11; Thurs., Nov. 7, 2 Cor. v. 12—21; Fri., Nov. 8, 2 Cor. vi. 1—18; Sat., Nov. 9, 2 Cor. vii. 1—16.

SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.—Services for children were held in the Congregational Chapel, Leyton, last week. Six Sunday-schools, of various denominations, co-operated. About 400 young people attended each evening. The services were conducted by Mr. T. Lewes Sayer. A large number of the young people were brought to a definite decision to serve the Lord Jesus. Many scholars will have cause to remember this week with great joy, and many teachers, also, for the great blessings they have received.

"Ah! if it were not for the drink, I should not be here." Such was one of the observations made by Mr. Raffles, the Liverpool stipendiary, in the police-court, on Friday last.

RELIGIOUS CONTROVERSY:
In what Spirit should it be Conducted?

AN ADDRESS TO THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE,

By Rev. Dr. J. CULROSS.

This is the question to which I have been asked to give some answer to-night. It does not relate to method, to mental equipment, to weapons, nor even to that which is the ultimate appeal in all matters of religious controversy—the Word of God. The question is as to the spirit of the disputant; and I shall try to answer it very briefly in two remarks. First, what I may call is essential in all controversy on religious matters. That spirit is a Divine creation; it belongs to the creative power of the Holy Ghost. It is in this spirit that all our personal inquiries and investigations into revelation must be conducted. It is the spirit that loves and values and desires and welcomes God's light; that can say the 119th Psalm. It is more than mere willingness to receive the light. It is more than the fairness that holds the balance even. It is the spirit that longs to know God's mind and will. In its loftiest form there is an element of passion in it, combined with an element of reverence. "My soul breaketh for the longing it hath unto thy judgments at all times."

To some of us, it may be, from professionalism or other causes, this is largely a memory. We look back, and recall the hours of delight, of passionate joy, almost rapture, when we were wont to thrill to the Divine revealings. Such delight, it may be, is now strange to some of us; it has become largely

A TRADITION OF OUR EARLIER YEARS.

If so, we have suffered a greater loss than we know—one of the greatest losses a Christian man can sustain. Youthful enthusiasm may be toned down: but this truth-spirit, this eager longing for God's light, this delight in Divine revealings, cannot be depressed without loss of the most serious kind.

Now, this truth-spirit must be brought into all our controversy. If we cannot thus bring it in, let us hold our peace. The result of bringing it in will be to redeem controversy from being the narrow, bitter, and confused thing it so often is, when Christ is "wounded in the house of his friends."

Animated by this truth-spirit I shall not fight for victory; I shall not introduce personalities; I dare not be unfair to my opponent; I dare not quibble with him; I dare not stoop to controversial tricks in order to confute or silence him. Animated by this spirit, I shall not be or by great men. If any man occupies a great position, worthily won and worthily held, I shall listen calmly, patiently, sympathetically to what he has to say; just as I would to the humblest and most unpretending Christian man. But it must be in the spirit of the old words, "Of those who seemed to be somewhat, whatsoever they were, it maketh no matter to me; God accepteth no man's person."

Animated by the truth-spirit I dare not be silent on any present-day truth—any truth that ought to be spoken out just now. I dare not be silent about it from considerations of expediency, or self-interest, or love of peace, or any other consideration. We may differ on important questions; good and honest men often do. Good men indeed are much nearer one another than they sometimes think; and I believe a little patience and brotherly frankness would often show that behind jarring words there is substantial harmony of faith. I have come to that conclusion long ago. But, if we do differ, let us do it in a brotherly way. Let us treat one another with consideration, with justice, with Christian courtesy, and with a profound reverence for conscience. But I may not lay any present-day truth on the shelf from any consideration relating to myself, saying, Let us agree to differ about it. All covenants to do so are disannulled by loyalty to Jesus Christ.

One more point on this head. Animated by the truth-spirit, I shall accept the truth

WITH ALL ITS PRACTICAL CONSEQUENCES.

That is saying, perhaps, more than one should say, unless he has fairly faced what it means. If we would learn the truth, we must be prepared to accept the consequences of it; embodying it in deed and life. "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." That is a divine principle, and God will not depart from it.

This, I repeat, is the spirit in which religious controversy should be conducted—the spirit that loves, that values, that lies open to God's light, and that is prepared to walk in that light at whatever hazard. Let the light of God's truth rebuke us and humble us, even though it should deprive us of our daily bread.

The second thing I have to say relates to the man on the other side. "Speaking the truth in love"—truthing it in love—that expression brings the thought into view. If a man love truth well enough, no fear of his charity. He will not retire into his corner and

SCOWL ACROSS AT HIS NEIGHBOUR.

If charity means love, I shall love my neighbour from whom I differ. Love will get into controversy, and will ruleit. The love of truth goes naturally with the love of man. With charity in my heart, I shall not hurl the truth at my neighbour in passion or contemptuously; rejoicing in his discomfiture; imagining that I have won the victory when I have put him to silence. With love in my heart, I shall not sit down in the judgment seat to judge and sentence my brother. That seat belongs to Jesus Christ, and none may sit down there but He alone. With Christian love in my heart, I shall lay aside bitterness and rudeness and scorn. "Shall we call down fire from heaven?" Alas, the fire of controversy has too often been brought from the bottomless pit. The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God; nor do the fires of Smithfield; nor the unholy fires of sarcasm and hatred. Love must enter into religious controversy, else we shall go wrong, on both sides probably.

But is this love a kind of soft, easy, good natured yieldingness? On the contrary,

LOVE IS STRONG AND FIRM.

It stands upright; it has backbone. Love is brave and chivalrous. Love is plain-spoken, even to ruggedness; as witness Martin Luther, or John Knox, or stout Hugh Latimer. Love can have indignation. The Christian man who cannot be indignant is not worth very much. Such men have never done much good in the world; have never wrought deliverance in the earth. Christ had indignation, and he who cannot be angry, as an old writer says, "hath a maimed soul." It is one of the weaknesses of our modern Christianhood that it fails to wield the power of rebuke. We can scold, we can upbraid, we can call names, we can taunt and provoke, and do a good many other things in that line; but love only can wield the power of rebuke—as Paul withstood Peter to the face because he was to be blamed. It is in the blending of the truth-spirit and the spirit of love that fitness lies for conducting religious controversy. If we have them in our breast, we shall do good through controversy. We shall be able to respond rightly to the call in the New Testament to "contend earnestly for the faith once (and once for all) delivered to the saints." But if we have not these two elements, then we had better not touch this business.

I have nothing more to say except this: Let every controversialist—whether at tea-tables and privately or publicly—examine himself, lest he come under Christ's rebuke: "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of."

WORKERS FOR EGYPT.

Dear Sir,—The immediate result of the "Plea for Egypt," which you were good enough to publish a short time ago, was that two Christian sisters offered themselves for work among the 60,000 Italians and other Europeans in Alexandria. Miss Johnson and Miss Higgins will perhaps be known to some of your readers as labourers for many years among the poorer classes of South London, where they have shown themselves to be true soul-winners, and have been much blessed in their work. They hope to leave by the P. and O. steamer on November 28 for their destination. May I earnestly beg that much prayer may be offered for them; that they may go forth baptized afresh with the Holy Ghost and with power.

And now, encouraged by this gracious answer to prayer, we are looking for many more labourers for the same needy field, especially for the Mohammedans, not only of Egypt, but of Arabia. When I say we, I mean Mrs. Haig and myself. We have no society, and no plans, except to carry out the Lord's plan as He shall open out to us our own humble part in it. I have seen a good deal of Arabia, and we spent last winter and spring in Egypt. We cannot return there this year, and therefore desire to encourage, and, as the Lord may find the means, to help others to go. The harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few. Millions are perishing for lack of knowledge. He that reapeth receiveth wages and gathereth fruit unto life eternal.—Yours faithfully.

F. T. Haig, Major-General.

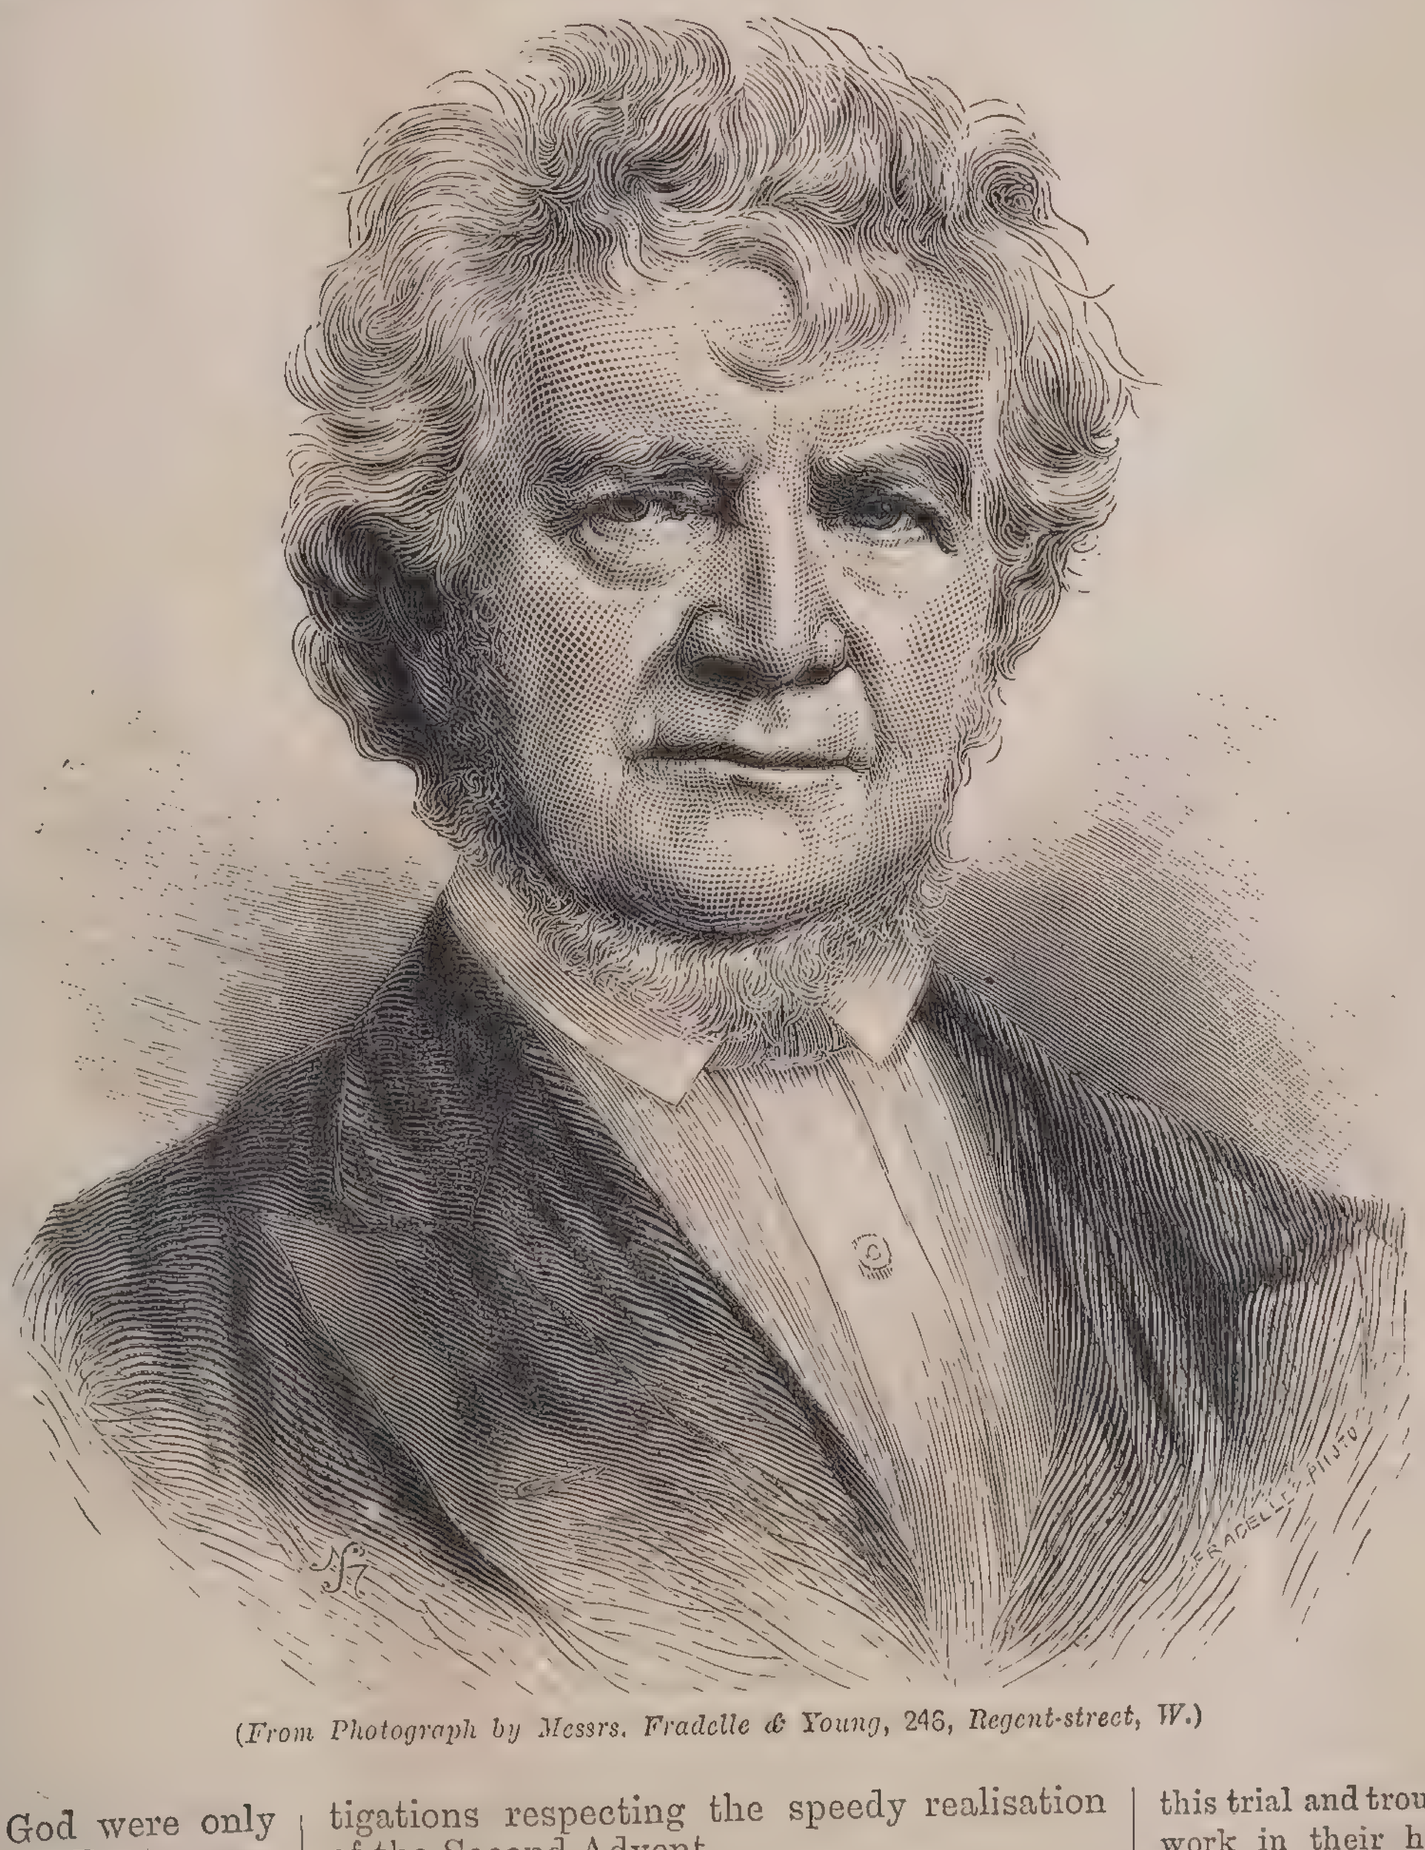
The Limes, Ladbroke-road, Redhill.

EAST LONDON JEWS AT CHURCH.—Whilst the number of Jews in Spitalfields and adjacent districts is rapidly increasing, it is gratifying to know that in no place are the efforts of missionary zeal among God's chosen people more apparent, and at the same time more successful. Emboldened by former successes, the rector of Spitalfields (Rev. J. H. Scott) arranged for another Jewish service in the parish church on Friday last. The attendance on former occasions was good, but in this instance all past achievements have been excelled, for between 400 and 500 Jews were present. In most cases they were totally ignorant of Christian teaching. The service was in Judeo-German, the Old Testament lesson, Isa. lv., being read in Hebrew and German. Every Jew, on leaving the church, was presented with a tract.

THE LATE MR. ROBERT BAXTER.

THE present year has been marked by the calling home to be with Christ of several the veterans of the Church of God. Among e most recent of their number is the sub- t of the present sketch, who fell asleep in sus on Tuesday, October 6, at Highbury, the eighty-eighth year of his age, after a ort attack of congestion of the lungs.

Converted at an early age, and at a time hen it was very unusual for a layman of e Church of England to engage in directly iritual work, he realised and acted upon e words of Jesus, "He that gathereth not th Me, scattereth abroad," and was con- quently an eminent ex- mple of a godly man of siness and soul-winner mbined.



He was of a Leicester- ire family which claims lationship with Richard axter, author of "The aints' Rest," and which r nearly two hundred ears has been settled at therstone and Stoke olding, in that county. is father, Mr. Dudley axter, of Stoke Golding, as a magistrate, as well s a deputy-lieutenant, nd the colonel of a regi- ent of the Leicestershire Iilitia, which he equipped t his own expense during he wars against Napo- eon I.

ROBERT BAXTER was orn in 1802, and was he third son. His early ears were passed at toke Golding, and he vas articled at a solici- or's office at Atherstone, ntering on the roll at Lincoln's Inn in 1823. Then, at the age of twen- y-two, he entered upon ractice at Doncaster, nd soon gained reputa- ion for talent and energy n his profession.

In 1825 he married Miss Paget, the youngest daughter of Mr. Thomas Bradley Paget, a banker, of Tamworth. Her ear- nest Christian spirit and life of prayer were greatly used in the quickening of his soul, so that his zeal and energy in the work of God were only increased by this union. Mrs. Baxter was a lovely and gifted woman, as well as a devoted Christian. But, while her large family of ten were yet very young, she was called away, and Mr. Baxter left a widower in 1837. He never married again.

Mr. Baxter was one of the first to establish in the Deanery of Doncaster auxiliaries of the Church Missionary, the Bible, and other religious Societies, and to commence a system of district visiting among the poor—labours which at that time were new to the public mind, and provoked much criticism. He was also the chief promoter of the erection of Christ Church, Doncaster, and a writer in some religious periodicals.

In 1829 his attention was drawn to the subject of Scripture prophecy, which at that time was taken up by a large number of earnest men in the churches of England and Scotland, including Rev. Hugh M'Neile (the late Dean of Ripon), the celebrated Joseph Wolff, and the equally eminent Henry Drummond (of Aldbury), and Rev. Edward Irving; and, by personal intercourse and by writing in the great prophetic periodical of that day, The Morning Watch, Mr. Baxter joined earnestly in the subject of their investigations respecting the speedy realisation of the Second Advent.

Mr. Irving was then in the zenith of his fame, attracting immense congregations by his eloquence, and drawing around him a devoted band of earnest and consecrated men and women, who were engrossed in the expectation of the restoration of miraculous gifts to the Church. In the autumn of 1831 their excitement was raised to the highest pitch by the news of miraculous cures among a kindred congregation of Presbyterians in Scotland, and by the appearance of utterances of wonderful power, which seemed to coincide with the gifts of tongues and prophecy recorded of the Apostolic age. After a brief trial, Mr. Irving acknowledged these utterances as inspirations from above, and adopted them in his church.

Mr. Baxter, after occasionally attending Mr. Irving's services in 1830 and 1831, joined his church as a member in January, 1832. The power with which he spoke, and his great ability, at once gave him an important place in the congregation, and made him one of the most notable of their leaders. He continued among them until April, 1832, when the failure of important predictions unanimously proclaimed by those who were supposed to have the "gift of tongues," and in which he himself had taken part, convinced him that they were a delusion. He at once publicly declared that he had been mistaken, and came up to London to endeavour to convince Mr. Irving, who was then on his trial before the Presbytery of the Scotch Church, and at the crisis of his fame.

Failing in this object, he published a "Narrative of Facts," which had a considerable effect. The experience he gained while under the power of the Irvingite delusion, especially while himself speaking "in the power," as he describes it, is given with wonderful wisdom in this little book.

> Whenever God sees fit, for chastisement, to suffer his own people to be deluded, they bring into their delusion all they have learned of the Spirit of God, and truth and holiness are continually displayed in their discourse and conduct, though mixed up and contaminated by their delusion. Those who are really God's people are also, notwithstanding their delusion, still sustained by the Spirit of God; and, as the Spirit of truth continues to bear witness in them, they will never be at peace or satisfied in their delusion, but be tried and troubled. Under this trial and trouble God may carry on his gracious work in their hearts, notwithstanding the hindrances of the delusion, and thus it may be that the genuine fruits of the Spirit of God may be manifest even in the midst of the fearful workings of a system of false worship.

This testimony we feel to be specially valuable, as coming from one who has known the power of delusion upon his own soul, and who by the grace of God has found a way of escape. Unless Satan came as an angel of light, and unless they could "bring into their delusion all they have learned of the Spirit of God," it would be difficult to comprehend how men and women, who are really spiritual, will fall into the Agapemone and other delusions of the present day.

Some of his companions, including several clergymen of the Church of England, followed Mr. Baxter in his withdrawal from the Irvingite communion. Among those who remained, the most noted was Mr. Henry Drummond, M.P., who for many years afterwards continued to sit and speak in Parliament, and who lived and died the chief prophet and pillar of the Irvingite, or "Catholic Apostolic," Church.

Mr. Baxter continued his business as a lawyer in Doncaster from 1832 to 1845, at the same time actively assisting in parochial and religious undertakings. In the terrible visitation of Asiatic cholera in the autumn of 1832, which struck down hundreds of the inhabitants, he devoted a good deal of time to organising a system of house-to-house visitation, and, with devoted courage, chose for himself the Marshgate district, where, from the low situation and the poverty of the people, the disease raged in its most virulent form. He spent days and nights in finding out and relieving those who were struck with the disease, and was himself attacked by it.

In 1845 he removed from Doncaster to London, and commenced the career of Parliamentary solicitor. He was instrumental in carrying the Great Northern Railway Bill through Parliament in spite of immense opposition: this made his fame as a lawyer. Since then, for more than thirty years, he was chiefly occupied in Parliamentary and railway business at the head of the large firm of Baxter, Rose, & Norton, and, since its dissolution in 1875, at the head of the firm of Baxter & Co. The late Serjeant Wrangham, Mr. Mereweather, Mr. Beckett Denison (now Lord Grimthorpe), were frequently the barristers engaged in these cases. In the long list of railway Bills and public companies the Bills of which he has promoted in Parliamentary Committees may be mentioned the underground Metropolitan District Railway and the Thames Embankment. In 1868, in the General Election to Parliament, Mr. Baxter was Conservative candidate for the representation of Hull, and again in 1870 for the City of Londonderry, but without success.

Although he was by profession an evangelical member of the Church of England, his union with the whole body of Christ in his members was far more manifest in his life. He would often attend the Church of England service in the morning, and preach in a hall or in a chapel in the evening. His prominence in his profession was, by the grace of God, not allowed to be a snare to him; he was never afraid to witness for his Lord, whether in taking part in prayer in the Lawyers' Prayer Union, or in gathering for morning worship among visitors who were willing to do so in the Continental hotels where he stayed on his travels.

Possessed of great power of organisation, he was foremost, both in Doncaster and London, in promoting systematic district visiting of the poor at a time when such a work was a novelty and subject to much opposition. In order to further the education of the working classes he collected and analysed in 1835 from every parish of the great county of York, containing two millions of people, the state of the schools and the number of scholars. In concert with the Central Education Committee of York, he aided in the establishment of the Committee of Council on Education in 1839, under which the educational progress has greatly advanced.

As an earnest total abstainer, he took especial interest in promoting the cause of temperance, and was treasurer to the Church of England Temperance Society. As a public speaker at religious meetings at Exeter Hall and other places in London his voice was frequently being heard. In conjunction with Lord Radstock, he founded, in 1865, the Evangelisation Society, now so well known. He has also been an active promoter of Miss Daniel's Soldiers' Homes at Aldershot, Chatham, Colchester, and Plymouth. It was his great joy to preach to the soldiers of the love and saving power of Jesus, and many who have died in Egypt and elsewhere owe their conversion in some measure to his preaching. During his autumn holiday it was his wont to drive out nearly every evening from Doncaster or Stoke Golding to any places in the neighbourhood which were spiritually dead, and either alone or aided by some other evangelist, he would preach the Gospel; and often souls were won for Christ at those holiday services.

He likewise was from the first a zealous friend of the Midnight Meeting Movement, of which he was treasurer. He was also President of the Christian Community. Another very useful society, the Open-Air Mission, from its commencement had his co-operation as a member of its committee, and for many years he co-operated with the late Earl of Shaftesbury in promoting the Ragged School movement. The poor and needy have throughout his long life frequently found in him sympathy and help. He likewise was on the committee of the Religious Tract Society. Up to the age of eighty-three, that is to say, the year 1885, he continued to travel somewhere for the Evangelisation Society every Saturday, and to preach thrice on the Sunday.

But the last four years of his life he was unable to give as much attention personally to business or to travel as before, on account of his health. After his eighty-seventh birthday, he greatly enjoyed attending the ministry of Rev. E. A. Stuart, of St. James', Holloway, sitting in his bath-chair. During his last illness, which only continued for two days, he was very peaceful. Although there was considerable labour in breathing, yet his face wore no marks of pain; and, although unable to speak, a smile of recognition would pass over his features as a familiar hymn was sung at his bedside, or a well-known text repeated. Mr. Baxter has left two sons—Rev. M. Baxter, the well-known writer and speaker on prophetic subjects, and proprietor and editor of The Christian Herald; and Mr. Frank Baxter, his third son, a lawyer; also four daughters. Like a shock of corn fully ripe, he has been gathered into the Lord's garner; and his memory is that of a just man, blessed and fragrant of the spirit of Christ.

A MISSION IN ABYSSINIA.

Dear Sir,—The accompanying extract from the Mission Tidings, of the Swedish Church, may interest your readers. The Swedish missionaries to which it refers have patiently waited for years for an entrance into Abyssinia. Their first settlement was on the western side of that country in the Soudan. Thence they were driven, with the loss of all they possessed. They then tried Keren on the north. There their work was so greatly blessed among the Abyssinians that the priests at length took alarm, and expelled them from the country, imprisoning and persecuting their converts. Some appear even to have been put to death.

They then settled at M'Kullo, four miles from Massowah, where I spent a day with them two years ago. Now at length their patient persistency has been rewarded. Abyssinia, from which the Gospel has so jealously been excluded, has been thrown open, and, under the protection of the Italian flag, our brethren are advancing into the country, and establishing mission stations in its healthy uplands.

EXTRACT.

Translation from the Mission Tidings of part of Rev. A. Swensson's letter to Pastor J. Montelius, Johanneland, Stockholm:—

M'Kullo, July 27, 1889.—Much that has happened since your visit to this place seems to indicate that our Mission can at least reoccupy its old stations in the highlands. By the old stations I mean not only Geleb and Keren, but the whole of Hamazen, where the life-blood of our brethren Lager and Heilab was shed. That the Italians have thrown open Baramberas Kaffel in Keren is already known, and has its own importance, but their advance from Sahati against Hamazen may have far more weighty results. At Ginda, beyond Eilet, they have now a strong fort, and we have already a numerous colony there, although most of them are invalids. Most likely at this moment the Italian flag is floating in Hamazen. Think of that death sentence pronounced by violence and wrong, and now, instead thereof, the guarantee of a powerful and just Government with freedom of conscience in its bosom.

At present in Hamazen there is boundless confusion in every respect, and no government. In consequence of what is going on, and inasmuch as the Catholics are already building in Asmara, I have allowed Solomon, Sera Sion, Hailo, and Sagid to go up, that they may evangelise Hamazen during the rainy season. The priests and monks have nothing to complain of now, except that they must either hold their peace, or else overcome our people with argument, if they can. The men took with them a load of books....We have almost daily communication with the highlands.

My opinion is that we should take up three or four of the most important points in Hamazen, also our old station Geleb. Perhaps also, we should hold a station at Keren, since we are now endeavouring to make a Tigré literature, and it is possible that the place will have importance as being on the way to Khartoum.

HE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

NFERENCE AT CHELTENHAM, OCT. 22—24.

e Alliance found an admirable location its British Conference this year, at pretty prosperous Cheltenham, in the shire of ucester. Probably there is greater need for using the principles of Christian unity and mon brotherhood in the smaller provincial ntres, than in the thickly peopled towns and es where these Conferences are generally d. One favouring circumstance with respect Cheltenham is the fact that Canon Bell, o occupies a leading place in the ranks of Established Church clergy, is well known a man of a truly catholic spirit, possessing esteem of every section of the Church uni-sal in the town. The Canon gave his hearty operation in all the arrangements for the nference, as also did the other leading clergy d Nonconformist pastors.

RECEPTION MEETING.

The large attendance at the conversazione and ception meeting, on Tuesday evening, Oct. 22, s an index of the deep and wide interest eated in the town by the visit of the Alliance. After a pleasant hour of social intercourse, non BELL took the chair at the public meet-g, when the Assembly Rooms were crowded overflowing. The platform was a large and minently representative one—a little Evan-lical Alliance in itself. In extending a cordial ception, on behalf of Cheltenham, to the embers of the Alliance, the Canon gave an dress worthy of himself and of the occasion. e can only reproduce the more important ints touched on. He said:—

The Alliance does not seek to create unity, r this has been already created for all who lieve in God's only Son and man's only viour, and indeed is a great and most blessed ct. But it seeks to manifest that living and sential union. Can we for a moment question e duty of those who are Christ's to cherish elings of Christian affection one towards nother, and to hold out the right hand of llowship to all "who love the Lord Jesus hrist in sincerity"? If, instead of accentuat-g differences that are not vital, and of exag-erating them before a scoffing world by means the Press or on the platform, we sought with ll lowliness and meekness to heal the breaches Zion, surely a blessing would follow. And re not the things on which we are all agreed nfinitely more important than those on which e differ? We are one in all the great funda-ental principles of our common faith. If, nstead of holding ecause we differ in the interpretation of our Lord's will as regards the constitution of the Church or its bearings in relation to the State, ve agreed to differ, and sought harmony and nity in brotherly communion and united prayer, might we not hope for such a deepening f the spiritual life as would not only bring trength to our souls, but would tell upon the world at large? The windows of heaven would e opened, and showers of blessings descend in copious abundance; and they would carry with hem such fervent love and solemn fear of God, such intense zeal for the honour of Christ, such an earnest yearning for perishing souls, such oly feelings of brotherhood, that old prejudices would be overcome, that those hindrances to nion, which now seem so formidable, would melt, dissolve, and pass away, like some field of ice at the breath of the summer sun.

I am not very sanguine about what is called "Home Reunion," if by this is meant the gathering of all the sheep of Christ into one ecclesiastical fold. This may not be the will of God in this dispensation, nor, could it be obtained, would such uniformity necessarily produce unity of opinion on all points. The divisions in my own Church prove too plainly that the contrary is the case. And I do not hesitate to say that, accepting as I do the articles and formularies of my Church in their natural sense, and agreeing as these do with the Westminster Confession of Faith, I am on many points of doctrine nearer to Nonconformists without our Church than to those who may be rightly called nonconformists within.

But though we may never all belong to one great external fold in this world, we may all do what within us lies for the furtherance of Christian union. There ever have been, and ever will be, differences in the Christian Church as to ordinances, modes of worship, and forms of government. You can no more make all men think alike on these subjects than the Emperor, Charles V., in his Spanish cloister, could make two timepieces go alike, and move in perfect harmony. But, while there will be differences on points that are not vital, there is no reason that we should not love a Christian wherever we see him, and, bearing and forbearing, and agreeing to differ, walk with him together, as far as we are agreed.

True Christians, who hold the Head, and are born again of the Holy Spirit, whatever minor differences they have, are but the branches of a tree which is still one. We are united in Christ; we meet in Him as in one common centre; and, like the radii of a circle, the nearer we draw to the centre—that is, the nearer we approach to Christ—the nearer we shall be to each other.

NO CHURCH ON EARTH IS PERFECT.

Out of imperfect materials the Church is being built. And let us remember that the Church of Christ, the spiritual house, the holy temple, is now only in process of building. The materials of the heavenly temple are at present under the Great Architect's hands. By the means of grace, by the Word, by the Spirit, by the hard strokes of trial, and by rough providences, the Great Master Builder is preparing the living stones—hewing them from the quarry, fashioning them, and polishing them, that He may set them in a temple where no sound of axe or hammer is heard. The Church is in process of building, and no more than any other building can this be judged or understood till the work has been brought to a close. Then, when the headstone thereof is brought forth with shoutings of "Grace, grace unto it"; when the scaffolding of present ordinances is removed; when the heavens which concealed many of the living stones shall be rolled together as a scroll, this temple, whose walls rest on the true foundation, having been laid firmly there by apostles and prophets, "Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner-stone"—this temple shall be seen to be of such grand proportions and surpassing splendour that it shall stand forth the admiration of angels, the wonder of the universe, and the glory of God.

RESPONSES.

In the regretted absence of Lord Polwarth, some words of response were given by Mr. DONALD MATHESON, Chairman of the British Council. These Alliance gatherings, he said, were truly as days of heaven upon earth. Ecclesiastical differences were all forgotten; why should not this be done all the year round? On one occasion Canon Wilberforce declared that the spirit of judging one another was the greatest hindrance to Christian union among the churches, and undoubtedly it is one of the great evils of the present divided condition of the Church of Christ. Mr. Matheson referred to Dr. Parker's recent letter in The Times, in which he appealed to the Archbishop of Canterbury to initiate some movement of co-operation on spiritual instead of ecclesiastical lines. Why, said the speaker, that is the very thing that the Evangelical Alliance is doing.

As representing the Canadian churches, Rev. F. H. MARLING, of Montreal, briefly but warmly responded to the Canon's welcome; so did Pastor BLUETT, of Geneva, on behalf of Continental Christians.

CHRIST AND HIS FRIENDS

was the subject of an excellent address by Dr. DONALD FRASER. Ancient poets, he said, have represented certain heroes of their time as being under the special care of gods and goddesses. All that was a capricious favouritism, and something very different from what our holy Bible reveals to us of God taking Abraham for his friend, and of speaking to Moses face to face as a man speaketh with his friend; and of Christ on the night before his crucifixion telling his disciples that henceforth He would not call them servants, but friends. In the middle ages certain good men such as Nicholas, of Basle, and Tauler, of Strasbourg, took to themselves the title of "friends of God." It was a lofty assumption; but we can honour them in thus making their united protest against the rampant formalism and sacerdotalism of their time. It is very difficult to get a decent party name among Christians. There are those nowadays who call themselves "Friends," "Brethren," "Bible Christians," &c., as though they were the only people deserving of such appellations. This involves a kind of censure on Christians for adopting party names of any kind. But these men of the olden time to whom he had referred deserved to be held in reverence, all the more because of the shameful way in which they were treated by the merciless ecclesiastics of their time. All who own Jesus as Lord are his servants, but there is always an inner circle of the faithful and obedient servants whom the Master treats with more familiar confidence. Whatever may be said about "Apostolic Succession" (which is too delicate a topic to be discussed on an Evangelical Alliance platform), the thing set before us by the Apostles in the New Testament is that we should be their "followers," even as they followed and imitated Christ.

Dr. Fraser went on, briefly, but most profitably, to amplify the thought of close friendship with Christ on the part of his believing servants. He quoted some words of Erskine of Linlathen, written to his friend Bishop Ewing:—"I desire to know God, as really as I know a man, and far more so. It is not merely by my thoughts of Him that I am to be comforted; I expect an actual putting forth of his own hand, and a direct breathing of his love upon me." It is easy, said Dr. Fraser, to put aside words like these, and call them mystical. All real knowledge of God is mystic; it is in a high degree ineffable, but none the less real because you cannot argue about it or make it amenable to cold reason. It cannot be dragged through the dusty arena of controversy; but God does thus lay his hand on a man, and breathe upon him the spirit of his love. Friendly converse with the Lord does not belong to the hours when we have our minds sharpened by theological discussion, but to the hour of quiet thought, and of mental absorption, and of simple, childlike prayer. It belongs to those times of sore strain and temptation, or of sorrow. When we are cast down, behold He draws near, and our hearts begin to burn within us while He talks to us by the way. Among the Old Testament saints the mark of this friendship was a reverential tone of mind; they that fear the Lord have the secret of the Lord. In the New Testament it is a faithful obedience to Jesus Christ, as Lord and Master. "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." So the whole matter is lifted out of the region of mere sentiment into that of practical Christian obedience day by day. As a timely application of his subject, Dr. Fraser said that this communion with Christ must be evidenced in the communion of saints—of all saints, great and little. Here is an ample field for self-denial—a good old-fashioned virtue, seldom spoken of, and still more seldom practised nowadays.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 23.

Mr. Donald Matheson presided this morning over a very large company.

THE ANNUAL ADDRESS

was given by Rev. HUBERT BROOKE, of Reading, who took for his subject "The Head needing the Members," as set forth in 1 Cor. xii. 21. The Church of Christ, he said, had been mainly occupied in thinking of the need of the members, and of the supply for that need found in Christ the Head. There is another and equally important side of truth—the need that Christ has of each and all the members. This, indeed, is the nobler aspect of the Christian life—not its receptive but its responsive side. As Christians we are set free that we may serve; we receive only that we may give; we are made sons, that we may go and work in the vineyard. A study of our natural life shows us the truth of the simile here employed—the Head and the members. The head of the body can only carry out its will and purpose through the action of the members. So in the spiritual realm it is equally true. When on earth, Christ showed, on many occasions, his dependence on the action of those about Him for the carrying out of his wishes, and He is still carrying out this plan now that He has ascended on high. He has need of us, his members, and his work will never be done without us. "What wilt Thou have me to do?" ought to be the motto of our lives in all their varied departments. We have only to know what is his will concerning us to know what is our work. He wills primarily the salvation of every man, and if we are out of harmony with Him in this matter, we are not living truly as a member of his body. He says, "I am the light of the world," and again, "Ye are the light of the world." "Of the world!" And yet we appear to think that that light must be confined to one little bit of the habitable globe—Christian Europe, or enlightened England, or evangelical Cheltenham. We are to be his "witnesses"—telling out to others not our own will but his. In proportion as we do not thus witness for Him, the work remains undone or half done. To think that after eighteen centuries one half of the world has never even heard of the name of Jesus! Is it any wonder that the world laughs at the Church, or that the dark heathen world should send the cry: "Why have you not told us of this before?" Is there any one of us, as stewards of God, who has not wasted on himself what was meant for the world? If we had all hearkened to the Master's voice, probably there would be fewer of his members in this enlightened Cheltenham to-day; we should be away somewhere making known his will. Thank God there is the shed blood for the blotting out of our grevious sin and neglect of duty. Under the three figures of "yielding," "presenting," and "glorifying," Mr. Brooke further impressively expounded the conditions of submission and dependence and cleansing which the Lord demands of all his members. We cannot help our oneness in Christ; but, alas! we may hinder it. As we ever and anon rejoice in this oneness, let us not be forgetful of our stewardship of the manifold grace of God. Three things God cannot do, because He has to that extent limited Himself. He cannot lie; He cannot deny Himself; and He cannot say to his members, "I have no need of you."

To fix and deepen the impression of Mr. Brooke's very solemn and searching words, the company sang together in subdued tones, the hymn beginning and ending thus:—

Lord, speak to me that I may speak
In living echoes of thy tone;
As Thou hast sought so let me seek Thy erring children lost and lone.

O, use me Lord, use even me,
Just as Thou wilt, and when, and where,
Until thy blessed face I see,
Thy rest, thy joy, thy glory share.

Rev. G. E. THOMAS, of Bath, at this stage read the usual "Practical Resolutions" of the Alliance, urging the members, among other things, to constant forbearance and love in intercourse with others, to unceasing prayer, to gentleness in needful controversy, to watchfulness against occasions of strife, and to a deepened interest in foreign missions. In presenting these resolutions, Mr. Thomas said that in Bath they had adopted the plan of a monthly interchange of Christian communion, held at Established and Nonconformist churches alternately, on the occasion of their ordinary prayer-meetings. He said this was the best method he had known, and he commended it to Christians in other places.

THE ALLIANCE AND THE WORLD.

A paper on "The Evangelical Alliance in Relation to the Evangelisation of the World" was read by Rev. Dr. L. B. WHITE, of the Religious Tract Society. While not directly an evangelising institution, the Alliance, by its very name and nature, cannot be indifferent to that work. By showing the real unity of the Christian Church, it seeks to remove the great hindrance to Gospel effort that arises from divisions among Christians. The Alliance promotes united prayer, which is a great lever in uplifting the world that lieth in the wicked one. It has held and encouraged Christian Conferences, in different parts of Europe, for considering the religious condition of these countries. Its action in procuring and promoting religious liberty, where that principle is infringed, is a potent help in furthering the progress of the Gospel. By its defence and exposition of the revealed Scriptures, the Alliance has likewise nobly served the cause of bringing that saving message of the Gospel to bear on those who are yet in ignorance of it. In the close of his paper Dr. White forcibly remarked on the wonderful manifestation of diversity in unity afforded by the hymnology of the churches, which contains richly prized contributions from writers attached to so many sections of the one Church.

MR. ARNOLD'S REPORT.

The interesting proceedings of the morning were concluded in the reading, by Mr. A. J. Arnold, one of the secretaries, of an abstract of the year's Report. His statement was heard and received with much sympathetic interest. The following is a brief but comprehensive epitome, kindly furnished by the secretary:—

PROGRESS AT HOME.

Nearly 700 new members have been enrolled during the year by the British Council. The two secretaries have visited over fifty towns in Great Britain where meetings on behalf of the Alliance have been held, as well as in many districts of the Metropolis. The Council give their hearty thanks to friends throughout the country who have opened their houses for drawing-room meetings. Several new local auxiliaries have been formed in the provinces, and these, with some of the older branches, hold regular meetings for prayer and conference, which are much appreciated.

UNIVERSAL WEEK OF PRAYER.

The invitation and programme of subjects for each day during the first week in the year, issued in the name of the British and foreign organisations of the Evangelical Alliance is now accepted by evangelical Christians generally and in all countries. The document, published in immense numbers in English, is sent into all parts of the earth and is translated into a great variety of languages and dialects. At home there has been a great extension of the observance of the week, but the multiplicity of meetings in large towns has in some instances lessened the attendances. In foreign lands, and especially among missionaries and native converts, the Week of Prayer is anticipated with great interest annually, and the observance is often followed by revivals of religion.

FOREIGN BRANCHES.

There has been a considerable development of the Evangelical Alliance on the American continent during the year—in the United States, Canada, and South America. Energetic action has been taken by the United States Branch against the Romish aggressions in regard to education, and special efforts are being made to reach the non-church-going portion of the community, by the co-operation of ministers and laymen of all denominations. The Dominion Branch, too, has made special efforts to counteract the insidious advances of the Jesuits, especially in Quebec; and in this it has been heartily supported by evangelical Christians throughout Canada. Great national conferences of the Alliance have been held both in the United States and Canada during the past year.

DEPUTATIONS TO THE CONTINENT.

The Hon. and Rev. E. V. Bligh is thanked for the valuable service he has rendered in again visiting Austria and Bohemia to make inquiries as to certain cases of religious intolerance. The secretary (Mr. Arnold) was deputed by the Council to visit Spain in the spring. En route he held meetings on behalf of the Alliance at various places in the Riviéra and at Marseilles. In Spain he visited the principal centres of evangelical work, including Barcelona, Seville, Cadiz, Malaga, Gibraltar, San Sebastian, and Madrid. In all these places united meetings were held, and he had the opportunity of expounding the principles and the work of the Alliance. A new branch of the Evangelical Alliance was organised in Madrid for Spain.

PARIS EXHIBITION.

Instead of building a hall, as on former occasions of Paris Exhibitions, the Council arranged this year to co-operate with Rev. Dr. McAll, who undertook the initiative in providing a Salle Evangélique just outside the entrance to the Exposition, in the Avenue Rapp. Towards the cost (about £750) the Council guaranteed £250. A further sum of £100 was expended by the Council in bringing Italian and Spanish pastors to Paris for evangelistic work among their respective countrymen.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY

The efforts of the Alliance on behalf of persecuted and oppressed Christians in many lands are continued and the results of the past year's labours have been very gratifying. In Turkey there is frequently more or less infringement of the religious liberty guaranteed to all subjects of the Porte. Representations are made by the Council to Her Majesty's Government, who then instruct the British Ambassador at the Porte to investigate and use his best influence in favour of religious liberty. Thus Nicolaki Effendi—imprisoned for many months on account of his religion—was released. A school teacher at Erzroom (Siklemian)—after being imprisoned about twelve months, and sentenced to perpetual banishment—was liberated and restored to his freedom. The happy result in these and other similar cases is due to the blessing of God upon the efforts of the Alliance.

In Russia, the persecution of Lutheran Christians in the Baltic Provinces continues, notwithstanding the astounding statement of M. Pobedonoszeff, High Procureur of the Holy Synod of the Greek Church, that Russia is the only country where religious liberty is fully understood.

In Spain and Portugal there have been several cases of petty persecution, and some even worse cases of religious intolerance. A Protestant Chapel at Criptana has been, and is still, closed by the arbitrary conduct of the Alcalde, who affirms that the Gospel services will lead to riot. A poor man in Portugal has been sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment for refusing to take off his cap to a cross carried at a funeral. The publicity given to this case seems to have prevented the sentence being, so far, carried out.

Canon RIPLEY closed the meeting in very earnest and heartfelt petition that the lessons of the hour might be firmly fixed in every mind.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

In the afternoon meeting for open conference, Sir GEORGE MALCOLM presided, when the subject of Missions was taken up and considered. The Chairman alluded, in some brief introductory words, to the overwhelming needs of the heathen world, and to the fact that progress in this great work is the true test of the health and strength of the Christian Churches.

Rev. PHILIP COLBORNE, of Birmingham, spoke of the Scriptural principles on which the Protestant evangelical missions are based. Success has everywhere followed this fidelity to revealed truth. Referring specially to Africa, the speaker feelingly referred to the fact that the late Dr. Mullens, secretary of the London Missionary Society, first proposed the founding of a chain of mission stations across Central Africa—not by one Society, but to be shared in by several. This idea was carried out, and it was at one of the stations of the Church Missionary Society that he breathed his last, when visiting Africa in furtherance of his project. The concord and unity of spirit shown by missionaries of different churches in foreign fields, are a striking illustration of the distinguishing principles of this Alliance, and is a grand spectacle to the world. In a reference to the great Missionary Convention of last year in London, Mr. Colborne said that the reports of that Conference contain some of the best reading that is in the possession of the Christian Church. He threw out the suggestion that deputations from the Evangelical Alliance should pay visits to some of those communities in foreign lands that have been created by the preaching of the Gospel, to encourage and strengthen them in their fight with surrounding evils.

Pastor BLUETT, of the Savoy Mission, pleaded the cause of this Department, with its population of some half a million, and only three Protestant pastors, and as many colporteurs. He spoke specially of what might be done by consecrated Christian ladies working among the people in a quiet way. He told of what has been already accomplished by several English ladies who took up their residence near the Lake of Geneva in working among the children, soldiers, and others, as occasion offered. There has been a good deal of opposition from the priests, but the work has been blessed with conversions. It is greatly desired that at least two fresh lady workers should go out from England to extend this quiet effort, so much needed in a dark Popish district.

INDIA.

Rev. A. R. CAVALIER, a returned Indian missionary, gave some very encouraging facts as to the progress of missions in Tinnevelly. A passing word of praise was given to the Tamil Coolie Mission in Ceylon, which has been worked on Evangelical Alliance lines for thirty years, and in which there has never, in all that time, been a single hitch from the composite character of the committee. In this mission Mr. Cavalier worked; and the Gospel is preached, through it, to about 280,000 coolies a month. In the face of the great mass of heathenism, missionaries cannot afford to waste time in denominational squabbles. As to India proper, not only is the field immense, but the difficulties are very great. The Government do not permit the Bible to be even an optional book in the public schools, and the missionaries think that is a very cruel arrangement. A man who occupied a position of great eminence in a heathen temple told the speaker on one occasion that he not only knew the Bible well, but believed in its truth; that he was a secret disciple, and so were many more, and that at the proper time they would declare themselves openly on the side of Christ. A most pathetic appeal was made by Mr. Cavalier on behalf of the forty millions of women imprisoned in Indian zenanas and kept in the densest ignorance of the saving message of the Gospel. English ladies were entreated to have compassion on their down-trodden Indian sisters, and to give themselves to the work of carrying to them the Gospel of light and liberty. Nothing but this Gospel can ever break down these darkening zenana walls. His earnest words made a deep impression on the hearers, and we trust some womanly Christian hearts were touched so as to respond to his appeal.

Rev. P. W. JORDAN, of Drayton, Banbury, after a passing reference to the needs and claims of China (which would have been pressed home by Mr. Hudson Taylor if the state of his health had enabled him to attend) described a visit he paid some years ago to mission stations in South Africa. One interesting fact related to an interview he had with the Christian Kaffir chief Khama, who asked him, every time he addressed an English audience, to say that the best thing they could send to Africa was more missionaries.

In the open conference that followed, Mr. Donald Matheson noted the periodical meetings in London of missionary secretaries as an indication of growing union in missionary work. Rev. George Piercy, for thirty years a missionary in China, put in a very urgent plea for the evangelisation of that great people, especially the women of China. Another friend on the platform told of a Christian lady who could not go to the field herself, but subscribed £100 a year for the support of a deputy. Rev. J. La Trobe, of the Moravian Mission, made mention of Chinese Thibet, not yet opened to Christian missions. Last week, he said, the mission ship Harmony returned from Labrador, for the one hundred and twentieth time, in safety, and God's goodness in connection with that vessel ought not to be forgotten. General Hutchinson said there were many earnest young men ready to go out as missionaries, and there must be greater elasticity in our methods of equipping and sending out workers. General Martyr alluded to the persecution of the Salvationists at Whitchurch, Hants, which he attributed to the opposition of the publicans; he thought the friends of the Alliance ought to intervene, with the view of staying this discreditable persecution.

The Assembly Rooms, though the largest available meeting-place in the town, were inadequate to the great pressure at the evening meeting, so wide-spread was the interest awakened. In presiding over the crowded gathering, Baron DE FERRIERES said he had not seen such gatherings in Cheltenham for a number of years; he hoped it would not be the last visit the Alliance Conference would pay to the place.

ROMANISM IN CANADA.

On this timely topic an address was given by Rev. F. H. MARLING, of Montreal. It is not pleasant, he premised, to speak against anybody, but in this world there is a great deal of fighting to be done. He went on to read a "succinct and complete" sketch of the present state of the current controversy on the "Jesuits Estates Act" in the Dominion. The Jesuits, in an early stage of their career in Canada, cleverly secured in various ways thousands of acres of land; at the Conquest this property was confiscated to the Crown, and appropriated for purposes of education. The Pope, however, continued to claim it. In 1888 the Premier of the Province of Quebec (to which the property had been assigned by the Dominion) took the matter in hand, in view of the sale of the property. The Premier referred the matter to the Pope, setting aside the rightful sovereign for the wearer of the triple crown; and, no doubt, if this move succeeds, it will be made a precedent as to property confiscated in England in former days. The price of £80,000 to be paid to the Pope was agreed on, and the Act embodying the transaction was passed through the provincial Parliament without much trouble, so weak and apathetic is the Protestant representation. The Romanists indeed are so active in the work of bringing the State into subjection to the Church, that Quebec is rapidly becoming a temporal appanage of the See of Rome. Appeal was made by the Protestants to the Dominion Parliament, but it decided that the matter was one for the Provincial legislature. Matters are yet in process, and probably the ultimate appeal will be to the Queen in Council. This state of affairs ought to be well known to Protestant English Christians. Mr. Marling closed by a strenuous appeal to his fellow believers in this country to be on their guard against the machinations of Rome which never abates one jot of its claims, and which knows how to bide its time. The yoke of Rome has happily been cast off in this land, but she stands ready to put it on again. We want more backbone all along the line. If we demand this of men in high places, it must be supplied from below; that is, by everyone of us. Let us resolve to give place by subjection not for an hour to that relentless power which is ever seeking to overthrow our freedom and our faith.

Mr. Marling's vigorous exposure of Romish tactics across the sea was warmly applauded, as were some endorsing remarks by the next speaker, Rev. Dr. CLEMANCE, of Croydon. It was a somewhat singular coincidence that the special subject entrusted to Dr. Clemance was one dealing with the spiritual side of the same great Romish controversy. It was—

GOD'S PEOPLE, A ROYAL PRIESTHOOD.

Among the assertions which evangelical Protestants have been compelled by the controversies of the times to reiterate, is this: That the sacrificial priesthood no longer exists among men; that it has had no place since the Lord Jesus Christ caused the sacrifice and the oblation to cease; that there now exists only the priesthood of the Son of God and the common priesthood of all believers. Whether Christian people generally clearly understand what it is for them to be "priests unto God," he was by no means sure. Perhaps, indeed, the offensive claims of an encroaching officialism have created such disgust at the very word "priest" that some will not even look at all into its meaning. And yet it is clear that as the word "priest" has borne an official sense, so it now stands in the New Testament bearing an unofficial sense. If we wish to gain power against a spurious priesthood, we must be prepared to point out what the New Testament priesthood is, and to show that it is such that, were it fairly and fully manifested, it would leave no necessity, no pretence, no room for the usurpations of modern Christendom.

But unless we are greatly mistaken, evangelical Protestants have yet everything to do in this direction. We know volumes by the hundred in which the writers have spent their strength in demolishing the claims of a Roman or Anglican priesthood: we can scarcely call to mind as many pages devoted to the building up of the doctrine of the true Christian priesthood. And yet, surely this needs to be done. If the rubbish is taken away, the ground is cleared, that a temple may rise thereon.

THE LEVITICAL PRIESTHOOD.

Tracing the past meaning of the word "priest," Dr. Clemance showed that in patriarchal times every man was priest in his own house; in Israel, before the institution of that of Aaron, there was a priesthood, as stated in Exod. xix. 22: "Let the priests also, which come near to the Lord, sanctify themselves." But on the very day this command was given, the grand national consecration of Israel as a kingdom of priests was also declared. That nation was a priesthood for the world; within it there was to be a priesthood for the nation. and thus, under the law, the priesthood came, for the purposes of a high and holy teaching, to be restricted. There was a retrogression, for a while, from freedom to bonds. One tribe in the nation was selected to handle Divine things; out of the tribe one family; out of the family one individual, who should enter the Holy of Holies, that but once a year, and not without blood. So great was the honour and the weight of the priestly position, with its many and wide duties, that no one might take this honour unto himself, but he that was called of God. What representative men could be or do to help the people towards God and the right, towards purity, bravery, and truth, all that was charged upon one or other of the priests.

The law has given place to the Gospel. The Gospel has not destroyed the law, but rather fulfilled it. God has changed forms, but not principles. The one great High Priest who has passed through the heavens alone embodies in Himself in perfect form all that the priest can be; and in the sacrificial part thereof, as an offering for sin, his work stands, and ever must stand, peerless and alone. "By one offering He hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified." But yet, as Israel was to be a kingdom of priests, so are believers now. What does that mean? The phrase "priests unto God"

MARKS A DISTINCTION.

John gives the individual aspect of it, and Peter the collective. As the latter thus addresses believers "scattered abroad," the conclusion is that the honour which was once conferred typically on Israel as a nation, now belongs to the entire body of believers. The distinction is broader, for it includes all regenerated souls; narrower, for it includes only regenerated souls. The distinction belongs to all who are "alive unto God." The "official" priesthood has gone. No man can make one of God's priests. They are created by a new birth, by the Spirit of God alone. They are all cleansed with the blood of the Lamb. They have on the fine linen which is the righteousness of saints. They yield their bodies a living sacrifice to God.

The phrase also points out a privilege. All men are God's, as the creatures of his power; these "priests" are his, as the children of his grace. They have access to God; while the multitude stand in the outer court, these come into the holiest of all, by a new and living way. Not the Pope of Rome can get nearer than that. Moreover, these share with the Lord Jesus Christ the government of the world; they are a royal priesthood. The phrase indicates a trust. This is, perhaps, the most important feature of all. Now, as of old, God reaches some through others. Priests are not for their own honour, but for others' service.

In the highest sense, there is but one Mediator between God and men. Yet, in a sense forgotten to a mournful extent, Christians are appointed pleaders, intercessors with God. In heaven is the Father, whom the world knoweth not. Before us is the world, lying in wickedness. Betwixt them stands the believer, that with one hand stretched out towards the world, he may plead with men for God; that, with another hand uplifted to heaven, he may plead with God for men.

GUARDIANS OF THE TRUTH.

Christians, as God's priests, are also depositaries and guardians of God's truth. Saints are put in trust with the Gospel. Christ is the ensign for the nations, and we are to hold aloft that ensign that the world may flock to the standard of Immanuel. Yea, as God's priests, we have to sound the battle cry; and for the defence of the faith, to summon each other to the holy war. As priests, religious sacrifice and ritual are ours. We have to offer up spiritual sacrifices. What are these? An Apostle tells us that pure religious ritual is to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep ourselves unspotted from the world. Oh! if all believers would rise to this, we should want no newly appointed order of St. James; we should, indeed, have an order of St. James appointed by God; we should have no such appointment by man as is now suggested, to meet the needs of the age. Christianity can dispense with sensuous adornments. It sees the deep, deep need of man, to which such gaudy show is an affront, a mockery, a snare. As God's priests, the cause of God's love and righteousness is ours. We are to be God's mouthpiece to the people who care not for Him. Only those who love God's cause, can uphold it; but they can, and will, for they are endowed with the Holy Ghost, and anointed for this.

Dr. Clemance showed that no man ever was a priest for himself alone; so Christians are Christians, not for themselves only, but for others. Charles Kingsley once said: "I am nothing, if I am not a priest." We know what he meant by that. We ought to say: "I am nothing if, as a priest unto God, I cannot help my brother man towards God and Christ and heaven." When believers fully act out their priesthood, it will be seen to be the only priesthood the world needs.

In a much-applauded passage Dr. Clemance declared that, if we were dependent, as Rome teaches, on the presence of a priest for giving us "the body and blood of the Lord," what starvelings we should be! Thank God, Christ Himself lives to give us the whole of his atoning sacrifice; and we want no priests to pretend to give absolution when they cannot know who is truly penitent, and, if they did, have no authority or power to give it. In conclusion, the speaker urged that it is high time that, instead of merely asking, "Am I safe?" we should ask in desperate earnestness, "What am I doing to save another?"

The closing address of the evening was a very brief one, by Rev. Dr. Culross, of Bristol, on "Religious Controversy;" we have given it on a preceding page. We regret that the time did not allow of Dr. Culross enlarging in greater detail on a subject so important at the present time, and one which he is so well fitted to expound. As it is, the address is worthy of being committed to memory by every Christian apologist and defender of the faith.

(To be concluded in our next.)

HON. & REV. CAPTAIN MORETON.

Dear Sir,—Our city has lately been favoured with a visit from Rev. Captain Moreton, a servant of the Lord well known to your readers from his long connection with Mildmay. He gave a series of Bible-readings twice daily, at Erskine Church, and also at the noon meetings of the Y.M.C.A., besides preaching twice on Sunday. His faithful testimony to the awakening power of God's Word, inculcating the separation of believers, and denouncing prevailing worldliness in the churches, was outspoken and effective.

It is so long since our city has been favoured with such evangelistic teaching, that it seemed almost like a new phase of truth, and several that heard it, having got a taste of the corn and wine, will not be easily satisfied with the prevailing husks. He made some scathing references to the employment of worldlings as leaders of spiritual song, as if God's ear could be tickled with pleasant sounds, where there is no melody in the heart. Altogether, the teaching was most searching and faithful, and we look forward anxiously to his promised return at an early day.

A letter just received from Hamilton, Ont., states that "Mr. Moreton's preaching there is effecting a sort of revolution through his bold stand against prevailing evils."

DEACON ABRAHAM IN SORROW.

Writing from Ooroomiah, Persia, to an English friend, Deacon Abraham speaks of some of the many difficulties with which he has of late had to contend. He says:—"Since the Spring I have received hardly any help from any quarter, but the work still continues, and I have yet courage to carry it on, with the Lord's help. My letters from English friends have been short, so I have not had the comfort which I could desire. Now another trial has been added: the Lord has taken from me my dear wife. She departed this life on Sunday, September 22. From the first she helped me in my Christian work, but some years ago, through exposure to cold, she took a malady from which she did not cease to suffer. Until two weeks before her death, she never was known to complain, although she had long been very ill.

"Toward the end she sent a message to a sister in the Lord, in these terms: 'Tell her that, owing to my invalid condition, and many duties, I have not been able to do the work which I otherwise would have done, but I have stretched out my hand to my Lord's garment, and have got a fast hold. I have a firm hope in Him.' Then she repeated Psalm xxiii., and we all rejoiced. All our days—thirty-five years—seem to have gone as a dream. Pray for us all, that this trial may be consecrated to us, and that we may be more useful than ever in the Lord's vineyard."

MR. RICHARD WEAVER is still in a very weak state of health. Mr. Reginald Weaver writes:—"Would you thank all friends who have so kindly remembered my father at different times, and ask for a continuance of their united prayers to God on his behalf?"

LONDON FLOWER GIRLS.

In the form of an illustrated pamphlet, Mr. J. A. Groom, hon. superintendent of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission, issues his twenty-third annual report. The cut flower trade of London alone now averages between £5000 and £6000 a day, and probably some 2000 women and girls are employed in the traffic. One chief aim of the Mission is to remove from the streets those who promise to turn out well when removed from evil surroundings. Between thirty and forty such are being trained in the Flower Girl Brigade, which teaches the art of making artificial flowers. Altogether 700 have passed through that Brigade into situations of usefulness. "It is also desired to give more attention to children in the future, and this department is represented by the proposed scheme for providing an Orphans' Home, in which the waifs and strays of the begging, or flower-selling class, and also those belonging to abandoned persons, may be trained for God and usefulness." So impressed are the committee with the importance of this scheme, which will require £1000 to inaugurate it, that they call it the missing link, the want of which has been felt for years.

Until a recent date, the girls were exposed to much suffering, as well as inconvenience, by having no available shelter in the early morning market save the public-house. Now, however, the club-room at Covent Garden is intensely appreciated; for girls are not only able to wait in comfort and to arrange their flowers, each receives a mug of cocoa with bread and butter, besides some good words from the missionary on their highest interests. Then, both by day and by night, the girls are befriended, as circumstances may require while at work in the streets. And, in case of sickness or distress, the Bible-woman visits them in any part of London. The "Emily" Loan Fund continues to assist a large number, while, in urgent cases, a new basket with a little stock will be given to save a poor flower-seller from despair.

The work naturally shows a tendency to grow, and hence another enterprise is in prospect, which it is thought would be well-nigh self-supporting, "A Home for Virtuous Working Girls," in which, at a cost within their means, they might enjoy that social fellowship which does so much to form and develop character, as well as the other advantages of a Christian home. There would necessarily be an outlay at the start, but little or nothing afterwards.

In Clerkenwell they are surrounded by the poorest of the poor, and by such multitudes of children that there are ten large stations of the School Board within half a mile of the Mission house. Hence the halfpenny dinners, the warm garments, and more especially the breakfast to scholars, who otherwise would go famishing to their lessons, are greatly appreciated. In addition to all this, the purely evangelistic work of the Mission is thoroughly sustained. There is a large Sunday-school; there is open-air preaching on Clerkenwell-green; the common lodging-houses are visited; while the ever-fresh attractiveness of the simple Gospel is delightfully proved by the crowded services at Foresters' Hall, where Mr. Groom preaches every Sunday evening.

The Mission is thus as many sided as it is successful; and the appeal of Mr. Groom and his committee may be summed up in the words: "To thousands of young creatures this is the day of salvation, and the Committee pray that their hands may be strengthened to extend the Lord's kingdom among these poor women, so that they may be pillars in the house of the Lord instead of agents of evil."

The Victoria House of Assembly has resolved to make the teaching of Dr. Ridge's and Dr. Richardson's temperance manuals compulsory in State schools.

TRANSATLANTIC JOTTINGS.

HE many readers of THE CHRISTIAN who have llowed us with their prayers will be cheered what we have seen and heard of the Lord's ork on this side of the Atlantic. In New ork we began special meetings the day after nding, and saints as well as sinners were essed, as night by night the precious story of deeming love was told out to those who crow- ed in to hear it. One afternoon we preached in he Toombs (the city prison), and, while we felt to be a great privilege to preach to nearly hree hundred prisoners, we also felt it to be a olemn time, as we knew that all our audience ere listening to the Gospel, in their lonely ells, behind iron bars, and that at least seven- een were supposed to be murderers, while some ere under sentence of death. In spite of bounding iniquity, we were cheered beyond neasure to see the aggressive work that is arried on in New York. The Y.M.C.A. is preading out all over the city with its new ranches, and there seems to be an increasing esire to cope with the powers of darkness, and o hold up a living Christ to the perishing nasses all around.

Nearly thirty hours' ride brought us to the Stratford Home in Canada West, where we ound a hearty welcome from Miss Macpherson nd her devoted band of helpers. Friends on he other side who have helped this work have ut little idea perhaps of what goes on year fter year. Those little waifs are not simply escued from dens of infamy and brought cross the Atlantic; but (what I venture to hink is quite as important) they are visited nd looked after constantly, which means often ong, lonely, and wearisome rides for the workers. In Stratford, I had the joy of preaching three times on the Sunday, and twice each day during the week. We rejoiced that some of the first who came out on the Lord's side were elder boys and girls from the Home.

On reaching Toronto, I found that our dear friend, Mr. Gooderham, with whom I was to have stayed, had been called home. He was "a good man and full of the Holy Ghost," and his work for God will be long remembered. For nearly ten days I have been holding meetings in the Christian Institute (a building erected by Mr. Gooderham). The Lord is doing wonderful things. The place is filled nightly, many are deeply anxious about their souls, and numbers are pressing into the kingdom. Last night scores seemed to be under deep conviction of sin, and till a late hour, workers were engaged pointing them to the Lord Jesus. The afternoon Bible lectures, attended by workers from all denominations, are proving times of refreshing. There is a most blessed work going on among the prisoners in gaol in this city. Each Sunday a band of consecrated workers hold a "Sunday-school" among the prisoners; they are formed into classes, the Gospel is told out in all its fulness, and the Lord has wonderfully owned the message.

Last Sunday week Mr. Weaver and myself addressed them, and the Lord gave much power with the word. An after-meeting was called, conducted by Mr. Howland (the ex-Mayor of the city) in another part of the prison. Nearly the whole of the congregation came to it, and it was one of the most glorious meetings I was ever in. Over forty I should think came out to be prayed for, and the place was a perfect "Bochim." Many of those who came out to be prayed for went back to their cells new creatures in Christ Jesus. Not a few afterwards thanked God that they went to prison to get converted. I could not help saying as I left that scene that I longed for the day when every English prison should be opened for Christians to work among the prisoners as they do on this side. I know of nothing to prevent it; for while there is the most perfect freedom in working in these prisons, the strictest discipline is preserved.

Many of your readers will be glad to know that Mr. Leonard Weaver is regaining strength, and began last night a mission in the east part of this city; God is working, and there is every prospect of a shower of blessing. I leave in the course of a few days for the far West, hoping to reach Missouri and probably Montana. We shall be glad of the prayers of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN in England during our short stay in this country. CHARLES INGLIS.

THE GOSPEL IN AUSTRIA.

ABOUT a fortnight before he was called away, that beloved and revered father in Christ, the late Dr. A. N. Somerville, dictated a long and loving letter to the Christian workers in a large provincial city in Austria, in whose dwelling he delivered two most powerful Gospel addresses during his stay of a fortnight in the city, in the winter of 1887. His interest in the work there, and especially in the converts who were invited to a social meeting, was very great, and he expressed it by frequent letters of inquiry and sympathy, as well as by using his influence to obtain pecuniary aid for the sustenance of evangelistic effort in this dark land. Shortly after this visit the Doctor wrote: "An idea of the spiritual condition of the people of these lands may be gathered from the fact that on the occasion of my pointed inquiry, I found that of the thirteen persons who met me, eleven had never seen a copy of the Scriptures till they were brought in contact with evangelistic services."

In his last letter, received only a few days before the news of his death reached Austria, he encouraged the workers to persevere in spite of all difficulties, in carrying on and extending efforts which the Lord has greatly blessed, but of which, for obvious reasons, no particulars can be published. The distribution of tracts, and the colportage of the Scripture being surrounded with so many restrictions as to become almost impossible, it has suggested itself to the workers to make use of the post for spreading light in the darkness, as many years ago was done in Spain before religious liberty blessed that land. It is greatly desired during the coming winter to post to addresses gathered during the summer, copies of the New Testament, and of such Gospel literature as is suited to the spiritual condition of the recipients. Are there any British Christians willing to help in spreading such Gospel literature among a people who thankfully receive and read the good tidings, who are weary of the superstitions and foolish legends which form their only mental and spiritual food? Quite recently a woman who had received a New Testament exclaimed, in the words of the hymn she had heard sung at a Bible-reading, "The half was not told me. Oh, why do not our priests tell us these good things? It seems to me since I have this book, that I have only just begun to live. Before I was like a heathen, or a beast that perisheth, but I am thankful that God let me get this book before it was too late." Testimonies might be multiplied, but space fails.

The workers are well known to Mr. J. E. Mathieson, Conference Hall, Mildmay, and to Mr. Gawin Kirkham, of the Open-air Mission, Duke-street, Adelphi, London.

WEST MARYLEBONE.—The quarterly gathering of Christian workers was held at St. James's Hall, George-street, Lisson-grove, on Tuesday, October 22. Mr. James Sprunt, the superintendent, stated that 181 services had been held during the past three months. Various friends gave addresses.

COME AND REST.

TIRED by labour and toil and pain,
To go through life's duties again and again;
The heart grows weary beneath the load,
And sighs on its way o'er the toilsome road.

Fain would it look for a friend and guide,
To whom it could fully its troubles confide;
At whose sweet voice its mourning would cease,
And find in him always its comfort and peace.

Hush, weary heart, and shed not thy tears,
There is One who knoweth thy griefs and thy fears;
Said He on earth, with compassionate smile,
"Come aside to the desert and rest for awhile."

Go to the desert, and sit by his side,
Pour out thy sorrow, and nought from Him hide;
List to Him calmly, bathe in his smile
Thy fever-racked forehead; go, rest for awhile.

Yes, rest for the weary through life's long day;
Rest for the traveller, sweet rest by the way;
Rest for the toiling one in the noontide;
Rest for the mourner—rest at his side.

A GREAT NEED AT GIBRALTAR.

MISS C. HANBURY, who has recently spent a short time with Christian workers at Gibraltar, writes:—"Adjoining the Soldiers' Mission Home, Europa Main-road, Gibraltar, is a music-house, which is a source of great evil; as a snare to the sailors and soldiers, it causes much trouble and sin. When the fleet comes into the new mole close by, there is no place but this public-house whither the sailors can resort for refreshment. Each man has forty-eigh hours' leave of absence, but there is scarcely a place in which they can sleep. The soldiers also have no refreshment place besides the public-house.

"The Soldiers' Mission Home greatly needs a bar and some more rooms, so that the men may refresh themselves without taking intoxicants. The public house can be bought for £800, and it is the earnest desire of the friends of the soldiers that it may be secured, and its evil influence be discontinued. With the public-house added, the Mission premises would be much more useful, and accommodation could be provided or Christian intercourse among the men."

DR. BAEDEKER IN RUSSIA.

DEAR SIR,—Several attacks of Kaukasian fever, and other adverse circumstances, have caused me to prayerfully revise my plans for Transkaukasia (Erivan, Kars, &c.), and it seems clear to me that I should abstain from visiting these places, and the more sustain the Armenian brethren by prayer and practical sympathy. My way will therefore be shortened, and, God willing, I may be found at Moskow by the time letters can reach me again.

The work going on among the Armenians is of the most encouraging character. The Lord is owning their efforts among the surrounding Mohammedans. A whole tribe of Mohammedans have lately made their escape from Persia and settled in Achsabad, where they want to be free from Mohammedan bondage, and to worship God according to the light they have received through intercourse with Christian missionaries. "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord." "One soweth, another reapeth."—Ever in Gospel bonds, yours sincerely,

Shemachah, Oct. 12. F. W. BAEDEKER.

Hammersmith Conference.

THE Conference of Christians, originated at Hammersmith two years ago, met last week for the third time. Those who attended its sittings in past years have testified to the exceeding benefit they have derived from it. The results this year, it is believed, will be fully equal to those of former years.

The Conference commenced on the afternoon of Monday, October 21, when ministers alone met for prayer and spiritual communion. Among them were Revs. Professor Agar Beet, W. Roberts, W. Page, A. Norris, J. Branwhile French, W. Slack, J. Kennedy, W. Edwards, J. Sanders, A. R. Shrewsbury, R. Macbeth, W. V. Robinson (Bournemouth); J. Calvert, &c. In addition to these, at subsequent meetings, either as members or visitors, came Revs. Henry Simon, C. S. Horne, Dr. Newth, J. Cumming Brown, C. A. Lyon, J. P. Clarke, J. E. Shepherd, Mr. G. D. Freeman, Dr. Weymouth, and others.

After a few pointed earnest words from Rev. W. Roberts, who presided, Professor BEET spoke. While insisting on a bright and happy experience of the favour of God, he deprecated such a religion as expended itself in a mere exuberance of feeling. This address was followed by a general conversation, a number of brethren also offering prayer.

On Monday evening there was a united Conference of ministers and office-bearers of churches. Two helpful papers on "The relation between official work and personal piety" were read by Dr. Weymouth and Dr. Newth. It was maintained in the subsequent conversation that the manifold experiences of a minister or office-bearer in the fulfilment of his duties should not hinder but help the life God in his soul. Official work should develop the Christian graces, and make the worker stronger and bolder in the faith. The presence and blessing of the Lord were realised in this meeting, and many felt moved to seek a more thorough devotedness to Christ and his work, and to keep with a strict fidelity the solemn trust committed to them.

HOLY GHOST POWER.

The subject of Conference on Tuesday afternoon was "Personal Experience in Relation to the Renewing of the Holy Ghost." Rev. J. DODSWORTH spoke forcibly on the general operation of the Holy Spirit in the world as distinct from the direct operation of the Spirit as bearing on personal life in Christ. Rev. J. P. CLARKE insisted on the Holy Spirit being an abiding presence and power in the heart of believers, in spite of manifold failings and even sins.

In further consideration of the subject, some of the speakers manifested a slight difference of opinion with Mr. Clarke in some of his positions; but, with further re-statement and modification, it was found that there was a general agreement, all maintaining that the fruits of the Spirit would be revealed in the life when the Holy Ghost was in the heart.

HOME RELIGION.

The specialty of the Conference was, perhaps, the practical application of religion to the personal and home life of believers. This was distinctly brought out at the Tuesday evening meeting, when the first subject was "Home Religion." Mr. W. COATES, who presided, testified to the influence of a godly home upon the whole of his life. Rev. J. CALVERT said the kingdom of God on earth would consist ultimately, not of a vast ecclesiastical corporation, but of sanctified homes, where every member and every arrangement harmonised with the will of Christ. There are homes now that are fountains of purity and charity; but in many professedly Christian homes religion is practically disregarded. It is the avoided topic, and the Christian education of the children is not attempted. Yet life's choicest blessing is found in a truly Christian home. As to the claims of home on busy men, no father should abdicate the functions of fatherhood and priesthood in his own home.

An admirable paper, by Rev. A. R. SHREWSBURY, dealt with the subject chiefly in its bearing on masters and servants. He said masters and mistresses should remember their house was the only home for the time being that their servants had, and that this should induce due consideration for them. While deprecating attempts at the abolition of social distinctions, an earnest plea was put in for the recognition of every sphere of duty as equally the appointment of God. Home religion should be made intensely real, bright, and glowing. Christian parents were urged to speak candidly and faithfully with their children about the temptations and perils, both moral and spiritual, to which they are exposed, and from which they can be securely shielded only by a personal trust in the Redeemer.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

Rev. W. V. ROBINSON, of Bournemouth, took up the second part of the evening's subject: "The Observance of the Lord's Day," especially on the part of Christians. He asked whether Christians had a true and worthy ideal of the Christian Sabbath, and whether they sought to live up to it. The day should be devoted, as far as possible, to the worship and service of Christ, and not made into a day of leisure, or of self-indulgence. There are ways of spending it that may not be sinful, but are inconsistent with a high Christian ideal. The Lord's Day is one of most hallowed and delightful associations, and Christians would find great spiritual good in consecrating it to the highest uses.

WINNING SOULS.

On Wednesday afternoon the Conference advanced from the consideration of the personal Christian life and its bearings on the home and trade to the specific duty of seeking to win souls to Christ and the means of success. Mr. G. D. FREEMAN (chairman) opened the subject by pointing out that God had provided all necessary means for man's salvation; such was the part of the Church to apply the means. This responsibility was itself a privilege. Rev. HENRY SIMON spoke of aggressive work as being the duty of the whole Church as such, and not only that of ministers, office-bearers, and other distinctive workers. With great urgency of persuasion he insisted on the Churches realising their duty.

Rev. J. BRANWHILE FRENCH spoke of the bearings of the subject on the individual worker. The worker could help others to be better men if he were better himself. How few who "profess and call themselves Christians" rise to Christian attainments, or give themselves heart and soul to Christian service. Because Christians do not realise the duty of winning souls, many are unsought and unsaved. Mr. French proceeded to point out how soul-winning might best be done; it must be in a loving and wise way, and with continual prayer for Divine influence to attend the human endeavour. He followed these points with illustrative incidents, taken first from the manner of Christ in winning souls, and then in the case of some of his servants, instancing the peculiar success of men like the late Dr. Wilson, of Bombay, with the Hindoos, and "the good James Rowland, of Henley," with people of various ranks.

The subject, in various aspects, was taken up by other speakers, and earnest prayer followed.

A closing service of communion was held on Wednesday evening, Rev. J. CUMMING BROWN presiding. Rev. J. Slack (who acted as one of the secretaries) gave first a resumé of the Conference at its successive sittings. Then followed an admirable address by Rev. A. Norris, founded on the words "The love of Christ constraineth us" (2 Cor. v. 14). It was well fitted to foster the spirit of communion which, as the closing act of fellowship, was most refreshing and stimulating.

Letters to the Editor.

THE ATTIRE OF CHRISTIAN WOMEN.

DEAR SIR,—My note has reference to a subject that has occupied my mind for some time—that of the attiring of Christian women. In entering upon this delicate question, I have no desire to provoke criticism, or excite controversy, but write solely out of regard for our Lord's honour.

Looking at the detailed and explicit instructions of the Holy Spirit by Peter and Paul—the representative Apostles—it will easily be seen how far Christian women as a whole fall short of compliance with them. It may be gladly acknowledged that some obey the truth in this important respect; but they serve to make the rule more conspicuous, as one is grieved especially at noticing inside houses of prayer.

That those of the Master's disciples among the "gentler sex" may be induced to discharge their duty of love in this matter is the trust of yours in sympathy and esteem, A. A. D.

A POSTPONEMENT.

DEAR SIR,—Allow me to give expression to my very great regret that the announcement I made in your columns a fortnight ago cannot be carried out by the date given? I then promised that copies of my new report, "Something Attempted, Something Done," would begin to be sent to donors by November 1, and I requested those who had not received a copy by the 10th to acquaint me with the fact.

I now find from my printers that the work is so large, and so much heavier than anticipated, that I must not expect the posting of the book to be begun until the third or fourth week in November; so that copies cannot reach donors until, say, about December 1. I regret this delay exceedingly, but at this season it appears to be unavoidable.—Faithfully yours,

THOS. J. BARNARDO.

EURASIAN GIRLS IN JAPAN.

DEAR FRIENDS,—Some months ago (May 10) a letter from me appeared in these columns, urging the need of establishing a Home for Eurasian Girls. Many friends have generously responded, and, at this date, about £60 has been received. Fully £1000 will, however, be needed to establish the Home, and a further sum will be necessary to provide the necessary furniture for it and the school.

We can do nothing in the matter until sufficient funds have been received to enable us to start the building, and, therefore, we again draw attention to the urgent need of an institution designed to aid this much-neglected class, and train them for usefulness and for Christ.

I shall be happy to send a portrait of the little child, whose case was mentioned in my letter of May 10, to any contributor who would like to have one. We have not yet succeeded in persuading her guardians to give up the child, but the Lord has a work to do with her, as well as for her. It may be to let you see, by the recital of her sad lot, how much these little ones need your kindly aid.

FRANCIS STANILAND.

THE ANNUAL CHILDREN'S GATHERING in connection with the evangelistic services movement at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, N., took place on Sunday afternoon. The weather was somewhat inclement, but notwithstanding there was a very numerous attendance of young people and their friends. The address was delivered by Rev. Dr. Thain Davidson, his text being, "The eyes of the Lord are in every place." The discourse was illustrated by many incidents from child life, and was listened to with attentive interest by the large audience.

The Book World.

William Lloyd Garrison.

WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON: 1805—1879. The ory of his Life, told by his Children. 4 vols. Fisher Unwin. Messrs. Wendell Phillips Gar- on, and Francis Jackson Garrison, have in this ography raised a worthy monument to their stly celebrated father. In America there will ubtless be many who will not think 1800 closely inted pages any too much to read on the great ti-slavery question. Among the British public, oreover, there will surely be some who will find uch to interest them in every page of the career a truly noble man, and the progress of a good use grandly victorious. Much light is thrown oon the lives and characters of other abolitionists, d the contents include a large number of letters d reminiscences of Wilberforce and Buxton, ohn Bright, and Mrs. Josephine Butler, and a st of others, with a detailed account of Garrison's emorable tour in Europe, in 1867. Then, the struction of slavery having become an assured ct, Garrison took occasion to revisit his Trans- lantic coadjutors, in order to rejoice with them at Cowper's boast, "Slaves cannot breathe in ngland," could at length be applied to America. hese handsome volumes are history as well as ography. We cannot but glory in the ability and rength with which Garrison played his part; all s controversial mistakes are readily condoned hen viewed in the light of his pure motives and gh objects. As the central figure in the anti- avery agitation, which had such a blessed outcome, e made such an impression upon American ob- rvers that, at his death, a journal which had pre- iously caricatured and reviled him with the most xtreme bitterness, truthfully described the life ast ended, as having been characterised by "a mplicity, singleness of purpose, and unflinching evotion to a self-imposed task, rare in the annals f any time or any land."

NEAR AND FAR is the title of a beautiful little luminated book, presenting Scripture texts, with oetical extracts for each day in the month. Such roductions are not uncommon to-day, but it is by no eans usual to find dainty ingenuity and precision happily combined in the work of illustration. he poetical selections include some charming nes, admirably suited to accompany the words rom Holy Writ. (Castell Brothers.)

ECHOES OF THOUGHT. By Emily E. Reader. ongmans, Green & Co. This "medley of verse" roclaims the gifted writer to be one of the goodly ellowship of genuine poets. Here we have in- ght, imagination, versatility, music, and, best of l, simple, unconquerable faith. No one can listen ntently to these "Echoes" without feeling that ney are born of communion with the divine and ne true. The snatches of nursery verse are quaint nd pretty. (5s.)

With such bright picture-books as are published y Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co., young children ay easily be made happy and instructed at the ame time. Among recent publications of this lass are: HOLIDAY HOURS IN ANIMAL LAND, by Uncle Harry; MERRY TIMES FOR TINY FOLKS, y J. D.; and BIBLE PICTURES AND STORIES—EW TESTAMENT, by James Weston and D. J. D. s. each. These capital illustrated books are in ery attractive covers.

SERMONS TO WORKING MEN. Preached in Bir- ingham and London by Rev. Charles Leach. R. D. Dickinson. Here are twenty-five discourses, all emarkably pointed and simple. It is not sur- rising that the author has succeeded in "reaching he masses." From first to last the tone is evan- elical, and the style open and free. Illustrations, necdotal and parabolic, abound, and constitute an nteresting feature of the sermons, which will, vithout doubt, prove as profitable to readers as hey are well known to have proved very attrac- ive to hearers.

COTTAGE LECTURES ON HEALTH. By Agnes C. Maitland. 1s. 6d. Nisbet. Ten half-hour lectures, which, we are informed in the preface, have been elivered several times at mothers' meetings. That such sensible and simple statements of many mportant facts and principles found pleased and nterested audiences, we can readily believe. Food nd digestion, the blood and its circulation, form he subject-matter of many pages, and there are seful chapters on alcohol and housekeeping. We rust this eminently practical little volume will nd many readers.

SHORT BIOGRAPHIES FOR THE PEOPLE. By various writers. Vol. vi. 1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. The "New Biographical Series," of which Nos. 61 to 72 are here bound together, is worthy of the attention of all classes of readers, and will, we trust, become increasingly popular. Of these twelve excellent portraits, with sketches affording entertaining as well as edifying details, we would specially mention Thomas Guthrie, Dr. Duff, Bishop Heber, Sir Isaac Newton, Bishop McIlvaine, and Thomas Scott, the commentator.

LIGHT ON THE PATH; OR, THE WAY HEAVEN-WARD. By Rev. John Kirk. Edinburgh: John B. Fairgrieve, 7, Cockburn-street. Sixty-five short chapters on various phases of Christian doctrine and life. That the variety is more than nominal may be judged from the fact that thoughts on "Art and Religion" are followed by "Ambition its own Curse"; also that "The Blood and the Life" is followed by "Christ's Tenderness." Much important teaching is conveyed in a manner which will make the book welcome, and spiritually useful in many a Christian home.

THE HOUR OF PRAYER IN THE CHILDREN'S TEMPLE. 1s. 6d. Sunday School Union. Prayer helps for officers and teachers conducting the devotional exercises of Sunday-schools. The preface states that the work has not been prepared with the intention of discountenancing the use of extempore prayer. On the contrary, the desire has been to make provision for the many teachers who experience difficulty in helpfully leading the devotions of the young. There is an introductory essay on "Prayer with the children." Doubtless an earnest perusal of the book will assist in the cultivation of acceptable public supplication.

ALONE WITH THE WORD. By G. Stringer Rowe. 6s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. The Governor of Headingley College, Leeds, has here given us a precious treasury of spiritual thought in the form of devotional notes on the New Testament. Not pretending to formal exposition, the notes seek to point out lessons and suggest reflections calculated to promote practical and obedient faith. Occupying only a few minutes in the reading, the sections are so carefully condensed that every word is weighty. After giving attention to New Testament teaching as commonly systematised, it is a great joy to come to such fresh and helpful pages as these. Saints of God, whether learned or unlearned, will value this repertory of experimental truths, which will all be gladly received by the mind renewed after the image of Christ.

THE CENTURY DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE. Part 1, A.—Appet. 10s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin. The publication of this great work is at length begun, and it is intended to complete it in monthly parts in the space of two years. Judging from the large, full, and beautiful pages before us, we anticipate a production of unparalleled interest and value in its particular sphere. Dr. William Dwight Whitney, Professor of Comparative Philology and Sanscrit in Yale University, is the editor, and his large staff of assistants includes men of undoubted eminence in the American world of letters and science. To begin with, this dictionary is to contain 200,000 words, which is more by many thousands than any similar work yet published. Then, besides tracing words to their origin and giving their varied spellings, definitions, and pronunciations, this dictionary is encyclopædic, inasmuch as it goes into details about the things for which words stand in language. Artistic illustrations, of the class that have made The Century Magazine deservedly famous, are quite numerous in this first part, and the explanatory quotations, gathered from a wide field of literature, are full of interest. Colloquialisms and rare words are given, synonyms also being discriminated with care. It matters not in what direction one's reading may lie, this great work is more likely than any other to prove an unfailing guide, philosopher, and friend to most of us. The plan does not overlook newspaper phrases, even including those foreign institutions and customs which are more frequently spoken of than they are thoroughly understood. As a library in one book, it will doubtless hold its own for years. The theological department has been under the superintendence of Dr. Lyman Abbott, the present pastor of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, and the endeavour has been to define the various terms, not only with fairness, but with an intelligent appreciation of the views of those whose doctrines they denote. The publication of this very useful work, as well as the great undertaking upon which Dr. Murray is still engaged, is an evidence of the ever-increasing interest in our language and its history.

THE WITNESS OF THE WORLD TO CHRIST. By Rev. W. A. Mathews, M.A. 3s. 6d. Nisbet. The author finds in the natural world modes and laws which throw much light upon spiritual things. Premising that Christianity is not merely a religion but a life, he constructs an argument of considerable interest to show that Revelation brings before us precisely the remedy which this sin and death stricken world really requires. Thus it is that the world testifies to the divinity of its Saviour. We think the author's argument would have been stronger if he had been content to base it on the obvious teaching of Scripture. His exposition of the prophetic Scriptures seems to us wanting in cogency, while his interpretation of the early chapters of Genesis exhibits too great a desire to read his own deductions into the sacred narrative.

SHORT TALKS FOR THE TIMES. By Mark Guy Pearse. 2s. 6d. Wesleyan Methodist Book Room. This book, dedicated to Rev. Thomas Champness, "in admiration alike of the man and his work," contains twenty-six "talks" on high topics. Among the subjects treated, in various phases, are "The Love of God," "What we want in London," "The Roaring Lion," "The Sower," "The Hopefulness of Jesus," "The Gladness of Jesus," and "The Story of a Prayer-meeting, and what came of it." The volume is such as those who know the author would expect from his prolific pen. Every page is vigorous, truth being enforced and duty driven home in a telling manner. It is to the inward man that Mr. Pearse appeals; and to saint and sinner alike he addresses many a heart-searching word. We trust these "Short Talks" will have a powerful and widespread influence.

THE SAINT AND HIS SAVIOUR: THE PROGRESS OF THE SOUL IN THE KNOWLEDGE OF JESUS. By C. H. Spurgeon. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. This is a reprint of Mr. Spurgeon's first book, of which many thousands have already been sold. There is no reason why a volume which has, in the past, been so greatly prized should not to-day be held in high esteem, for the Saviour it sets forth has not changed, and the saint's need remains the same. The chapters are twelve in number, and set forth the entire pilgrimage from natural contempt for the Saviour, to a sustained communion with God through Him. Each chapter is followed by an appeal to the unconverted reader, and an old-time portrait of the pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle invests the book with a peculiar interest. We need hardly say that this volume is a mine of truth, admirably brought to view. Every page is strongly characteristic, and we trust much blessing will follow the reproduction.

THE PEOPLE'S PRAYER BOOK. By Joseph Parker, D.D. Hazell, Watson & Viney. This book contains many somewhat novel features. At its commencement is a family register, with additional spaces for autographs of children and of family visitors. This is followed by 220 prayers, with portions of Scripture indicated at the head of each page. Then follow a number of prayers for special occasions, among which is included a family litany. There are also sentences relating to special circumstances, which may be introduced into any prayer when desired; meditations and readings for those who cannot attend public worship; and prayers suitable for parents or children alone. The author has evidently sought to make this a complete family prayer book. We do not like books of prayer. True prayer is the utterance of the heart, and the freer and simpler and more natural the form of that utterance at the family altar the better. Nor should we have supposed that those who do find a prayer book a necessity, would have been able to adopt Dr. Parker's forms of expression. But we are glad to find, in many of the prayers in this book, that the Doctor has sought to adapt the language to the people for whom the book is intended. The special sentences are good; but the attempt to incorporate them into a suitable prayer, and in the right place, will inevitably lead to confusion. We would much rather see every child of God free from the necessity of using any such help as this; but those to whom such a help is necessary will find the book useful. (10s. 6d.)

SOME QUEER MAPS FOR OUR LITTLE ONES. By Sir James Colquhoun, Bart. 4d. Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling. Here are a number of ingeniously prepared maps, illustrative of cleanliness and disorder, knowledge and ignorance, as well as other good and bad qualities in people, and ways in life. The last two maps set forth "the Penal Settlements," with Sorrow as its chief town; and "the Better Country," with Salem as its metropolis. Every page of this little book has instruction for old as well as young people.

Evangelistic Notes.

Sydenham.—Mr. and Mrs. Powers have just held a fortnight's mission in the Wells-road Gospel Hall, with fruitful results.

Mission services have been held at Streatham-hill Congregational Church, conducted by Rev. R. Balgarnie. The services were continued into the second week by the pastor, Rev. J. P. Gledstone, and have been a blessing to many.

Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth-road.—A series of Gospel meetings is in progress. God has manifested his power night by night, in awakening and converting souls. Some of the most notorious characters in the district have been drawn in to hear the Gospel.

Mr. Oscar Owers has lately held a fortnight's mission in the village of Hawkhurst, Kent. His visit will be remembered by many with sincere gratitude, as having brought to them the very message that they needed. Bible-readings were held, and many sick ones cheered by the kindly visits of the evangelist.

Mr. S. T. Crooker has closed an interesting mission in connection with the Bristol Public-house Mission. Tent services commenced on June 16 and continued until Sept. 23. The meetings were crowded nightly with the working classes, and large numbers professed to receive spiritual good. Many temperance pledges were taken.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith have been holding a mission at the Congregational Church, Stowmarket (Rev. Luther Owen, pastor). The meetings proved very helpful and inspiring, and large numbers attended each evening, in spite of most unpropitious weather. This is the second visit of the evangelists to Stowmarket, and we believe that their services have proved a blessing to the town.

Messrs. Hogben and Middleton commenced a twelve days' mission at Mr. Hatton's Mission Chapel, Little Wild-street, Drury-lane, on October 17. The first three nights were devoted to consecration meetings for the church, and from the beginning there have been manifest tokens of the presence and power of the Spirit. The workers have to praise God for over one hundred persons who, during the first week, professed to find peace. They are looking for greater blessing this week, as the evangelists consented to remain for a few days longer.

Major Evered Poole and Mrs. Poole have been labouring in the West of England. At Barnstaple, last week, large congregations listened with joy to the Gospel message, and the new vicar, Rev. Dr. Newton, took part in the work of the after-meeting. On Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evangelistic and temperance addresses were given at Taunton and Wellington. Major Poole has also been delivering illustrated lectures on "A Soldier's Life, from the Barrack-room to the Battlefield," describing a young soldier's conversion to God, and happy death.

Mr. J. M. Soroggie in Blackheath.—From October 6 to 21, Mr. J. M. Soroggie held a mission at Blackheath. At the Bible-readings in the afternoons Christians derived much profit from the exposition and application of Scripture by Mr. Soroggie, whilst in the Gospel addresses to the unsaved, the Lord used his servant largely, and much fruit was gathered. For many years past no mission in Blackheath has been so manifestly owned of God. Early morning prayer-meetings were continued throughout the whole mission. Mr. Soroggie's short practical addresses and the earnest spirit of prayer present throughout resulting in much blessing and help to those present.

"GAMBLING HELLS."—We regret to observe that the rumour which was current some time ago that it was intended to establish a "gambling hell" in Tangier, upon the principle of that which exists at Monte Carlo, gains confirmation. It is reported that the project is supported by Spanish, French, and American influence. We hope the Diplomatic Corps will unite with the Moorish authorities in nipping this threatened evil in the bud. Wherever these "hells" are established, there will be misery and crime, and, with the loose arrangements for the administration of justice amongst the cosmopolitan inhabitants of this town, it is fearful to contemplate what the result of such an establishment here may be.—Times of Morocco.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Bishop of St. Albans announced last week that having reached the age of four-score years, he intends shortly to retire.

Rev. Grantley Clarke Martin, vicar of St. John's, Folkestone, has been appointed to the incumbency of St. Andrew's Church, Renshaw-street, Liverpool, in succession to Dean Lefroy, who held the pastorate for twenty-three years. Dr. Lefroy preached his farewell sermon in Liverpool on Sunday week, and has now taken up his residence as Dean of Norwich.

A missionary meeting of a unique character was held at the Horns Assembly Rooms, Kennington, a few days ago. The Bishop of Rochester presided, and Dr. Crowther, the octogenarian negro bishop, spoke with characteristic energy and eloquence upon the needs of Africa. Bishop Thornton, of Ballarat; Bishop Selwyn, of Melanesia; Bishop Blyth, of Jerusalem; and Bishop Barry, late of Sydney, were the other speakers.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. H. Elwyn Thomas, until lately minister of Arundel-square Chapel, Barnsbury, has been recognised as pastor of Tolmer-square Church, in succession to Rev. Frederick Hastings, now of Australia.

At a recent meeting at Union Chapel, Islington, it was stated that, during the pastorate there of Rev. Dr. Henry Allon, the congregation had subscribed for religious and philanthropic purposes no less a sum than £250,000; also that in the parent and branch Sunday-schools there are now 3360 scholars and 259 teachers.

Clifton Church, Peckham, has celebrated the twelfth anniversary of the settlement of Rev. H. J. Perkins. The report states that during the past year 106 members have been added to the church, making a total of 787 received during the present pastorate, the present membership being 569. There are 750 scholars in the Sunday-school, the Young Christian Band has 31 members.

A special mission was conducted for the united Congregational churches of Edinburgh and vicinity, by Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, from October 12 to 22. The meetings were held in Augustine and Hope-park Churches, and have been productive of valuable spiritual results. The mission was continued in Dairy, Portobello, and Leith, by Revs. J. K. Nuttall, of Sunderland, and J. F. B. Tinling, of London.

METHODIST.

A lady of private means in the North of England is about to take up her residence in Southwark, to assist Rev. J. H. Hopkins in mission work.

The second anniversary of the Birmingham Wesleyan Mission has been celebrated. The report read was an exceedingly satisfactory record of a year's successful work. The mission is extending rapidly, and has recently converted a malt-house into a mission-hall—a conversion which naturally furnished a favourite theme for more than one speaker.

An important ministerial conference was held in Birmingham, on Friday week, under the presidency of Dr. Young, chairman of the district. Some twenty ministers gathered together to consider informally the methods and difficulties of the work in Birmingham. An earnest desire was expressed on all hands to conserve and quicken activities throughout the city.

Rev. T. M. Taylor has commenced a series of lively and interesting services since his appointment to the Stafford Circuit in September, in place of the ordinary week-night services, which had been very badly attended. He began with a series of addresses on "The Pilgrim's Progress," illustrated by magic-lantern slides photographed from life. The result has been that the chapel has been crammed from floor to ceiling, and many come who had scarcely ever attended a place of worship in their lives.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Friends' Missionary Advocate tells of seven young Friends who feel called to go to India. The same paper gives a very interesting sketch of "Life in Korea," with its 7,000,000 people, and twenty-one missionaries, with others expected.

Mary Anne Gundry has gone out to Japan from England, under the auspices of the Women Friends' Foreign Mission Association of Philadelphia, and Ohio Friends have purchased land in Nanking, China, in which they expect to build mission premises.

As one result of the visit of William and Catharine Jones to Japan, a Peace Society has been formed on a New Testament basis. Subsequently, he addressed hundreds of students, and the public, at Belmont College, California, by special invitation of the faculty. Their travels are greatly promoting the cause of Peace.

James Moorman, an Indiana Friend, has just given 272 acres of land and £4000 to found a Home for poor Friends, especially ministers who have spent their lives in Christian work, and need a home and care in old age. Trustees have been appointed to carry out the will of the generous donor.

A quiet but real "Forward Movement" is going on in East London, as a result of the great meeting on "Poverty," held during Yearly Meeting. A Friend then offered £500 a year, for three years, towards an "East-End Mission," under the care of Friends' Home Mission Committee, and now Catharine Balkwill and a score other ladies are to carry on nursing and caring for the poor, aiming at their elevation, physically, mentally, morally, and spiritually, having a Home of their own, and probably another, to which the fallen may be welcomed.

PRESBYTERIAN.

During the past week well attended and successful evangelistic meetings have been held in the schoolroom of the First Presbyterian Church, Banbridge, Ireland.

The Irish Presbyterian Church is about to send to the Jungle tribes of India young earnest men who have not been college-bred, but who have the true mission spirit in them.

A year book of the English Presbyterian Church has just been published for the third year by Mr. T. C. Smith, 14, Paternoster-square. It opens with a capital portrait of Principal Dykes.

Mr. Wm. Grove will conduct a month's mission during November in Trinity Presbyterian Church, Kentish Town-road, N.W. These services are in continuation of a very successful month's tent services conducted by Mr. Grove, during the month of August, in a tent erected in the same road.

BAPTIST.

A meeting was held in East-hill Chapel, Wandsworth, recently, to bid farewell to Miss Ewing, who is on her way to engage in zenana work in India. The chair was occupied by Rev. J. W. Ewing. She is to labour in Dacca, East Bengal.

Rev. J. F. Jones, pastor of Waterloo-road Church, Wolverhampton, opened last week a social club in connection with the Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Class and Guild. The rooms beneath the chapel are to be opened every evening until ten o'clock, with a view to providing recreation and opportunities for instruction to the young of both sexes.

Ebenezer Church, Chester, is inaugurating a "Forward Movement" in the town. The church is about engaging a nurse as visitor among the sick, and purposes extending all their work in this city. Already, among other developments, a night school has been established, a drum and fife band formed for rendering help in the temperance work, &c., and it is purposed to found an evangelical training home for city and county work.

The autumnal meeting of the congregation of Regent's Park Chapel was held last week. The reports of the various organisations were of an encouraging character, marked progress having been made in all departments of work, in addition to which several new schemes have been commenced, with signs of success. Reference was made to the successful ministry of the pastor (Rev. F. B. Meyer). The number of members added to the Church during the year was 120.

SALVATION ARMY.

An earnest and to some extent successful effort is being made in Newcastle to stem "the torrent of flaunting vice" in that city by the Army. Two or three nights a week "the streets" are visited, and their occupants talked to about their souls and their sin. Men as well as women are in this way dealt with.

The latest contingent of officers who left this country for India on the 5th ult. arrived at Genoa on the 12th, having so far had an excellent passage. Very successful meetings were held on board the vessel, the Kaiser Wilhelm II., the audience being composed not only of English people, but French and German, together with Australian emigrants and bushrangers.

What was announced as an "extraordinary demonstration" took place in Exeter Hall on Monday evening. The primary object of this great and enthusiastic gathering was to welcome home and bid farewell to a number of officers returning from and departing for spheres of service abroad, among them Commissioner Howard from Australia, and Commissioner Coombs, who goes forth to succeed him in the command of the forces at the Antipodes; Colonel Barker, who has been engaged in Prison Gate work in Melbourne; Colonel and Mrs. Thurman, late of South Africa, leaving for a new field of service in South America, and others. General Booth, who presided, delivered an energetic address, and several of the outgoing officers also spoke briefly.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A Christian Workers' Convention, with the object of promoting fraternity among the Methodist leaders and Sabbath-school teachers, has been held at Derrygonnelly.

A fortnight's series of evangelistic services has been conducted by Revs. Charles Inwood and Pierce Martin in Charleston-road Methodist Church, Dublin. A similar series was held in Gilford, by Rev. W. H. Robinson.

A successful united six days' Gospel mission has been held in Larne by Mr. George Clarke. The attendance each night was very large, and a spirit of deep earnestness pervaded the services. Many made a public profession of their faith in Christ.

Messrs. Thompson and Montgomery, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, have held a successful Gospel Mission at Crumlin, co. Antrim, and a similar mission has been held in Londonderry by Rev. James Stewart, Methodist Conference evangelist.

A well-attended and successful series of Gospel services has been held by Revs. H. Moore and J. W. Parkhill, in Rushfield Methodist Chapel, co. Cork, and similar services are being held at present in Wesley Chapel, Cork, by Mrs. Caldwell, an American evangelist.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. W. T. Freer, rector of Houghton-on-the-Hill, Leicestershire.—Rev. R. T. Tracy, Irish Methodist minister, in the 103th year of his age, and the 73rd of his ministry.—Rev. Wm. McIndoe, Free Martyr's Church, Paisley.—Rev. Clement Pass, pastor of the Congregational Church at Langley Green, near Birmingham, for over forty-four years.—Rev. Andrew Creery, rector of Kilmore, co. Down.—Rev. Wm. Lees, formerly of Crewe, who had been in the Baptist ministry thirty-two years.—Rev. John Stark, Duntocher U.P. Church, N.B.—Rev. George Dickenson Wesleyan minister, Hebden Bridge, Yorkshire.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes.

SUNDAY, NOV. 10.—2 Samuel XXIV.

THE statement that "God moved David" (1) to commit this sin does not contradict that of 1 Chron. xxi. 1, which attributes the same act to the agency of Satan. The one speaks of God's permission, the other of Satan's malicious intention. (See Job i. and ii.) God permitted it because his "anger was kindled against Israel." It is possible that their very prosperity had fostered a spirit of pride and vain glory, leading them to less implicit confidence in God. The numbering of the people, through the individual act of David, only brought the sin of the people to a visible manifestation. In itself the act was legitimate (Ex. xxx. 12), but the spirit of vain glory and ambition which prompted it determined its character. The one condition of blessing for the king and for the whole nation was dependence upon God. Any departure from this spirit meant disaster, and, no doubt, greater disaster was prevented by allowing the sin and chastisement here recorded. There was grace as well as righteousness in God's permission.

The result of the census was not recorded (1 Chron. xxvii. 24); so that the discrepancy between the number here and that in 1 Chron. xxi. may be due to different traditions respecting it. David was reproved, first by his conscience (10), and next by Gad, the prophet of God (11—12). To pardon David without chastising the nation would have left the sin to continue its work. The choice of the form of chastisement is all God gives to David. How different the choice offered to every sinner in the Gospel (Mark xvi. 16)!

Pestilence from God, though the shortest period of punishment offered to David, was, perhaps, the most effective (15). David beheld the angel (17) with drawn sword stretched out over Jerusalem (1 Chron. xxi. 16). The place God chose for the altar was associated by Jewish tradition with the sacrifice of Isaac, and was afterwards the site of the Temple (1 Chron. xxii. 1). Fire from heaven (1 Chron. xxi. 26) consumed the sacrifice, and the plague was stayed. Is not the Gospel here? The sin; the threatened judgment; the substitutionary sacrifice offered and accepted; then the plague stayed, and the people accepted through the offering. This is more than mere history.

THE BOOK OF KINGS.

Originally, Samuel, Kings, and Chronicles were each one book. In the Septuagint each was divided into two parts; and this book became the third Book of Kings. It is impossible to fix accurately either the date when this book was compiled, or the name of the compiler. From the fact that the last chapter records the release of Jehoiachin from captivity, which took place B.C. 562, but makes no mention of the decree of Cyrus (B.C. 536), with which the return of the nation from captivity began, it is concluded that the book was compiled sometime between 552 and 536 B.C. The sources from which the compiler drew are three—viz., the Book of the Acts of Solomon (1 Kings xi. 41); the Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Judah (xiv. 29, &c.), and the Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Israel (xiv. 19, &c.).

The Book records the history of the nation from the close of the reign of David to the middle of the reign of Ahaziah. In its highest glory under Solomon, the kingdom foreshadows the Millennial kingdom of Jesus. The prosperity of the nation rises or falls according to the character of the ruler and his people, illustrating for us the important truth that obedience is the condition of blessing.

MONDAY, NOV. 11.—1 Kings I.

Adonijah was the fourth son of David (2 Sam. iii. 4), and perhaps was the oldest surviving. He was born "after Absalom" (6), and like him was goodly in appearance, ambitious in spirit, and was equally spoiled by his father's indulgence (5, 6). His attempt to usurp the kingdom was a further fulfilment of the prediction in 2 Sam. xii. 10, 11; and was supported by Joab, and Abiathar the priest (7). Both these had their reasons for helping Adonijah; the former had more than once crossed David's purpose, and might reasonably fear that Solomon would receive instructions to administer due chastisement; the latter was probably jealous of Zadok. It was a compliment to the fidelity of others (8, 10) that Adonijah did not invite them.

The attempt of the usurper was defeated through the appeal of Bathsheba to David, according to the counsel of Nathan, who also seconded her appeal (11—31). This was an effectual means of rousing David to energy. Though physically weakened, he has not lost his zeal for doing the will of God. His action was as prudent as it was prompt (32—40); and left no doubt in the minds of the people as to who was to succeed David. Solomon was made to ride on the king's mule (33; comp. Gen. xli. 43; Esther vi. 8); was anointed and proclaimed king (34); was attended by David's body guard (38); and was acknowledged with enthusiasm by the people (40).

The feast of Adonijah ended in confusion and terror (49). Instead of wearing Solomon's crown, he became a humble suppliant for his life. A terrible reckoning has followed many a sinful feast.

TUESDAY, NOV. 12.—1 Kings II.

The prospect of death did not alarm David (1, 2). This was not because his life had been sinless, but because as a sinner he had sought and obtained the mercy of God. Before his death he gave wise counsel to Solomon (2—4), similar to that given to Joshua by Moses (Josh. i. 7). His whole life gave emphasis to his counsel. The one lesson of all his sins and chastisements, as well as of his faithfulness and prosperity, was that which he now urged upon Solomon. The best kind of manliness is that which dares to do the will of God; and this is the only condition of true prosperity. The promises of God are fulfilled to those who are concerned to keep his precepts. David's instructions concerning Joab (5, 6), Barzillai (7), and Shimei (8, 9), proved him the righteous ruler, who, like his great Descendant, would not forget any faithful service, nor leave the wicked unpunished. They who forsake or reject the King in his humiliation must expect the reckoning when He sits on the throne of judgment. And they who have faithfully served Him will be rewarded beyond their expectations.

No sooner was David dead, and Solomon established on the throne (12), than Adonijah made a request through Bathsheba, which Solomon rightly interpreted as another subtle attempt to usurp the crown (13—25). To have received one of David's wives would have given him a claim to something more. Solomon's respectful treatment of his mother (19, 20), is worthy of imitation. He was not less a son now he had become a king (Ex. xx. 12). Yet his refusal to grant her request showed that his affection as a son did not blind him to his duty as king.

The removal of Abiathar and the death of Joab (26—33) removed Adonijah's two strongest supporters. In the case of Abiathar, note the remarkable fulfilment of the Divine prediction (1 Sam. ii. 31—35). God does not break his word either of threatening or of promise (27). Note Joab's futile attempt to find safety at the altar (28—31). But to the cross, which is the antitype of the altar, no penitent sinner will ever flee in vain. The death of Shimei followed (36—46). He broke the condition on which his life depended, and died by the hand of Benaiah. By these acts of judgment, Solomon's throne was established (Prov. xxv. 5).

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 13.—1 Kings III.

There is a doubtful opening to this chapter. Solomon's affinity with Pharaoh (1); and the two "onlys," one concerning the people (2), and the other concerning the king (3) are not promising. To have many high places was contrary to God's command (Deut. xii. 13, 14). Yet there are hopeful features, too. Note Solomon's love to the Lord (3); and the proof of that love in his obedience (3), and his religious devotion (4). The one would be valueless without the other.

They who serve God may expect to enjoy Him; for He draws near to those who draw near to Him. It was to Solomon—devoted, obedient, and loving—that God said: "Ask what I shall give thee" (5). It would be a disastrous thing for a man of a different character to receive such a privilege (John xv. 7). Only the man whose delight is in the Lord may receive the desires of his heart (Ps. xxxvii. 4). The request of Solomon was not for riches and honour; these things were secondary in his judgment to the wisdom needed for glorifying God in the position God had given him (6—9). Hence he obtained even more than he sought (Matt. vi. 33).

The incident which follows gave immediate proof of his wisdom (16—28). How could so difficult a case be decided when no witnesses on either side could be called? The proposal to divide the child at once revealed which woman had the mother's heart. Solomon echoed the words of her to whom the child was restored (26, 27). Bishop Hall says: "In morality it is thus also; truth, as it is one, so it loves entireness; falsehood, division. Satan, that hath no right to the heart, would be content with a piece of it; God, that made it all, will have either the whole or none."

THURSDAY, NOV. 14.—1 Kings IV.

In answer to Solomon's prayer God promised him not only wisdom, but riches and honour unparalleled (iii. 13). He has already given proof of possessing wisdom; in this chapter we have a description of his riches and honour. Note the names and the descriptions of his officers (1—19); his daily provision (22, 23); his stud (26—28); and his fame for wisdom and glory (29—34). Thus bountifully has God enriched the man whose only aim was to glorify Him.

The prosperity of the kingdom is equally instructive. "All Israel" (1) yielded obedience to Solomon. It was not in any sense a kingdom divided against itself. Consequently, there were internal peace and security (25); the most exuberant joy (20); and the wide extension of the kingdom (21). These are true of our Lord's kingdom, too. Give Him an undivided heart, and there shall be unlimited peace, and joy, and prosperity. The entire rule of Jesus in us as King is as necessary for our full salvation as his atonement offered for us on the cross.

FRIDAY, NOV. 15.—1 Kings V.

Before his death David made great preparations for the building of the Temple (1 Chron. xxix. 1—5); the time for commencing that work has now come. David was not allowed to build, because "wars were about him on every side" (3). Solomon may now commence, because God has given "rest on every side" (4). The time of peace is the Church's opportunity for service. The Churches had rest, and were edified" (Acts viii. 31).

The friendship of Hiram for David (1) was continued to David's son (7). Probably he was a worshipper of the true God, though the king of an idolatrous people. He was allowed to have a share in procuring timber for the house of the Lord. The prophet alludes to this (Isa. lx. 10 and 13); and our Lord Himself, of whom Solomon was a type, permits them that "are far off" to "come and build in the temple of the Lord" (Zech. vi. 12—15). Every believer is a living stone in the temple; and is called to fellowship with the Lord in building it for his praise.

Note how this mutual service strengthened the bond of peace between Hiram and Solomon (12). Friendship grows as it is exercised.

SATURDAY, NOV. 16.—1 Kings VI.

The time when the temple building began is specially noted (1). It was not until the fourth year of Solomon's reign. The previous three years were spent in preparation. The kingdom needed to be settled, and the stones and timber prepared. We are not wasting time while preparing for the service of God. The name of the building is "the house of the Lord" (1). It was built according to the plan given by God to David (1 Chron. xxviii. 11, 12, 19); was to be used in the service of God, and for the manifestation of his glory; and was a type, first, of the body of Jesus (John ii. 21); then of each believer (1 Cor. iii. 16); and, next, of the whole Church of God (Eph. ii. 21, 22). And each of these is God's dwelling-place. It was built in silence (7). All the materials were prepared, and when brought to the house, each fitted in its place without alteration. So does God here prepare all the living stones that are to be built into his Church.

Allowing 18 inches to a cubit, the dimensions of the Temple were: length 90 feet, breadth 30 feet, and height 45 feet, just twice the size of the tabernacle. The porch extended 15 feet forward along the whole breadth of the building (3). Like the tabernacle it had its Holy Place, or "temple," and its Most Holy Place, or "oracle" (5); and chambers were built round three sides of the house in three storeys (6), each character being five cubits high (10). The windows (4) were above these chambers within, the house was of cedar, overlaid with gold (22); the cherubim for the mercy seat were of olive wood (23), as were the doors of the Most Holy Place, and both were covered with gold. The house was for the Lord, and deserved the best of everything.

God's message to Solomon during the building of the house (11—14) was timely. Its promises were calculated to encourage him, and the condition which those premises required needed to be brought to his recollection then.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, November 10.

DAVID'S GRIEF FOR ABSALOM.—2 SAM. xviii. 18—33.

GOLDEN TEXT: PROV. xvii. 25.

AT the time of this lesson David was at Mahanaim, a city east of the Jordan. Its name means "two hosts," and recalls the interesting history connected with it (Gen. xxxii.). It was the chosen capital of Ishbosheth during his brief reign (ii. 8), and here David retreated before the rebellion of Absalom.

Absalom had entered Jerusalem (xvi. 15). Ahithophel, after his wise counsel had been rejected (xvii. 14), hung himself (23); and thus became, in his doom, as in his treachery, a type of the traitor Judas. The counsel of Hushai (xvii. 7—13) was adopted; and both armies prepared for a decisive battle. Absalom passed over Jordan with his host (xvii. 24); and David, standing by the gate of the city, watched his people as they passed out to the battle (xviii. 4). It is touching to note his tender appeal to his commanders to "deal gently" with his rebellious son (5). The sins of Absalom have not destroyed the father's affection for him.

The battle was fought in one of the forests of Gilead, where the wood destroyed more than the sword (6—8). Absalom, caught by his head in the thick boughs of a tree (9), continued suspended there until Joab and his young men slew him (10—15). He was buried in a pit and covered with a heap of stones (17). Such was the sad and tragic end of David's beautiful, but ambitious and wicked son. Upon the heap known as Absalom's tomb, people still throw stones to express their detestation of his memory (Prov. x. 7). He reaped as he had sown. His brief triumph only made his end more bitter. His life here had been an utter and miserable failure, and he passed into eternity without hope. His career and end is as a beacon light. Let youth and young men take warning.

The lesson properly begins with ver. 19, which describes the monument Absalom had prepared during his life. It is placed in significant contrast to that monument of stones beneath which he was buried. It was a mistake for Absalom to suppose that "a pillar" would keep his "name in remembrance." He is remembered with shame for what he was, not with honour for the monument he reared. We all prepare our own monument during our life. Whether we are remembered or forgotten depends upon our character. Be right, and do right: then you will be "remembered by what you have done."

There were then no means of swift communication such as exist to-day. Swift runners were the chief messengers. Ahimaaz, the son of Zadok the priest, coveted the privilege of bearing tidings to David (19); but was not allowed to go until Cushi had started (20—23). Joab knew that he had violated David's command in destroying Absalom, and desired that such evil tidings should be borne by his Ethiopian slave, who would be less affected by the king's displeasure. With intense anxiety David sat between the inner and outer gates of the city wall (24), waiting for tidings. The watchman on the wall peers into the distance, and at last descries one (24), and then another (26), each running alone. As the two draw nearer, the porter recognises the first as Ahimaaz (27). The very name encouraged David—for would Joab choose a good man to bear evil tidings? ("A good man cometh with good tidings"—is not that a picture of what every teacher and preacher ought to be?) First, to Ahimaaz after his message (28, 29), then to Cushi after his (31, 32), David proposes the same eager question, "Is the young man Absalom safe?" The victory gained by his people, and the consequent security of his own life; the quelling of the rebellion, and the prospect of his restoration to the throne—these things do not lie so near to his heart as the fate of his loved though wicked son Absalom. What keen anguish a prodigal child can cause to a parent's heart!

David's lament (33) is most touching and instructive. He found a lonely place in "the chamber over the gate," and wept there. See in his lamentation (1) an illustration of the strength of parental love. Where there is great grief there must be equally great love. Here it appears so strong that David would willingly sacrifice his life for Absalom's sake. This is paralleled by the love of Moses (Exod. xxxii. 32), and of Paul (Rom. ix. 3); and was more than paralleled by the Saviour Himself (Luke xix. 41). (2) The hopelessness of Absalom's death increased David's grief. He could not relieve his present sorrow by saying as he had done when his child died: "I shall go to him" (xii. 23). Those who die in their sins place an eternal barrier between themselves and the people of God. A young man stood by his brother's grave during the funeral service with opened mouth and dazed look, as though his grief could not find relief. When I attempted to rouse him, he replied: "How can I help it when my brother has died without hope?" (3) David's grief was the greater because he knew that his own sin had something to do with Absalom's doom. His example had misled his son; and the death of Absalom was only a continuation of a threatened chastisement for his sin (xii. 10).

DR. PARKER'S PEOPLE'S BIBLE.

THE BOOK OF JOB. By Joseph Parker, D.D. This is volume xi. of the People's Bible (8s. Hodder & Stoughton), and is in all respects worthy of its predecessors. As an exposition it is marked with the originality that characterises all the Doctor's writings. Job himself is regarded as "a typical man, the best specimen of humanity, altogether the finest, completest, strongest man." The contest is thus between Satan and man at his best. The devil "does not care about indifferent characters, doubting minds, wavering faiths; men who are orthodox to-day, heretical to-morrow, speculative on the third day, and immoral all the time: they occasion him no anxiety, they are all well chained, and the chain is well fastened in the pit." Upon the subject of the personality of the devil the Doctor is sarcastic: "We are fully agreed that there is no devil. That may be taken for granted... and for this reason. Simply because there is nothing devilish, therefore how can we believe that there is a devil? Everybody is so good, everybody is so honest; all our habits and practices and customs are so transparently and beautifully moral, that it is utterly impossible for us to believe that there is a devil." There are not many expositors who can so safely adopt this style. In Satan's treatment of Job, we have revealed all that he can do; and though he exhausted his resources, and led Job to much murmuring and complaining, yet in the end Job was more than conqueror.

We cannot follow the Doctor through the whole line of his exposition, nor is it needful to do so. We must, however, commend the book highly, as being entertaining and refreshing, as well as thoughtful and inspiring. Its evangelical tone may be judged from the following: "We must remember that a man is not necessarily a genius because he is a heretic....What, therefore, if we venture to put in one word for orthodoxy, and not to gather up all the conclusions of long centuries, and turn them out with contempt, as though they had been encumbering the ground, or hindering the education of the world. Narrow interpretations of them may have been doing so....Our steady contention is that all the great thoughts that have ever influenced the world for good belong to the evangelical line of thinking....We ought not to be the men who are put away from our old standpoints simply by the wave of some man's hand, when we are not sure that there is anything in the hand but its power of waving." This is only one of many quotations of a similar character.

PRAYER FOR MISSIONS.—The Church Missionary Society have appointed Friday, November 29, to be observed as a day of general intercession for foreign missions by the friends of the Society everywhere.

NAPLES SAILORS' REST.—A correspondent writes:—"The public services on Sunday are about the most cheering part of the work here. On Sunday week there was a good crowd of officers and seamen of ships, and it was pleasant to see how earnestly they listened to the Gospel message. On Sunday, October 6, it blew a strong gale, and, having about twenty seamen in the Rest, we experienced considerable difficulty in getting them to their ships, as the boatmen of the harbour absconded. After considerable trouble, a boat was secured from a sailing vessel, and all the men got safely on board their ships. It is very desirable to have a large mission boat for the Bay, and it is greatly needed to have a more commodious Sailors' and Strangers' Rest, in such a city of strong temptations as Naples."

"BRIDGE OF HOPE" MISSION.

WE took a lady into our Night Shelter one eve ing, just as those needing help were coming But the sight of those young girls, each bearing almost legibly written story of shame and sorr in her face made prematurely old was a sight up which no novice could look unmoved, and o friend hastened from the room, saying, "I cann bear that." But, if we cannot bear even to look them, only glancing at the surface, what must the poor sufferers themselves endure?

One of those who sat there on that evening w a young girl, with a pitiful infant in her arms. We cannot this paper give her story, but it was such as exo rated the poor child from blame, and laid an aw weight of guilt at his door who had blighted t young life which should have been guileless a pure. Surely it is woe to him by whom such offe cometh. For the sake of her little sisters, parents had sent this poor girl into the workhou having no other shelter for her in the time of sha and sorrow. For the same reason they feared have her back to their home when she was d charged from the infirmary, and, with her new a awful responsibility, alone and ignorant, the p little mother began the hopeless search for "so thing." At last, weak and weary, she found way to us, and we listened to the tale which sho have been impossible from any lips; and ye child of sixteen was telling it! "What am I do?" she said. "There is nothing before m As is, alas! so often the case, the sorrow t should have shielded, had instead only brand and exposed her to fresh and horrible temptatio The broken-hearted father came to us, and wh not wishing to be hard on his child whom really loved, it was the still innocent children home, from whom he wanted to keep the kn ledge of their sister's shame. We are doing w we can to reach the real criminal; but, if we f surely his punishment is but delayed. "Vengea is mine. I will repay, saith the Lord."

JUST SIXTEEN YEARS OF AGE,

Another of the group, sitting in the room at same time, was a young girl who had pleaded be taken into one of our Homes. She had b suffering with a bad eye, through which she lost her work, and, whilst an out-patient of hospital, she had gradually parted with her clot to get food. Even to us her story seemed and we sent for the mother, whose address girl had willingly given us. She was a respect looking woman, superior to many who come to although evidently very poor and suffering. verified her child's story in every particular, told us of their terrible struggle to live hones as neither of them could get work. With the ca ness of despair, she added: "Me and my girl going to try and do away with ourselves; but, she is safe, I'm content to go in the workhou After speaking some words of hope to the we woman, she left us with a brighter face, and m quiet expressions of deep thankfulness. It for her child she had dreaded the conti struggle, knowing to what it exposed her.

We may use pious expressions to censure poor woman for meditating such a sinful step; let us hold back the first stone we may be read throw, and try instead to measure the agon temptation through which this child and mo had passed, before they had reached such a st I would rather thank God that, even amongst most poverty-stricken there are to be found wo who could more willingly see their children and even share death with them, than see t take a step worse than death.

We ask all to whom the cause of purity is to pray that we, who are always listening to of sorrow, and looking into the abyss which un lies them, may have the faith and patience w can alone enable us to endure it.

The winter is beginning with ominous sign dire distress amongst the very poor people by w we are always surrounded, and it will need u effort and self-sacrifice if we are to follow example, who, though He was rich, yet for sakes became poor.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

WOMAN'S POSITION AND MINISTRY IN THESE LAST DAYS.

WHEN is Joel's prophecy to be fulfilled? Acts ii. 16, 17, 18 (A.)

Are not these the last days spoken of—2 Tim. iii. 1-5; 1 Tim. iv. 1-3; 2 Pet. iii. 3, 4; Jude 18; Heb. i. 2? (B.)

When is the woman to exercise the gifts of prayer and prophecy? 1 Cor. xi. 5. (C.)

What now answers to the Church or Assembly at Corinth where women were forbidden to speak? 1 Cor. xiv. 34, 35. (D.)

What is the real meaning or force of the word "speak" in that connection? It seems to imply interruption by asking questions. 1 Cor. xiv. 35. (E.)

Where is this command enforced under the law? We cannot see that the marginal references bear upon the subject of speaking, but rather on the question of the obedience of a wife to her husband. See Gen. iii. 16; Esther i. 20: Eph. v. 32; 1 Pet. iii. 1. (F.)

Does not "In like manner also" (1 Tim. ii. 9) infer that the woman's modest apparel is to be accompaniment of prayer; and are not verses 11-15 especially directed to the marriage relationship, the wife being in subjection to her husband? (G.)

What is meant by grieving or quenching the Spirit of God? Eph. iv. 30; 1 Thess. iv. 19. (H.)

When a woman is filled by the Spirit, what is the outcome? Acts ii. 4; John iv. 29, 39. Elizabeth and Mary, as well as Zacharias and Simeon, filled with the Holy Ghost, prophesied. (I.)

Were not the women filled as well as the men on the day of Pentecost? Acts i. 14, ii. 1-4. (J.)

What is to be understood by the fact that Philip had four daughters which did prophecy? Acts xxi. 8. (K.)

Will the Spirit be poured out in the next dispensation after the glorious appearing of the Lord Jesus? 1 Thess. i. 10; Tit. ii. 13. (L.)

WORDS OF JESUS.

"Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto Me...unto the uttermost part of the world" (Acts. ii. 8).

"This Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come" (Matt. xxiv. 14).

THE TESTIMONY.

"They that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the Word" (Acts. viii. 4).

Women's names are enrolled in the martyology of heaven; their inspirations are admitted in our hymns of praise and worship. By what law are they forbidden to preach the Gospel? (M.)

CLARKE'S "PYRAMID" NURSERY LAMP FOOD WARMERS.

With New Registered Pannikin.

BY their peculiar construction—the glass chimney conducting and concentrating heat to the bottom of the water vessel—they give a larger amount of light and heat than can be obtained in any other lamp of the same class. Without smoke or smell.

Clarke's New Registered Pannikin.

By this invention any liquid food can be poured out or drunk without scum or grease passing through the spout, and prevents spilling when poured into a feeding bottle, so unavoidable with all other Pannikins. The Pannikins will fit all the old "Pyramid" Nursery Lamps, and can be purchased separately.

Clarke's "Pyramid" Night Lights and "Fairy Pyramid" Night Lights

Are the best in the world, and the only suitable ones for burning in the above, and for lighting passages, lobbies, &c. Sold everywhere.

Price of Lamps, 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 5s., and 6s. each. If any difficulty in obtaining them, write to CLARKE'S "PYRAMID" AND "FAIRY" LIGHT COMPANY, LIMITED, Cricklewood, London, N.W., for nearest Agent's address.

Who may be personally or relatively

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS, with THROAT AFFECTION.—A PATIENT in WILTS.

JOHN E. DAVIS, BROUGHTON GIFFORD, near MELKSHAM, applied to me on the 4th of last March. His mother had died of Consumption. He had taken cold about four months before, followed by sore throat, accompanied by shivering fits, a very hard cough, with much contraction of the throat and air passages, and pain in the chest and side, and had commenced losing flesh. In addition to the above statement the father also writes:—"He has kept his bed for five weeks; he can get no relief; nothing seems to do him any good; he gets weaker every day."

I advised him fully, sending medicine from time to time, for between two and three months. Each letter spoke of gradual improvement. Three months after the time of first application to me he writes: "I am in pretty good health now, and able to follow my employment. I did not think I should ever get about again. You are very welcome to make any use you please of this."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

WORKS ON ROMANISM.

COMPLETE IN ONE VOLUME. 1083 pages.

FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS.

A COMPLETE AND AUTHENTIC ACCOUNT OF THE LIVES, SUFFERINGS, AND TRIUMPHANT DEATHS OF EARLY CHRISTIAN AND PROTESTANT MARTYRS IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

By JOHN FOXE.

With Twelve Full-page Illustrations. Cloth boards, 10s. 6d. Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 12s. 6d.

"Messrs. MORGAN AND SCOTT deserve most cordial thanks for the production of this noble edition of a noble book. . . . Only let this book have a place in every British home, and we may smile at the efforts of Rome and of the Anglican Ritualists to undo the blessed work which was achieved for our nation and the world by the thousands of faithful witnesses to the truth who, in dark days of priestly domination, resisted unto death."—Christian Leader.

"As a complete edition of FOXE'S MARTYRS, this is by far the handiest and most attractive we know. In paper, type, illustrations, and binding, the book does great credit to Messrs. MORGAN AND SCOTT, to whom the Christian public are indebted for this timely publication."—Primitive Methodist.

"We are pleased to see the 'BOOK OF MARTYRS' well to the front. It is a great thing to have such a copy of FOXE in the market at 10s. 6d. We wish Messrs. MORGAN AND SCOTT an immense sale of the present issue, which is marvellously cheap."—Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, in The Sword and Trowel.

NOW READY. FIFTH EDITION, REVISED AND IMPROVED.

THE CATACOMBS AT ROME:

THEIR CONTENTS AND TEACHINGS.

By BENJAMIN SCOTT, F.R.A.S., Chamberlain of the City of London.

WITH SEVENTY SMALL ILLUSTRATIONS.

Tinted Covers, 2s. Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"Here is a slashing book, which leaves no need for a second stroke. The first two chapters give an unvarnished description of the utterly abandoned degradation of paganism, morally and socially, when Christ came on the scene, and also of the most horrible and brutal persecution to death of the early Christians by heathen Rome. The next chapter paints on this black ground the contrastive, fair, and lovely picture of the New Testament Christianity. In the two following chapters we have a most fascinating delineation of the Catacombs, showing that the ways and words of these primitive Christians were in perfect accord with the precepts and practices of Christ and his apostles. These sermons in stones (the monumental inscriptions in the Catacombs) are then used to prove in a relentless and unchallengeable fashion the wholesale departures from primitive Christianity by the modern Church of Rome. The verdict of the book is this—Romanism is baptized paganism. And we entirely endorse the judgment. In these days when Romanism is being stealthily spread among us, this book ought to be scattered in thousands all over the land."—Presbyterian Messenger.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCE OF ROMAN CATHOLICISM,

WITH INCIDENTS OF CONVENT LIFE.

By ELIZA RICHARDSON, Author of "The Veil Lifted," &c.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"This is a very interesting book. It would be so if it were a romance, it is so life-like, and of such important practical bearing; but it is much more so because it is not a romance, but a piece of actual life. It is a plain and veritable account of a most important crisis in a young person's religious experience—a temporary perversion to Roman Catholicism and (happily) a genuine recovery from it. Its exposure of the secrets of priestly domination over the conscience, and of the practical working of the Confessional, is . . . effective and invaluable."—The Freeman.

Seventh Thousand.

THE VEIL LIFTED: or, The Romance & Reality of Convent Life.

By ELIZA RICHARDSON,

Author of "Personal Experiences of Roman Catholicism."

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"Bearing on almost every page the impress of truth. There is no raving, no exaggeration, nothing that savours of dark and mysterious insinuation; nothing but the expression of deep regret that, under the sanction of the religion of Christ, such a system should be tolerated."—Berwick Warder.

"Convent life is death to all the finer feelings of our nature, and an outrage upon the plainest teachings of the blessed Gospel which has come to us to make us free. And here is a chapter on 'Righteousness by Works,' which is, of course, the great aim of the miserable bondage of the poor prisoners. The book is elegantly written, with a feeling and a pathos becoming such a dismal subject. Ye lovely maidenhood of England, beware of the fearful convent!"—The Christian World.

THE CONFESSIONAL.

A PERSONAL NARRATIVE.

By ELIZA RICHARDSON,

Author of "Personal Experience of Roman Catholicism," "The Veil Lifted," &c.

Neatly printed in Red and Black. Suitable for enclosing in Letters, 1s. per dozen, or 7s. per hundred, post free.

"It was a dark page in my experience, when first I knelt at the feet of a mortal to confess what should have been poured into the ear of God alone. I cannot dwell upon this; but a brief time before it would have for ever put to rest my longings after Romanism. Though I believe my confessor was, on the whole, as guarded as his manner was kind, at some things I was strangely startled, utterly confounded."

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

Established 1822.

FOR the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible throughout Ireland. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities as City Missionaries, and visit all denominations, where permitted. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES—27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN; and 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE.

NOTE.—Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

ANTI-INFIDEL TRACT ENTERPRISE.

ESTABLISHED 1880.

OBJECT.—The gratuitous distribution of Anti-Infidel Literature among the masses at HOME and ABROAD.

URGENT APPEAL. £200 NEEDED.

TO CLOSE THE YEAR FREE OF DEBT.

We have given to missionaries at home and abroad, and to working men and others employed in ironworks, collieries, dockyards, and on the railway, over TWELVE HUNDRED FREE grants of our ANTI-INFIDEL LITERATURE, varying from Five Shillings to £15 in value, but for want of means we are quite unable to continue these distributions, notwithstanding the fact that we are receiving daily applications for free grants. Therefore, unless the necessary aid is forthcoming, the FREE GRANTS will have to be ENTIRELY SUSPENDED.

All subscribers of five shillings and upwards receive a half-price grant of assorted anti-infidel publications, in return for their subscriptions, or, if preferred, packets will be forwarded to any person in the United Kingdom, on receipt of order and remittance. A good plan is to have these tracts distributed where INFIDEL MEETINGS are being held. Donors who can see their way to a promise of an annual subscription will be aiding a work more necessary in this age than any that has preceded it, and those who can only afford a single donation may yet help in proportion to their means.

Any contributions in aid of the ANTI-INFIDEL TRACT ENTERPRISE, will be most gratefully received and acknowledged by the Rev. T. A. Clarke, Treasurer, The Vicarage, Rumworth, Bolton, or by W. R. BRADLAUGH, 70, King's Cross-road, London, W.C.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. J. R. Wood, Baptist Pastor, Holloway.

On the retirement of the Lord Mayor from his civic position, among other features of his memorable Mayoralty, the following deserves notice. He stated at a meeting recently held at Union Chapel, Islington, that it had been his aim during the year to bring into outward expression of union the different church parties which had been working in London for a common good. The effort had met with a ready and cordial response. He had also invited Church dignitaries and the clergy to meet Nonconformists, and had found the result most satisfactory. He retired from office realising that the present spirit of religious toleration is one of the best signs of the times. Many Englishmen will wish that this sentiment were universal. As for our retiring Chief Magistrate, we are sure everybody will feel that the baronetcy conferred on him at the termination of his Mayoralty is an honour well deserved.

A correspondent draws attention in strong terms of description to the state of Hyde Park after nightfall, and truly says that the profligacy permitted within its bounds is "a shame to the nation, and a disgrace to the Metropolis." It is greatly to be regretted that a spirit of supineness and laissez faire has taken possession of our police authorities in such matters. A few lynx-eyed night patrols could surely be spared for the preservation of decorum and good order in this noblest of London's open spaces. A great part of the Metropolis is about to be illuminated by electricity. A few powerful arc lights planted throughout the park might even do more to secure the desired result than increased police vigilance.

Paying a visit recently to one of H.M. prisons, we gleaned the following statements from the Governor and the warders: (1) That drink is, of course, the principal cause of crime; (2) that the "grocer's licence" is especially responsible for drunkenness among women above the lowest class. Said the chief female warder, with tears in her eyes, "Poor things! they are much to be pitied." (3) That the great need for reformation of criminals is to have godly chaplains and Scripture-readers within the jail, to work in co-operation with the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Societies outside; so that the criminals may be converted while in prison, cut off from their evil associations, and looked after when their time expires.

The Governor stated his contention strongly by saying, "The great idea of those who arrange these affairs seems to be to get a chaplain cheap, regardless of his fitness for the work. I believe, if they could, they'd employ the devil as chaplain if they could only get him cheap!" This is a scandalous state of things, if true.

We are thankful, however, to see a growing disposition on the part of some of our city magistrates, and of Mr. Monro, to co-operate with Christian agencies for the repression of crime. The Governor already mentioned said, speaking from many years' experience: "Bad as drunkenness and crime are in this city [in which he was located], if all its Christian agencies, missions, &c., were closed I should soon want from 800 to 1000 more cells!" This is a piece of good cheer to Christian workers, who, at times, are discouraged at seeing so little effect of their labour upon the mass of sin around them. Truly, their presence is felt, though they realise it but little themselves.

It says much for the condition of the county of Westmoreland that a few days ago the magistrates appointed a committee to wait upon the Home Secretary to recommend the closing of the Kendal Prison (the only one in Westmoreland), there being but eleven prisoners in the large building. We wish that other counties were able to take a similar course, and it would be interesting to know what has tended to place Westmoreland in this enviable position. Can it be that a limitation of drink-shops has anything to do with this minimising of crime?

The week commencing on Sunday next is to be observed by those interested in the work of the Y.M.C.A. all over the world as a special week of prayer for young men.

We last week remarked upon the fact that a number of dignitaries of the Church of England, including some earnest temperance reformers, were connected with the Clergy Mutual Insurance Society, which has of late been deriving a portion of its income from an investment of £20,000 in brewery shares. It is gratifying to learn that the bishops and clergy, whose principles were thus outraged, had no knowledge of the investment. The shares have, it is stated, now been disposed of by the Society, so that the skirts of its total abstinence supporters are cleared.

Socialism, trades' unions, and the relation of Christianity to them both, will no doubt continue to occupy public attention. They form the topics of articles in two magazines of the month—The Contemporary Review, and The Nineteenth Century. The former paper is by Dr. Plumptre, Dean of Wells, the latter by Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Positivist. They should be read together; for, while there is agreement, there is also divergence. Both point to the decay of the system of individualism, which assumed that the seeking, on the part of every man, of his own happiness, would lead to the happiness of the greatest number. We do not think, however, it is strictly true, as Mr. Harrison states, that the doctrine of these political economists, dominant thirty years ago, was sustained by the Christian pulpit. We fear it will be no less found that the fusion of modern socialism and trades'-unionism does not mean the passing away of individualism.

The controversies of the period on these great social problems must in the end lead to Christianity, which alone furnishes the true solution. It develops a healthy individualism, by new-creating man. It acknowledges the existence of the rich, and the rights of capital, while it also asserts consideration for man, and for the rights of labour. Excessive inequality in the distribution of the world's goods is wholly contrary to its teaching. Modern Socialism, however, fused into trades'-unionism will bring no healing to the country, if that Socialism is a Secularism, agnostic, and atheistic. The Christian Socialism of Maurice and Kingsley must be baptized into the Evangelism of the Gospel before the world will find a remedy for human selfishness. This is too little emphasised by the able essay in The Contemporary Review.

The subject of betting forms the substance of a legal paper in The Nineteenth Century. No institution, it is affirmed, possesses greater vitality than the betting-ring. Following this is placed the gambling of the Stock Exchange. Both are the trapdoors of modern English life, through which myriads are falling into depths of ruin and destruction. The perusal of the article will lead to the conclusion that merely legal remedies cannot suffice to stay the plague, and it were to be wished that the signs were more favourable of an advance to a higher tone of public opinion on the matter. This, however, transpired in one of our Law Courts at the end of last week: A clerical plaintiff affirmed that he saw a difference between backing a horse in certain turf transactions and those of the Stock Exchange, in which he had been dabbling. A Queen's counsellor declared that to him there was no difference in point of morality, and the Judge supported this opinion.

One of the bad features of modern public life is that when Scripture is quoted or alluded to, either within the House of Commons or in a political speech, it generally takes the form of some flippant parallel at the expense of sacred characters, or a semi-cynical adaptation of sacred expressions and allusions to secular purposes. The habit is growing, and calls for earnest protest, both by precept and example. It is refreshing, therefore, to find Mr. Gladstone, in a recent speech, after discoursing upon the condition of working men in the past and in the present, addressing his audience thus:—

> I have been speaking to you entirely, I may say about that class of goods which are temporal goods. They are not the only goods, but it is not in my commission to lead you to higher things, or to determine the relative importance of the things seen which are temporal, and the things unseen which are eternal... We should fall into a terrible snare and temptation were we ever to suppose that it is through wealth and worldly power that mankind can achieve happiness. The words are as true and solemn as they were when spoken by One who was infallible, "What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

Seeing that the Scriptures alone are the source of true social and political wisdom, there is assuredly no reason why religion and government, whether imperial or social, should be divorced.

We do not suppose that Dr. Marcus Dods will be very grateful to Rev. J. P. Hopps for stating, at the recent annual soirée of the Scottish Unitarian Association, that he intended to ask Dr. Dods to permit him to reprint in the Unitarian Report the sermon, "What is a Christian?" because it "justified the position of the Unitarians in Glasgow." Mr. Hopps went on to add that he "never was much interested in the arithmetical puzzle about the three in one, and Dr. Dods was very much in the same position as himself." After reading to his audience portions of the sermon to which we referred last week, Mr. Hopps claimed for the Unitarian body that it "fitted exactly with the definition of 'What is a Christian?' given in the sermon by the new Professor of Theology in the Free Church of Scotland." These plain-spoken utterances may have the effect of simplifying the issues, and we sincerely trust they may. To us the question appears to be that of evangelical and vital truth as opposed to Socinianism, and it would appear that the leaders of the Unitarian body hold the same view.

In Belfast the bakers are moving for the abolition of night work, chiefly, as it appears at present, in consequence of its bearing upon the desecration of the Lord's day. An appeal to the Belfast ministers, and to the Christian public, has been made through a Belfast contemporary, by a baker, who says that he and his fellows are practically excluded from the house of God, and that a life such as they are compelled to live leads to "practical Atheism." It is urged that, with the necessary reform, the condition of things in regard to the sale of bread would be almost the same; but, even if such were not the case, relief should be given; for it cannot be urged that it is right to secure extra comfort to the body at the cost of the souls of others.

"SHALOM" HOUSE (134, Upper Parliament-street, Liverpool).—This is a pleasant Home of Rest for Christian workers. The blessing of the Lord has rested upon this work since its commencement. A training-school for missionaries has now been added, designed to benefit those who desire to be useful in the service of Christ, without going through a long college course. Young people are invited to communicate with the Superintendent.

PRINCESS HOUSE.—The lady who is now in charge of this important branch of the Y.W.C.A. (106, Brompton-road, S.W.) is Miss Jane McLean, who was a missionary in China for eleven years; not Miss M. McLean, who spent nine years in Japan. These two ladies, it may be added, are twin sisters, and are frequently mistaken one for the other. Miss M. McLean's address is 57, King's-road, Chelsea, S.W.

A MISSIONARY MURDERED.—The melancholy tidings were received last week, in a meagre telegram, from Thursday Island, North Queensland, that Rev. E. B. Savage, one of the missionaries of the London Missionary Society, the native teachers under him, and the crew of the Society's cutter, Mary, had been murdered by natives, in south-eastern New Guinea. In a letter from Mr. Savage, dated June 13 last, he described a visit he had just paid to a wild tribe of skull-hunting cannibals, the Tugeri, by whose treachery his life had been greatly imperilled. Writing on July 29, from Murray Island, his headquarters, Mr. Savage mentioned that he intended starting again for the Fly River district in about a week's time, and it is thought very probable that it was by the Tugeri men that this disastrous tragedy was enacted. Mr. Savage went out to Murray Island in the autumn of 1885.

THE SWISS CONFEDERATION is not ashamed to acknowledge God in its official operations. It has just set into circulation a new five-franc coin, on the edge of which is the legend, Deus Providebit—the Latin form of believing Abraham's statement, "The Lord will provide" (Gen. xxii. 8).

ITTAI THE GITTITE.

AT the last monthly meeting for workers, held at the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff-highway, on Friday evening last, Dr. Neatby gave a heart-stirring address on Ittai the Gittite. We find the account of Ittai in 2 Sam. xv. Especially referring to ver. 21, we see here the real secret of Christian service. It is the service of a person. For power in anything undertaken for Christ, we must have a heart bound to God's king—not alone when all is smooth, but in trial and misfortune, even as Ittai said to David, in life or death. We see here David has captivated Ittai's heart. Has Jesus thus captivated our hearts?

David is emphatically "the king." Solomon was called "the king's son." What are our motives for going into the King's service? Do we think more of the service than the One for whom it is undertaken? A heart taken up with Himself is beyond all price for Christ, and this must lead to truest service. Service must be in his conscious presence if it is to be with power. Here we find Ittai better pleased to die with David than live without him. Ittai heartily liked this; to him it was no sacrifice. How is it we are not on fire in God's service? Not only when thus together, but at all times and everywhere? This is because we know Him so little. The best servant is the one who knows Christ best.

A SPANISH PRIEST CONVERTED.

MADAME LOPEZ RODRIGUEZ writes to us from Figueras, Spain, as follows:—You will rejoice to hear of the conversion of a Roman Catholic priest, Father Rafael de Zafra Menendez. He has had unusual experience in the Church of Rome, having been a friar, a presbitor, a Jesuit Professor in Bordeaux, an "apostolic missionary" in Africa, rector of parishes, Doctor of Divinity, and latterly mission preacher.

In Madrid, Barcelona, and other cities, he is well known as an eloquent and popular preacher. His conversion was remarkable, and the manner in which he was brought in contact with Pastor Lopez Rodriguez, most providential.

On Sunday week he made a public recantation of the errors of Rome, and confession of his faith in Christ as the "one Mediator." Printed notices of the event, with portrait of Father Rafael, were widely circulated over this province (Gerona), and a copy sent to every priest and mayor. We ask the prayers of your readers that Father Rafael may be instrumental in turning many from the darkness of Rome to the marvellous light of the Gospel. He has undoubtedly proved his sincerity by exchanging a position of influence and pecuniary advantage for that of an humble preacher of the truth, and teacher in one of our mission schools, with but a small salary. Further details concerning him will be given in our forthcoming "Letter from Spain," just gone to press, to be followed by his autobiography.

A LARGE DIAMOND.—A lady writes:—"My mother has long wanted to sell a large diamond of old Indian setting, and consecrate it to missions. A lady friend came on a visit to us some days ago and has given £80 for it. This is to go towards the building of a Memorial Chapel, at Malaga, to commemorate the work and sufferings of the Spanish martyr, Manuel Matamoros." The site of the chapel has been given by his aged mother, and a considerable part of the structure has already been erected. Only £50 is now needed to cover the cost. At Criptana, in La Mancha, where a new hall was recently erected, the priests and fanatics commenced a lawsuit, which has ended in favour of the Protestants. Friends wishing to help in the building of the Malaga Hall should communicate with Mr. W. Greene, Oriolet, Loughton, Essex.

SCHOOL-BOYS AND MISSIONS.

A MEETING was held at Morley Halls on Wednesday, last week, to bid farewell to six lady missionaries, including Miss Jenkins, who is supported by the pupils of the Old Hall School, Wellington, and their friends. Lord KINNAIRD, who presided, rejoiced that increased interest is being shown by ladies in foreign work. It was very striking to see sixty to seventy missionaries starting by one P. and O. steamer a few weeks ago. The party was so large that its members had been able to engage one part of the vessel entirely for themselves.

Rev. H. SHARPE, of Hampstead, followed with a very cheering valedictory address. He regretted that so many are content to look forward to God's blessings for the future, and hesitate to claim them now. If Christ has said, "Lo, I am with you alway," why should we look forward to his presence as a thing of the future only? God's servants in the mission field may count upon three blessings—the presence, power, and promise of Christ. The presence of Christ will lead others to Him. All power is assured to Christ in heaven and earth; so He commands his disciples to "go therefore and teach all nations." With the power, St. Paul's "infinite" pleasure in reproaches and infirmities for Christ's sake, will be shared. The promise means something fore-sent. "I am with you alway," even in days of darkness, difficulty, depression, and despair.

Miss Jenkins spoke a few words of encouragement to those ladies who feared the difficulties of undertaking a medical course, like herself. She counted them as small, compared with the blessedness of consecrating a life of increased usefulness to the Master's service.

Miss Harris, the sister of two old pupils of the above-named school, is on the point of returning to Faizabad; and her words of pleasure at returning to work could not fail to convince others that the joy of service does more than make up for the absence from friends at home.

Mr. W. T. Paton, the Finance Secretary of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, encouraged his supporters by telling of the increased numbers of missionaries who are being sent abroad, and of the greater support given at home. The statement was warmly received that the boys of another school, in the Midlands, had promised to support one of the Society's missionaries. We hope the contagion of this desire will rapidly spread.

REV. F. B. MEYER says in The Christian Treasury:—We are very anxious to receive money enough to enable us to take a small farm in Essex, and to rent it for three years, with the view of testing and instructing some of those who come to our common lodging house and plead for an opportunity of regaining their lost place in society. We want money to enable us to adapt the premises for our purpose and to stock the farm. Several competent business men are taking a deep interest in the scheme, but we should like to have £300 guaranteed before we really embark in the enterprise. We propose to raise market-garden produce. The proposed farm consists of forty acres.

HOUSE OF REST, KILBURN.—The monthly all-day meeting, on Friday, November 1, brought together a large gathering of Christian workers and others. The morning hours were chiefly devoted to prayer. The House of Rest with its heavy and unexpected expense for a new drainage system was earnestly pleaded for by many who know by experience the help these houses afford to tired workers. In the afternoon Mr. A. J. Arnold, secretary of the Evangelical Alliance, gave an account of his recent visit to Spanish missions. The evening meeting was conducted by Mr. F. Cook Collis, who drew out the hearts of the audience towards confidence in God, and into sympathy with one another.

UNSECTARIANISM.

THE subject of the Church's division into so many denominations is one which is forcing itself upon the consideration of thoughtful Christians. It is being dealt with in religious periodicals; and upon public platforms speakers are frequently deploring the existence of so many sects, which only serve to advertise the minor matters in which one church differs from another; and the cardinal, vital points of our Christian faith, which unite us all, are being emphasised. Unions formed upon narrow denominational lines are being shaken. The Established Church, with the Book of Common Prayer as its basis, is being torn asunder by internal dissensions. Mere methods of Church government, such as form the basis of almost every other denomination, are being proved on the one hand too narrow, and on the other too broad. They exclude those whom Christ has manifestly received, and include such wide differences of opinion on essential truth as makes the union little better than a name. The ordinance of Baptism, important as it is, is being declared insufficient as a basis of denominational fellowship. The discussions in the Baptist Union prove that agreement upon that ordinance is compatible with serious disagreement upon questions of vital importance. And those who practise believers' baptism are compelled to separate from some with whom on that subject they are agreed.

The Archbishop of Canterbury is making proposals for some kind of union with Nonconformist Christians. The Bishop of Rochester is expressing his eager desire for union. Mr. Spurgeon is declaring that he has much greater liberty in belonging to the whole Church of Christ than he has in belonging to any particular denomination. Conventions are multiplying throughout the country, at which Christians meet as Christians, without any distinction as to sect, and God is owning such conventions by making them the means of greatly quickening the life of his people, and of calling out many for his service.

Surely all these are significant signs, and a careful observer cannot fail to notice them, and to consider to what they all point. In the judgment of many they indicate that the same Spirit of God is at work upon many hearts, and is revealing the lines upon which his blessing is most likely to be experienced. It is the voice of God, and is the beginning of the "removal of those things which may be shaken, as of things that are made, that those things that cannot be shaken may remain" (Heb. xii. 27). Men whose interest is confined to the single denomination with which they are connected will tremble at the thought of their little system being removed. But those who have learned to realise that denominational distinctions are contrary to the mind of Christ, and are one great hindrance to the success of his work, will rejoice that, when all sects and parties fall, the kingdom which cannot be moved will remain, and the King Himself will have greater triumph, and consequently greater glory.

But the term undenominationalism is in bad odour. The idea which many have of it incapacitates them for rightly appreciating the present movement. In their judgment it is a movement in the direction of greater narrowness and exclusiveness and bigotry. Besides which, their method of defence suggests that they have never brought their denominational systems to the test of Scripture, and are therefore unable to see in them anything antagonistic to its teaching, or inimical to the prosperity of the Church. While therefore the unsectarian spirit grows, there are those who earnestly and conscientiously resist it. While denominational separations are being denounced and deplored, there are many who boldly defend them. A brief examination of the grounds of their defence may perhaps show how insufficient they are.

The letter of "J. A," in THE CHRISTIAN of Oct. 18, suggests at least two considerations as justifying denominational distinctions and titles. The first is that "unity in diversity" is the law of God's works in nature, and therefore the same thing may be expected in the spiritual realm. The second is that the denominational name is only a protest for some neglected truth.

(1) The first of these considerations is frequently urged against those to whom divisions in the Church are a source of grief. The fact is emphasised that there is no uniformity in nature, and that, if there were, the beauty and attractiveness of nature would be destroyed. To make all the trees alike, all the flowers the same shape and hue, to level down all the mountains, and raise all the valleys until the whole earth was one monotonous plain—this would be as undesirable as it would be impossible. Such is the argument which is regarded as a sufficient justification for the many divisions of the Church. Though its fallacy appears even upon the surface, yet it is seriously proposed and demands examination.

The argument clearly destroys itself by proving too much. If diversity finds its proper expression in the Church of Christ by the formation of sects, then, of course, every diversity must require a separate sect. Would those who advance such an argument be prepared for this? If not, where would they draw the line? At things that are non-essential? But the matters that now divide the sects are frequently declared to be non-essential; if, therefore, we begin to divide upon non-essentials, what is to hinder our continuing the process, until each little difference expresses itself in its own little system? The church at Corinth, for example, some members of which were of Paul, some of Apollos, some of Cephas, and some of Christ, ought to have given expression to these diversities of opinion and preference, in the formation of separate churches, each calling itself by the name of its own chosen leader. Those members of the church, too, who had knowledge that an idol was nothing, ought to have separated from their brethren who still believed that an idol was something—a distinction considerably greater than any which divides the evangelical churches to-day. Have those who use this argument considered to what it leads?

The argument fails also by totally misunderstanding those against whom it is directed. To represent them as pleading for uniformity of judgment upon all matters, as desiring that all men shall have the same ideas as to Christian worship, Church government, or even as to the details of Christian doctrine, only reveals that they have not taken pains to understand what the present movement means. We do not want to destroy diversity, but we want that diversity to have its proper and Scriptural expression. The New Testament Church, including as it did Jews who had learned to reverence the Divinely appointed ceremonies of the Temple service, and Gentiles accustomed to the idolatries of Paganism, was yet one Church. Its differences called for mutual forbearance among the members themselves, but were never made the grounds of separate Church organisations, and were, therefore, not advertised to the world. The motto of that Church was: "In things essential, unity; in things doubtful, liberty; in all things, charity." This strange argument for denominationalism would alter part of the quotation, and say: "In things doubtful, separation." It is a poor compliment to the Church of Christ to suggest that diversity in that community of saved persons must find public expression by the formation of so many different sects.

(2) The second consideration urged is that the denominational name is a protest for some neglected truth. We gravely question whether this is so. A method of Church government, which, in almost every case, forms the basis of a denominational system, may be, to some few persons, "a neglected truth," for which their particular system is supposed to be a protest. But to the great bulk of the members of each Church the method of Church government is a matter of the greatest indifference. Excluding the Established Church, to which, because it is established, many have the strongest loyal attachment, and others the most powerful conscientious objection, the systems of Nonconformity do not, to most Christians, appear to connect themselves with any "neglected truth." Without the slightest sense of unfaithfulness to God or his truth members pass from membership in one Nonconformist Church to another. They are seldom influenced by the question of the method of Church government; but generally by their approval of the views preached from the pulpit, and the general character and tone of the Church. The "neglected truth," therefore, for which many denominations are a protest is not easy to discover.

The peculiarity of this argument is that it is urged almost exclusively by Baptists. "J. A." proves himself a Baptist by saying that "when the Church does her duty, and becomes Baptist, the epithet will be used or needed no more." Evidently he would not allow the argument to apply equally to every other denomination. The Editor's question is significant: "Would our correspondent say that when the Church does her duty, and becomes Episcopal, Congregational, Presbyterian, and Methodist, these epithets will be used or needed no more?" The meaning of the argument to "J. A." is, evidently, that the name of "Baptist" is a protest for believers' baptism as a neglected truth. The writer does not wish to weaken in any degree the protest for that ordinance.

But the question again presents itself, Is a denominational name the New Testament method of witnessing for the truth? If the Lord's prayer is for a manifested oneness of the Church, are we acting in the spirit of that prayer when we announce by our distinctive name our separation from other Christians, with whom, upon vital matters we are agreed? Does not the very method of our protest defeat itself? The title "Baptist" does not to some persons suggest a Scriptural truth, but rather recalls the narrowness and harsh teaching with which the doctrine has in some cases been associated. Many accept it without ever attending a Baptist church; and many never hear about it at all, becaues prevented by the barrier of the denominational name, and the denominational pride which the name fosters.

To hear men glorying in the name of Baptist grieves us, indicating, as it does, such an entire absence of sympathy with the desire of the Saviour that his people should be one. While the New Testament injunction is that we should endeavour "to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace"; and while divisions are declared to be the evidence of a carnal mind, it does seem strange that men should glory in their separation from other members of the one body of Christ.

Will not the friends to whom denominations and their distinctive names are still dear, bring their judgment upon the matter to the test of the Divine Word? Let them not resist the movement which is evidently of God. The thoughts of many hearts are being exercised upon this subject. There is a widespread desire to break through denominational barriers, and to cultivate closer fellowship with all who love our Lord Jesus Christ. Our distinctive names are recognised by many to be the Church's great weakness. These things are signs that the Lord's prayer is beginning to be answered. Let his prayer be ours also, until the manifested oneness of the Church destroys the unbelief of the world (John xvii. 21, 23).

Youths' Artesian Home, Bayswater.

How many times the question has arisen, both in the home circle and in the minds of Christian workers, "What shall we do with our youths?" After leaving the Sunday-school, the boy finds himself too young for the Y.M.C.A., and drifts hither and thither, an easy prey to the many temptations peculiar to his age. It is also at this period that numbers leave home to be apprenticed to some of the large West-end drapery establishments, and the majority, coming from country homes, are without relations in London.

After allowing for all that is done by the employers for the youths in their establishments, there remains much that can be done to care for their spiritual and moral welfare.

This need has been very practically met by the Artesian Evening Home, at 15, Hereford-road, W. where the youths can pleasantly spend their spare hours. On Sunday afternoons a conversational Bible-class is held, and on Tuesday evenings a Gospel address is given. The reading-room is open every evening, and is supplied with a few papers, monthly magazines, and a library. Another room is used as a recreation-room, chess, draughts, &c., being supplied. There is sleeping accommodation for a few boys—a very important adjunct to the work; and Mutual Educational Classes have been commenced. The Home at the present time is much in need of help. The hon. sec. is Mr. Chas. Appel; address at the Home.

A SOUP KITCHEN NEEDED.—Sir,—A gentleman some time since put a most effective soup kitchen at my disposal. He has recently required the plant at his house in the country, so that I am unexpectedly left without a most needful instrument in my work amongst the East London poor. During the few months of the present year in which I worked the kitchen, splendid help was rendered to many half-starved families, and in the best way—not by dole, but by sale of a nutritious commodity at a very low figure. The winter is again upon us; the people are crying out. A new kitchen will cost £100 to £120. If some friend will give the kitchen, I will see that it is efficiently worked.—Faithfully yours,

W. Evans Hurndall.

The First Epistle of Peter.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

VIII.—REDEEMED BY BLOOD.

1 Peter i. 18, &c.

We belong to a redeemed race (1 Tim. ii. 6). The majority of men do not know this. Others, knowing it, do not allow their knowledge to influence their life or conduct, but sell their birthright for a mess of pottage. Happy are they who not only hold it as an intellectual acquisition, but permit it to become the moulding principle of their entire life. To such the words of the Apostle come with marvellous directness and force: "Ye know that ye were redeemed."

Probably it is the most momentous fact about us that we have been redeemed. It is much to have been created. The most awful woe that even Christ could pronounce was that a man should never have been born. It is much to be endowed with life in a world so full of marvellous possibilities as ours. It is much to have a soul, which can call up the past, or interrogate the present, or anticipate and prepare for the future. But it is more that we have been redeemed. Redeemed, as Israel from the bondage and tyranny of Egypt; or as a slave, by his goel, from captivity to some rich creditor; or as the captive of some hideous vice emancipated from its thrall. Redeemed! Bought! Ransomed! Not that heaven is bought for us, but we bought for heaven. This will perhaps distinguish us for evermore among the inhabitants of other worlds.

I. The Cost of our Redemption has been Immense.—(1) Negatively. "Not with corruptible things, as silver and gold." A moneyed man, who has been accustomed to look on his wealth as the key to every treasure-chest, is sometimes startled to find how little it can really do. It touches the rim and circumference of life, but it fails utterly in questions that affect the heart of human existence. Money cannot compensate for broken vows, or unsay cruel words which eat into the soul like acid, or bring back colour to the pallid cheek of the darling, cold and still in death, or atone for the lack of love. "If a man would give all the substance of his house for love, it would be utterly contemned." Money can only purchase things which are as corruptible as itself; but when it enters or seeks to enter into the sphere of souls, the eternal and incorruptible, its way is barred; its currency will not pass; its claims to be heard are nonsuited.

You cannot dissect an argument with a knife, or measure love by the yard measure, or weigh souls by avoirdupois. And it is equally impossible to ransom them from sin by corruptible things, as silver and gold. There is nothing in common between the gold and silver, which, however long they endure, must perish in the end, and the soul, which is of ethereal temper, and is impervious to destruction and decay—immortal as the being of God.

God could have given suns of gold, and stars of silver, constellations of bodies glowing with precious metals, but none of these would have been sufficient to free one soul from the curse or penalty of sin, or to change it into a loyal and loving subject of his reign. Though the scales of the universe groaned on the one side with the heaped treasures of heaven, the jewels of its walls, the gold of its pavements, yet one soul placed on the other would outweigh them all. Matter accounts for nothing in the weighing chamber of eternity. And therefore the Creator must give not things, but life—not his gifts, but Himself, ere He could redeem.

(2) Positively.—"But with the precious blood of Christ." The blood is the life. Life is man's supreme possession, and his supreme gift. To give anything less than life is to fall short of the completest self-sacrifice for another. But when a man has given that, he has given all he can. And, in addition, when blood is mentioned with the laying down of life, there is the further thought of suddenness, of intense suffering, of violence; yea, more, no one familiar with Leviticus, and with that whole system in which the Apostle Peter was educated from boyhood, could ever encounter such a reference as this without being instantly reminded of that sacrificial system, in which lambs were offered up in flocks for the sins of the people.

When the Apostle speaks of being redeemed by the blood of Christ, "as of a lamb without blemish and without spot," he not only refers to the agony, and violence, and circumstances of his death, but gives renewed utterance to that first conception about the Lord which had fallen upon his ear from the lips of the great forerunner, whose disciple he had been in the earliest days of his religious history (John i. 29). And there can be no doubt that he wishes clearly to connect the Sufferer of Calvary with the lambs daily offered in the morning and evening Temple worship, with those slain at the great annual feast of Passover, and with others, the blood of which was constantly flowing to make an atonement for sins.

In considering the number of lambs sacrificed in the Jewish temple, we must always remember that a large proportion of their flesh was eaten, whether by the priests or the offerers; and that every method was adopted to keep the sacred structure pure, and sweet, and clean. And when we once admit that it is the office of the lower orders of creation to subserve the necessary interests of man, there is not much difference between their dying to set forth in type great spiritual truths, which are the life of the soul, or to provide suitable nutriment for the sustenance of the body. But, let me repeat, in the Jewish sacrifices these two objects were most frequently combined.

It is most important to give due weight to the suggestion of this passage, which is corroborated by many similar ones throughout the Bible, that the death of Christ was no afterthought consequent on man's fall, but was arranged before the foundation of the world. Before the mountains were brought forth, or the stars were rolled on their wondrous paths, or the first ray of light shot through the gloom, in the thought and purpose of God, our Lord was already the Lamb slain. "He was foreordained (designated or set apart) from before the foundation of the world" (see also Rev. xiii. 8).

And so the sacrifices of the Jewish ritual were in fact "the patterns of things in the heavens." When Moses went up into the Mount, it is probable that he was permitted to behold the Divine purpose and plan of man's redemption; which, as it passed before his thought, took shape in that symbolism of priest, and sacrifice, and rite, which was God's method of tuition to the chosen people, affording a rudimentary and material outline of eternal realities.

We must not think Calvary was moulded on Leviticus, but that Leviticus was moulded on Calvary, as it stood out from all eternity before the mind of God. Yet it is unmistakeable that Leviticus furnishes the true key to the understanding of the death of the cross. In those earlier books the Holy Spirit supplies us with the nomenclature and terms which He was afterwards going to employ. And just as it would be absurd to try to understand Euclid's deductions, without first studying his definitions, so it is in vain to attempt the solution of the marvels of the cross, without entering into the force and meaning of the rites and sacrifices of the ancient Hebrew system.

Now, if there is one thing more clear than another in the Levitical sacrifices, it is the substitution of the innocent for the guilty, and it is under this aspect that we must consider the death of our Redeemer. It is in this sense that He gave Himself for us. And this is the reason why the Apostle lays such emphasis on its preciousness. Anything less than the costliest blood would not have availed, because it must not be simply the blood of an individual sufferer, but of one who could suffer for a race of sinners.

The Blood of Jesus was precious, because of the dignity of his nature, and because of his perfect character. Without blemish, that is, without personal sin. Without spot, that is, not defiled by contact with sinners. Lamblike in meekness, gentleness, purity, and uncomplaining suffering. And thus it was adequate for the work of cleansing away the terrible aggregate of sin. Oh, precious blood! Oh, sacred heart of Jesus, from which it flowed, holy, loving, tender, broken with grief! Oh, snowy whiteness of robes washed in that fountain, and purer than the snow!

II. The Object of our Redemption.—"From your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers." Do we sufficiently realise the position into which the shedding of the blood of Jesus has brought us who believe? It is our ransom price, the purchase-money of our entire being to be Christ's. The Apostles lived in the days of the most merciless form of slavery, but they never hesitated to borrow from it the imagery by which to set forth our relationship to our Saviour. "Not your own, but bought with a price." "Denying the Lord who bought them."

The purchaser of any slave regarded him as his chattel, his goods. He could, if he chose, fling him to feed his lampreys, and none might remonstrate or punish. He looked on all his belongings, and earnings, and talents, as so much emolument for himself. His word and will were absolute law. Such are the rights which our glorious Master has over us. He has redeemed us from the curse and penalty of sin to be a people for possession—his very own.

Who, then, of us can live as we have been wont, following after vanity, treading in the footsteps of our forefathers, content to do as others before us? New claims have come in. Our Redeemer is Lord. As He has set us free from the curse and penalty of sin, so now He demands of us to come out and be separate for Himself; leaving the husk for bread; the bubble for the substance; the vain conversation received by tradition, for purity, holiness, and devotion to Himself.

What a marvellous exchange there is for us in Jesus Christ. Our vain conversation exchanged for faith and hope, our imitation of the fathers for the upward following of Him who was raised from the dead to glory, our reliance on tradition for vital contact with Christ Himself.

Have you assumed this attitude? If not, without delay confess with tears that you have robbed your rightful Master; recognise his claims; give up yourself entirely to his service, and let the time past more than suffice you to have followed the tradition of the fathers, with their vanities and sins. The blood of Jesus, like that of Asahel shed on the pathway of the warriors, shall make us halt in our career, and shall turn us to a better mind.

III. The Characteristic of the Redeemed.—"Who by Him do believe in God." Our faith and hope, which at the beginning of our Christian life are mainly occupied with Christ, so that we find ourselves most often addressing Him in prayer, pass through Him, who is God, to the Great I Am. The Father is known and loved through the Son. The Son reveals the Father as He promised (John xiv. 7). God becomes All in all; and the soul is satisfied.

THE HOWARD ASSOCIATION.

The recently issued report of this Society, which has for its object the best methods of crime-prevention and penal treatment, is worthy of the careful attention of our readers, as containing much interesting and instructive information and suggestion on important social questions. Amongst the subjects which have engaged the attention of the Association are the inequality and inadequacy of the sentences sometimes pronounced by judges and magistrates, and the necessity of obviating the conviction, or at least the continued imprisonment, of innocent persons: and the suggestion that the duty of investigating such cases should be assigned to one of the prison inspectors is deserving of attention by the authorities.

The extension of the system of boarding out pauper children (which has been successful wherever adopted—e.g., at Glasgow, Birmingham, Worcester, Liverpool, and West Derby) is also urged; and in this the Society is doing good service, for local authorities are not yet sufficiently alive to the fact that the rearing of pauper children in huge barrack-like institutions, instead of in homes, is responsible for much of the existing pauperism.

The report also advocates the further employment of women in police and pauper administration, and we are at one with the Association in setting a high value upon womanly sympathy, common sense, and shrewdness in such work as the custody, control, and reclamation of female offenders, especially the fallen ones, and the care of pauper women and children.

The Howard Association is practical in its aims and judicious in its methods, and is deserving of all support by the public.

THE BIBLE.—God has given us his wonderful Word, and its different portions are not placed haphazard. He gives it in perfect order. There is a first book and a last book; and the same Spirit of God who inspired the workers, doubtless inspired those who received the writings, and guided them in putting the books together as God would have them put. You do not put all the dinner together into one great bowl, and say to your children, "Help yourself." You begin with the soup, then the meat, and so on—every dish in its order, according as it is best suited for health and digestion. If you want to have good spiritual health and digestion take God's food in God s order. Begin with Genesis in the Old Testament, and Matthew in the New; and work right through them.—Rev. Hubert Brooke.

LOVE'S SALVATION.

The mother bends with kisses o'er the child
Too young to heed or prize her tenderness;
The innocent, the pure, the undefiled,
Need not for loving word or fond caress.
But they—the guilt-stained, and the tempest-tossed,
On life's rough seas, bowed low 'neath guilt and shame;
Might they but hear a kind voice, free from blame,
Call gently once the old familiar name,
Or feel one such caress—they were not lost.

God speaks to such through human voices near.
If all are harsh, "God turns from me," they say;
"I am alone, and never prayer, or tear,
Is breathed, or shed, my sliding steps to stay."
Yet God loves on, and through the gloom He saith,
In each kind, human touch, "Avoid despair";
Love is salvation. Cross of Christ declare;
His own redeemed proclaim it everywhere:
"Love hides the sin, and saves the soul from death."

SEAMEN IN RIO DE JANEIRO.

Dear Sir,—A Sailors' Mission is greatly needed for the Harbour of Rio de Janeiro (Brazil). A number of Christians living in that city are anxious to see more done for the seamen visiting that port They desire to find a young man fitted for such a work, to go out and undertake it. I can speak from personal experience as to the need. Before I went into mission work among the Brazilians, I opened a Sailors' Mission at Rio. During the eight months I spent in seeking to preach Christ to the seamen, I would visit as many as fifteen ships in one day, giving tracts and sowing good seed amongst the men. I never found any difficulty in getting the men together at the meetings ashore in the mission-room. There were many professed conversions; numbers signed the pledge; several prodigal sons were taken off the streets, and helped home to their friends.

I will mention one out of several cases that more than repaid me for my work among seamen. A young man swam ashore from his ship, because of ill-treatment, mixed with the loafing, drunken crew found in all large ports in foreign lands, and soon became one of them. He was sent by a lady to see me, and was truly converted to God. He remained with me some weeks, helping in our mission work. When he told me his story, I found he was a scholar, and had been educated for the law. When he came to see me he was without coat, vest, or shoes; to-day he holds a good position at Buenos Ayres, mixes in the best society, and is doing good work for Christ and temperance.

If we can get a man to go out, his support will be raised at Rio; but we should be glad to receive help in England for his outfit and passage. Any interested in this work, and desiring information, may write to me at Victoria-road, Woolston, Southampton.—Yours in the Gospel work, Gloucester. Herbert Soper.

JOSEPH RABINOWITZ.—Meetings have been arranged for those who wish to hear this eminent Christian Jew, on Tuesday, November 12, at 3 p.m., in Lower Exeter Hall; and on Thursday, November 14, at 7.30 p.m., in Mildmay Conference Hall.

PADDINGTON HALL AND HYDE PARK MISSION.—This Mission closed its eighteenth series of meetings in Hyde Park on Wednesday, last week, after one of the finest summers for many years. In all seventy-three meetings were held, at which 500 Gospel addresses were given. A large number of tracts were circulated. Many thousands of persons thus came under the sound of the Gospel. The workers were blessed with cheering cases of conversion. The Mission is now looking forward to its winter's work among fallen women, dust sifters, and corner men, who are brought together by free teas. The superintendent is Mr. John Davidge, 90, Church-street, Paddington-green, W.

Medical Students.

Some sixty or seventy of these youthful disciples of Esculapius met at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, last Friday evening, to celebrate the anniversary of the Medical Prayer Union. The Union has a senior branch for fully qualified practitioners, but they were sparsely represented. To show his interest in his student friends, Professor Macalister came all the way from Cambridge, expressly to preside. At the close of the meeting he took train again for the University city of Fenland.

In a simply expressed, but highly practical, little presidential address, the Professor said that no class of society required to cultivate the spirit of prayer more than members of the medical profession. They are, of necessity, brought into constant connection with the great unseen forces of the world; and, if they would not be mere gropers in the dark, they needed to know God, not as an impersonal force, but as a Person, to whom they could go in prayer, with the assurance that He will hear, as an earthly father heeds the cry of his child. Medical men and students have special temptations in the direction of materialism. The phenomenon of death is to them a daily commonplace, and they are so familiar with the misery resulting from sin that they are apt to take it as a matter of course, and to seek an explanation of everything on a purely physical basis. Such an institution as this Prayer Union is specially valuable to the young student leading a lonely life in London, and the Christian companionships it affords are of incalculable help to him.

An interesting abstract of the year's report was read by the secretary, Mr. W. McAdam Eccles. The chief feature of progress during the year has been the increased desire for evangelistic work among medical students. A special mission to students has been arranged for, to be conducted by Dr. Harry Grattan Guinness, at Devonshire House, from November 25 to 30. A Medical Missionary Association has been started at the London Hospital, and a branch of the Prayer Union has been re-formed at Charing Cross Hospital. Sympathetic reference was made in the report to the loss sustained by the death of Dr. S. O. Habershon, the first President of the Union; his son, Dr. S. H. Habershon, has consented to be a vice-president in his father's place.

An address by Mr. W. Carruthers, the well-known naturalist of the British Museum, formed the chief item in the programme. Disclaiming any particular qualification to speak to medical students, he succeeded in saying much that could not but prove helpful to them in their future work. He said that all the advantage they could gain from the gifted medical teaching faculty of London was not so important to them as the fact that they had joined this Prayer Union, and so started out on right lines. He would take it for granted that they believed in a personal God; in a moral law; in man's power of free choice between good and evil; and, at the same time, man's inability of himself to choose the good or to atone for past misdoing; and, finally, in the offer of salvation through Jesus Christ. If they held all these things firmly, he was not afraid of the result of any speculative inquiries that might confront them in their studies or in the exercise of their profession. A special difficulty might come to them from the prevalence of unbelief among many who are foremost in the knowledge of medical and other sciences. It is a distressing fact that so many are led astray in these inquiries. All the attempts of an intellectual philosophy, ancient and modern, to explain the facts and circumstances of social life, have failed; and there is no explanation that will account for the state of things in the world, but the fact of human sin, and of man's deliberate departure from the high estate in which God created him. Mr. Carruthers urged Christian students to seek to induce their companions to make a present decision with respect to these important matters, as delay might be fatal. He referred impressively to the circumstance that the late Mr. Charles Darwin was at one time a professor of Christianity, but his researches, conducted from a purely physical standpoint, had led him in later years almost to the belief that there was no need in the world for a Creator at all. The proverb about looking through nature up to nature's God is a false one. We can only get to know God through Jesus Christ; having gained that knowledge, our study and our work will afford endless evidences of the presence and power of the Great Creator and giver of life. A great deal that goes for science in the present day is nothing but the dreams of human imagination. If we look at things from the standpoint of first principles, we shall be able to distinguish between the false science and the true.

Dr. J. Maxwell alluded to the formal inauguration, at a meeting at Exeter Hall on the previous day, of the Students' Missionary Union, and said he looked for great things in the future of missions from this movement.

We doubt not that our readers will make it a matter of prayer, as well as effort, that the coming special mission to medical students at Devonshire House may be fruitful in good results.

Protestant Alliance Meetings.

ROMANISM AND RITUALISM.

Romanism and Ritualism are so intimately related that it is difficult to discuss the one without referring to the other. It is not astonishing, therefore, that they were associated on Thursday last, on the occasion of a Conference and public meeting held in Exeter Hall, under the auspices of the Protestant Alliance. The proceedings were fraught with a good deal of enthusiasm, and it is hoped that their influence will be widespread and lasting. The Hon. P. Carteret Hill presided over the Conference, at which addresses were delivered by Rev. Dr. Hiles Hitchens, Mr. W. C. Maughan (Glasgow), Rev. Dr. Wylie, and others. Mr. A. H. Guinness, secretary, reported that during last year 400 towns were visited in the United Kingdom, and more than 500 meetings held, attended by upwards of 600,000 people. The lecturers had found that, as a rule, the working classes are opposed to Romanism, believing that it would lead to despotism.

The large hall was well filled in the evening, and Colonel Sandys, M.P., who occupied the chair, in the course of a brief speech enlarged upon the proposal of the Government yet further to endow Roman Catholic education in Ireland. He also read from The London Gazette the announcement that an envoy extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the Pope had been appointed on a special mission to the Vatican, with reference to questions of jurisdiction under the Royal Proclamation, providing for the existing establishment of religion in the island of Malta. Loud cries of "Shame" followed the reading, and the meeting was altogether with the speaker when he added that, gradually and silently, points of vantage in Church and State are being occupied by those whose evident object is to undermine the Protestant constitution of this country. Alluding to the spread of Ritualism, he declared that the time has certainly come for the laity of England to defend themselves from the teaching of the clergy.

Mr. W. Johnston, M.P., moved a resolution protesting against Government recognition of the Papal claims to supremacy, and pledging determination to resist the introduction into Parliament of any measure to provide at the national cost for the higher education of Roman Catholics in Ireland. Rev. Dr. Kerr, of Glasgow, in seconding, delivered an address which was highly appreciated. He maintained that, if the members of the British Cabinet are true patriots, they will withdraw their educational proposal. He declared it a shame that concessions by our Government to the Papacy can be thrown in the teeth of the Sovereign and statesmen of Italy, who are manfully working out their deliverance from the Apollyon of the Vatican. Rev. James Stevenson, of Edinburgh, showed that there is good ground for alarm at the march of events. Already large grants have been made to the Romish Church for the maintenance of colleges and schools. The elementary schools are so badly conducted that the passes range from five to eight per cent. in the various subjects; while in Scotland they amount to from 90 to 95 per cent. The resolution was carried unanimously.

Sir Arthur Blackwood introduced resolutions on sacerdotalism as now prevalent in the Church of England, and the revival of monasticism as recently proposed. None too soon Protestant feeling is being aroused. Having suggested the establishment of with agents going about among the people, he gave an account of the encouraging labours of one such worker in a London district. In the course of two and a half years, no fewer than fifty-two children have been removed from Roman Catholic to Protestant schools; and eighteen children who were on the point of entering the Romish school were prevented. Among other operations of the missionary, was the warning of adults when about to enter the Romish Church. Whatever we do, we must not omit getting down on our knees before God, for strength and blessing, in the fight against Rome. We must guard our national liberties and prosperity, but before both these we must place the honour of the Lord Jesus Christ. Romanism and Ritualism depreciate and deny the value of Christ's finished sacrifice upon the cross, disparage and dishonour the value of his everlasting priesthood at the right hand of God, and dethrone him of his supremacy. Therefore, it is against Christ that Rome contends, and for Him and with Him alone, must we fight.

Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston threw the light of the past upon the proposal to restore monasticism in our midst. The harm which the system has wrought in the past is incalcuable. It sets up class distinctions, of which the New Testament says nothing. Answering the question, "What would you suggest instead?" the speaker recommended the organisation of evening work for the laity, that they might, according to an arranged plan, visit the poor and friendless, and read God's Word, and cheer and help them. Rev. Richard Roberts (Wesleyan) also spoke, showing that by lending encouragement to Rome we are bringing back the times of superstition, idolatry, and barbarism. The meeting was of one mind throughout. Several of the speakers urged the desirableness of true friends of the Reformation lending their influence and support to the Protestant Alliance.

A Y.M.C.A. CONVENTION recently held at Newcastle, Pa., was well attended, and was marked by some earnest practical discussions. Mr. Ira D. Sankey, who is a native of Newcastle, was in charge of the song. The new Y.M.C.A. building presented by Mr. Sankey has been formally handed over to the Association.

LORD MAYOR'S DAY.—Dear Sir,—Last year we were able to give a substantial meal and free entertainment to 3000 of the East-end poor, while the great banquet was in progress at the Guildhall on Lord Mayor's Day. This has now become an annual institution, and we hope to give a meal to a similar number this week, if the necessary funds are forthcoming. Numbers of the poorest are looking forward to this annual treat. I need hardly say that extreme poverty is the only test.—Yours faithfully, Fredk. N. Charrington.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

CHELTENHAM, OCT. 22—24.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 24.

THE third and last day of the Conference dawned more brightly than its two predecessors, which had more of the damp and drizzly element than was altogether agreeable to the visitor. In response to the invitation of Canon Bell, the rector, some hundred and fifty met around the table of the Lord at ten o'clock, and remembered his dying love.

A large company came together in the Assembly Rooms at eleven o'clock, when Mr. BENJAMIN THOMAS, of Bristol, presided. The first of the three addresses was by Rev. Dr. E. E. JENKINS, on and the present necessity for firmly and fully maintaining these doctrines. The achievements of Christianity, he said, from the beginning of its course, have been wrought in the power of a belief in these fundamental truths. Thus it is that the Gospel has had a wondrous fascination for the common people of the earth. The manhood of Jesus by itself would not arrest us and hold us, without the mystery of his Godhead. Let the latter go, and the former goes with it, and we have no Christ left. You may construct a moral code from the teachings of Buddha, but there is no sanction or authority behind it to give it force. Modern unbelievers, it is true, admire and applaud Christ's moral purity, but deny the miraculous element in his character. The antichrist of to-day is more nearly an angel of light than at any former time. People will not read theology, but they will read novels and magazine articles; and so the rejection of Christ's Divinity through these channels is sapping the faith of our sons and daughters. In the study of the miraculous the reason of man must always stand still; we have again to become as little children if we would enter the kingdom of heaven. Everything precious in the Christian religion rests on the miracle; with that discredited, the New Testament, not in part, but in whole, is an imposture, and the Christianity built upon it is a lie. Christ's self-revelations were few. As to his pre-existence He said in his memorable prayer: "Glorify Thou Me with thine own self with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was." The Apostle John's commentary on that is: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." In another of these rare self-disclosures Christ claimed that all power in heaven and in earth had been given to Him of God, and this thought is amplified in a remarkable passage in one of the Epistles of Paul. Can any honest reader of the Gospels and Epistles deny that their writers were actuated by an unshaken belief in the Divinity of their Lord and Master? If they did not so believe, then they were guilty of conspiracy and a violation of the veriest rudiments of good faith. Christianity, therefore, stands or falls with the miraculous birth, life, atonement, and ascension of our Lord. With the living personal Christ reasoned out of it, it has no authority, no power to comfort or to save. Any other hypothesis is inconceivable and untenable.

Then as to the atonement of Christ, we have his own wondrous declaration (John iii. 16) that He was the gift of God's love for the salvation of the world and a sacrifice for its sins. No subject is so familiar to the human race as that of propitiation, and none so easily explained to the rudest of them, as well as the most cultivated. The burdens and miseries of the world prepare it for the atoning sacrifice. This, at any rate, was the Gospel of the Apostles. To their fathers Christ's sacrifice was pictured forth in many a type. This atoning sacrifice is not a mere accessory or a part of the Gospel; it is itself the Gospel. It was to the Greek thinkers foolishness, and, therefore, modern objections to it are not at all original. But with all the wisdom and experience of eighteen centuries behind us we can testify that it is the power of God unto salvation. It was a Gospel to the poor, as our Lord said; but there is none other for the rich or the learned, and indeed nothing could be better fitted to carry the highest minds into lofty regions of thought and speculative research.

Dr. Jenkins, in closing, showed how wonderfully the Christian Church is applying this Gospel of a Divine sacrifice, in the salvation of people from the most terrible evils, and in the bringing about of social and individual reforms that could not otherwise be accomplished. What is the example of the dead moralist doing in this direction? Nothing, as compared with the winning ministry of Christian disciples and followers of the Divine, crucified and risen Son of God.

THE PRIMITIVE GENESIS RECORDS,

attested by the oldest Gentile traditions, was the interesting subject allotted to CANON FAUSSET. Holy Scripture, he said, like the Saviour's inner vest, was woven from the top throughout. It is an organic unity. The first eleven chapters of Genesis are regarded by some modern critics as unhistorical; but if we sacrifice these all the rest goes with them, for they are the foundation of the whole. These eleven chapters were quoted six times by Christ, thirty-eight times by Paul, six times by Peter, seven times by John, once by James, twice by Jude, twice by the assembled Apostles, thrice by Luke, once by Stephen. Scientists hold that man has been evolved from the ape, or some such brute, and they feel it logically necessary to hold that man evolved for himself a religion from a primitive state of no religion. Let us see what light the Bible story of Babel, compared with the widespread traditions of mankind, sheds on the question.

At Babel, men tried to defeat God's purpose of the orderly distribution of mankind, by building a vast tower as a centre of unity. They had lost the true centre of rest in God, and tried to make up for it by a forced outward unity. They were the agnostics of the time, ignoring God rather than denying Him. Instead of worshipping God, they worshipped the heavenly bodies, dedicating their tower to the visible heavens or sky. "Let us make us a name" does not refer to renown among men, but to the making of a symbol for worship, a visible representation of the invisible God. In all Pagan religions, sun worship is the first departure from the spiritual worship of the unseen God. Therefore, in God's Temple at Jerusalem, to mark its opposition to Pagan apostasy, the Holy Place was at the west end, and not at the east. Our modern fashion in churches of turning to the East, or sun-rising, is nothing else than revived Paganism.

A strange confirmation of the Babel narrative is found in connection with a high mound near to the ruins of Babylon, crowned with the débris of the temple of Bel, the sun-god. This temple was restored by Nebuchadnezzar, and the inscription on it states that it was built by a former king forty-two ages ago, and that "since a remote time the people abandoned it, expressing their words without order." Here we have a corroboration of the Bible narrative of God's punishment of the Babel builders' idolatry. Humboldt says the ancient Mexicans had legends of the flood, and thus these two widely separated races attest the historical truthfulness of Genesis as to the flood and the confusion of tongues.

APOSTASY V. DEVELOPMENT.

The more we investigate the earliest traditions, the more proofs we find that idolatry is an apostasy from the original knowledge of the one true God, and not the knowledge of God a modern development from primitive fetishism. The oldest of the Chinese records, reaching from 2000 to 900 B.C., recognise one invisible God. So do those of the Malay Polynesians of the Pacific. The aboriginal Kohls of Asia have traditions of the Flood, caused by man's sin; as also have the Abeo Kutans in the interior of West Africa. The old Hindoo scriptures, the Vedas, represent God as One, and man as a sinner needing redemption. The Persian Zendavesta scriptures describe creation as in Genesis. Therefore, the process in these two great branches of the Aryan race, the Hindoos and the Persians, is not an evolution of a purer religion from primitive savagery, but a continuous decline to idolatry from an original knowledge of God. The further back we go in examining the primitive traditions of nations, the purer we find their faith. As an illustration of this, Canon Fausset cited an early Egyptian hymn. It is a certain fact, he continued, that divers peoples from divers stems show in their traditions a reminiscence of one primitive history, derived from common ancestors. This common ground of reminiscence extends exactly down to the Tower of Babel, and no further. The Odshinegroes of Africa, the Tongas in Polynesia, and the Toltecs in Mexico, agree in the main just in those primitive Bible facts.

The speaker then referred to the wonderful agreement between the Flood records and scientific discoveries as to the remains of paleolithic races, and those of the neolithic or post-diluvian races. Strong confirmations of the early Bible narratives are to be found in the known dispersion of the descendants of Noah's three sons in the very manner predicted. The fact that different names for God are given in the first and second chapters of Genesis was shown not to be proof of a dual authorship, but rather beautiful adaptations of titles of the Supreme Being to the facts preserved in the record.

The practical lesson enforced by the consideration of these striking statements was that of thankfulness to God, that, instead of leaving fallible men to evolve a religion for themselves, He has given us a revelation which we ought diligently to study. Are we building any earthly tower that will end in confusion, like that of Babel? "He builds too low that builds beneath the skies." Man's reliances for happiness, greatness, unity, and immortality apart from God, must end in confusion. The Babel builders used brick for stone, and slime for mortar; their materials were shams and imitations. Let us see that our Christianity is a reality, not an imitation. Jesus, the Rock of Ages, is the only true foundation, laid by God. "The name of the Lord is a strong tower; the righteous runneth into it and is safe." As the Holy Ghost at Pentecost began the true unification of man (the only antidote to the confusion of Babel), by giving believers one heart in Jesus and the gift of tongues as its pledge, so we pray and watch for the Lord's coming again to put the crowning top-stone on the Church—the New Jerusalem that cometh down from above.

AN INTERESTING ANALOGY.

"Meditation on Holy Scripture, as an antidote for present-day restlessness and superficiality in Christian life," was the closing topic of the morning, and was assigned to Rev. H. E. BROOKE, of Bromley. Before entering on a brief consideration of it, Mr. Brooke made some very happy and suggestive references to Canon Fausset's remarks on the Babel dispersion. At the close of his address the Canon said that in the gift of tongues at Pentecost the Lord seemed to reverse the judgement of Babel, or at least to suspend for a time the confusion of tongues, which led to the scattering of the ancient race. There was a thought in relation to this, which, Mr. Brooke said, had interested him deeply, and which he would throw out. The apostasy at Babel arose from men running counter to God's wish for the diffusion of mankind. After the flood the command was to multiply and replenish the earth, and that could not be done unless the people were spread abroad. They preferred, however, to concentrate themselves, instead of going forth to be witnesses to the world of God's mercy in preserving them from the destroying flood. So this concentration at Babel, with its resulting idolatry, was a clear running counter to God's will and expressed command. God bore with them for a time, but He will not permit his will to be finally trampled upon, so He sent the confusion of tongues in order to accomplish the diffusion of mankind. No doubt, in the eyes of many, this scattering abroad seemed a sad state of things, but it came because they deliberately set aside God's wish.

Carry your thoughts forward to another Babylon (or Babel) mentioned in Scripture, and you will find a very striking analogy to this. In the early days of the Gospel, Jesus Christ commissioned his disciples to go forth and preach the Gospel to every creature; that was diffusion. The Spirit of power, including the gift of tongues, was given at Pentecost, and was, so to speak, a reversal of the old judgment, in order that there might be a quicker spreading abroad of his glorious Gospel. What do we find in Church history? In the second century the professing people of God began to build

A TOWER, WHICH THEY CALLED "THE CHURCH."

There was the concentration of Christian energy, and the eager desire to rear a great ecclesiastical system, of which Rome should be the centre, rather than the carrying out of God's wish to diffuse the Gospel message throughout the world. As might be expected, idolatry and a blight on Christianity were the result. They were so taken up with this huge ecclesiastical tower they could think of nothing else; and then were framed those God-dishonouring, dogmatic assertions, which are even believed in the present day, that outside of "the Church" there can be no salvation. As Cyprian wrote: "He who has not the Church for his mother cannot have God for his Father;" and gradually this became, as it were, the test-word of orthodoxy. Then followed the darkness and the blindness of the middle ages, with all their oppression and suffering. How different it would have been if the believers had been concerned with the spread of the Gospel instead of erecting this huge tower. In the Revelation we find that this very Romish power is called Babylon, and its destruction is described—an event which we have reason to believe is not very far off.

When the Reformation came, God, so to speak, confounded these builders. He brought to light his own Word, the reading of which showed that this great ecclesiastical tower was contrary to his mind. So there came to the Church of Rome what we may call the diffusion of Protestantism. Roman Catholics twit us with our many divisions, but surely it is better to be split up than to be united in a God-dishonouring unity. It is better to be sent abroad to carry God's Gospel than to be concentrating one's energy in building up a huge edifice which God's Word describes as doomed to destruction. It may be added that the blessed missionary spirit seen in the present day has a very close connection with the Evangelical Alliance, as drawing together in Christian sympathy the people of God. The great work to be done is not church building, but Gospel preaching; not the bolstering up of ecclesiastical systems, but the spreading of the Gospel of Christ throughout the world.

MEDITATION ON HOLY SCRIPTURE.

During the few minutes that remained, Mr. Brooke offered some helpful words on this subject. We all admit, he said, that this is a restless and superficial age. I am not going to speak of the study of Scripture, but meditation on it. There is a difference. Not everyone can study the Scriptures in any sense worthy of the name. But every Christian is called to meditate upon God's Word. I could not illustrate what meditation means better than by a reference to the well-known passage in Lev. xi., where we have the marks of clean beasts—that they chew the cud and divide the hoof. It may seem fanciful to some, but the old Puritan writers, and others, thought they saw in these two marks a type of the distinguishing characteristics of the Christian. The divided hoof gives the animal the power of grasping the rock or ground on which they tread, and thereby adds to their agility. So we read, "He maketh my feet like hinds' feet." As the nimble hind can grasp the rock, and mount into a higher atmosphere, so faith grasps the promises, and mounts aloft.

Again, Christians are like the ruminant animals, being able to recall the truth and feed upon that which they have at one time committed to their memories. We ought to make more of this power of rumination, not being content merely with reading the Word. Thank God for the many "artificial" means, as we may call them, for encouraging the reading of Holy Scripture—the Bible and Prayer Unions. But I would plead for more than the reading of a certain passage every day. Let us think on what we read. Let us recall it, and we may find it just the word in season that we need. As a very young Christian, I found it a great blessing always to carry about with me a little pocket Testament, or portion of God's Word. There are a thousand opportunities, such as the missing of an appointment, or of a train, or in some way having a few minutes to spend in which the mind would not otherwise be profitably employed. Let the Scripture be taken up—a verse, or a few verses, or a chapter. I do not hesitate to call this plan a means of grace, if we are thus ready to read a portion, and to meditate upon it.

THE WICKED OPIUM TRAFFIC.

This was the theme of an open conference this afternoon, under the chairmanship of Mr. Donald Matheson, with a renewed full attendance. As one speaker observed, Cheltenham audiences seem to turn out nearly as well in the afternoon as in the evening. The Chairman expressed his satisfaction that this burning question had again been laid hold of by the Evangelical Alliance. The unvarying reply that had come in the past from our Governments, of both political colours, was that they could not afford to lose the opium revenue—in other words they could not afford to do right. He verily believed that the stumbling block was an invention of the devil to hinder the progress of the Gospel in China, at a time when that progress was likely to be great. There is now a crisis in the agitation, and an effort will be made this winter to press on the Indian Government the necessity of putting an end to our national complicity in this horrible traffic. In a short historical review of our share in this matter, Mr. Matheson quoted the saying of the United States minister respecting Lord Elgin's settlement with the Chinese authorities in 1858, that it was

"A TRIUMPH OF SUCCESSFUL CRIME."

Foiled in getting rid of the imported drug, the Chinese Government adopted the suicidal policy of trying to checkmate the Indian Government by fostering home cultivation. This action has caused the decline of the Indian revenue from opium to some six millions sterling, and probably it will further decline. The evil is now rampant throughout China, and the Indian Government are not unlikely to allow the consumption to be acclimatised in Burmah and India, so that our own fellow subjects there are in peril of being demoralised. Japan has rigidly prohibited the importation of opium, and, no doubt, to this is partly attributable the remarkable strides that Japan is making as a nation. Australia also is open to danger from this source, and the only cure is total prohibition in all our British territories.

A Chinese missionary of long standing, Rev. George Piercy, could speak as a witness of truth on this subject. He read a paper dealing with it from the point of NATIONAL MORALITY.

He maintained that in national as well as in individual affairs and relations, the golden rule must hold good. Indeed, the importance of that rule is the greater in its enlarged application, by reason of the magnitude of the interests at stake. The Chinese for many years looked on the trade as contraband, and visited with severe measures those who encouraged it. On one occasion, a Chinese Commissioner put all the English colony in Canton into prison for alleged complicity in it. After vacillating long between repression and permission the latter policy now prevails; but the Chinese Government still keeps clear of the stain of the Indian authorities in not making it a source of imperial revenue. The taking of revenue from this "death-dealing drug" has been condemned on all hands, and yet leading statesmen shamefully refuse to bring it to the bar of national morality. Every English elector is responsible in a degree for this overthrow of moral responsibility, especially as the cultivation of the poppy and the supply of the drug are wholly and entirely under the control of the Government, and not at all a private speculation. In plain language, the Indian Government is openly and deliberately engaged in a trade which is not intended to benefit anybody, but which goes "to debauch the Chinese people," in the words of one of the officials concerned. The debauching is now overlapping into India itself, as Mr. Caine's recent disclosures, with respect to Lucknow opium dens, proves. Mr. Piercy called for the removal of this intolerable blot from our national escutcheon, and contended that the Christian churches of this country must combine to bring a sense of their deep responsibility home to the minds of the electorate of Great Britain. If the churches take up the matter with adequate earnestness, the thing will be done.

In a little interlude the Chairman referred to the fact that Canon Wilberforce is about to visit India partly to study this question. Another friend, in conjunction with Mr. Dyer, of Bombay, is making inquiries. It is proposed to send deputations throughout England with the view of creating a right public opinion about this evil, and how it ought to be dealt with. A special fund of £2000 for carrying out these projects is being raised by the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade.

OPIUM.

Mr. Piercy, speaking again on the extent of the evil in China, said that inaccurate statistics may have been given as to that evil; but really it is impossible to exaggerate the extent and the intensity of this curse, as it breaks out in Chinese social life. The habit infallibly brings its victim to penury and misery, even to the extent of selling wife and children. As to the mental and moral degradation of the opium smokers, it is equally impossible to exaggerate. This could be proved without going to China, said Mr. Piercy, as he would show to anyone in the East of London, close by his own mission. The world would scarcely contain the books that would have to be written if the whole of the awful truth were to be told.

Rev. Dr. Jenkins said he met a number of American and English merchants in China four years ago. One after another of these stated that there was no possible analogy between the opium curse in China and the alcohol curse in England. The difference is vastly against the opium. Dr. Jenkins rather seemed to condone the position taken up by the authorities in refusing to look at the matter from the point of morality, and in this he was followed by an Indian ex-official in the body of the meeting, who said that the only way of expiating this great national crime was for the people of England to bear the deficit themselves. If the tea merchants of this country would submit to an impost on Indian tea, something would be done towards meeting the financial necessities of the case.

A resolution was passed requesting the Council of the Alliance to place before the Government the opinion that the Indian authorities should be urged to take immediate steps for the cessation of the Government connection with the traffic, and for its entire prohibition.

As a question of civic morality, Mr. Matheson said he had been requested to point out the fact that sporting papers were sold in the public streets in Cheltenham on the Lord's Day. He would leave that matter to the conscience of the Cheltenham community.

EVENING MEETING.

Mr. DONALD MATHESON presided over a very crowded gathering in the evening. After the usual interchange of brotherly cordialities by representatives of the London Council and the Cheltenham friends, Canon RIPLEY, of Norwich, gave an address on as indispensable to Christian life. It ought to be as easy, he said, in the spiritual life, to love our brother, as, in the natural life, it is to breathe. "He that loveth not his brother," says the Apostle John, "abideth in death." John, as a son of thunder, was not naturally of such a tender disposition, but he learned it from the lips and at the feet and on the breast of the meek and lowly Jesus. This love of the brethren, says the same Apostle, is the evidence that we have passed from death into life. "He that hateth his brother walketh in darkness" is another strong statement by the Apostle of love. This love is not to be an empty sound merely, or the love of party, but it is a love which prompts to self-denial, so that others may be blessed—though they may be of the least of Christ's brethren. The desire for reunion, of which we have heard so much of late, may be taken as an indication of the spread of this spirit of loving brotherhood, though the movement may not take the shape of uniformity. It may not be easy to break down the partition walls of denomination in this narrow country, but it is very absurd that we should carry our ecclesiastical divisions into the foreign mission field. May we not look for the day when the native churches in heathen lands will develop their own forms and organisations? Meantime, let all the churches rejoice in the success of each other's work. The many united Christian Conferences now held throughout the country were referred to by Canon Ripley as another sign of the happy feeling of Christian brotherhood that is spreading among the followers of the one Lord.

CALVARY, THE MEETING-PLACE OF CHRISTIANS,

formed the fitting subject of the closing words of the Conference, from Rev. COLMER SYMES, of Leytonstone. The unity consummated on Calvary is not an aspiration, but a fact, which we cannot undo, though we may undervalue it. The Cross of Christ is the source of all our joys and hopes, and is, therefore, the real bond of Christian union. Strange to say, this Cross, which should be the symbol of unity, has been made the instrument of estrangement. Why should different conceptions of Christ's atoning work estrange and separate those who equally gather round the person of the Great Atoner and Saviour? If one of us regards one aspect of it more prominently than another, surely it may be to all a meeting-place. One regards it as an inspiration. Another sees in it a revelation of God's love. Another looks on it as the place where sin was righteously put away by expiation. All these are partial views of the great transaction that took place there, and yet surely that work itself in its efficacy, is independent of any view of it. All who throw themselves on Christ for salvation come within its scope, even though their mental conceptions of it do not in every point coincide. If this be so, how much less should the more subordinate matters of ecclesiastical divergence be permitted to separate Christians. A belief in the Cross of Christ, said Mr. Symes, has alone saved the Church of Rome from dissolution; and to the prominence given to that Cross in the teaching of the Salvation Army may be traced the chief secret of their wonderful success. The ethics of Christianity are not its distinguishing feature; it is its teaching of a sacrificial atonement by Christ that differentiates it for other systems of faith. People are not preaching Christ when they simply uphold his moral character, if they do not also exalt Him as the Crucified One, who bore the sin of the world in his own body on the tree. We can never outgrow the Cross, or leave it behind us. It must be to our spiritual experience what the alphabet is to the literary man—indispensable. A closing word of solemn and powerful appeal was addressed to any in the congregation who might not have laid down their burden at the Cross, and cast their guilty souls on his forgiving love.

It seemed to be agreed on all hands that Mr. Matheson's remark at the opening meeting about previous Conferences having been as the days of heaven upon earth, had received an additional fulfilment at Cheltenham.

PROTESTANT MISSION IN ELBA.

THIS little island has for some years been the station of a Protestant Mission, carried on under the auspices of the Vaudois Church, but supported by private contributions, collected by Mr. Jonathan Richardson, Killeaton, Dunmurry, co. Antrim, Ireland. It was on hearing how this Mission was established, that Mr. Richardson was led to interest himself in its welfare. We hope the narration of the story will arouse lively interest.

About thirty-five years ago, when religious toleration was unknown in Italy, one Francesco Madiai lived in Rome. Through reading a Bible he and his wife Rosa discovered the errors of Romanism, and turned Protestants. The authorities soon found this out, and threw them into prison, where they endured great persecution. This became known to English residents at Rome, who wrote home and excited so much interest in the misfortunes of these poor people that four delegates, among whom was the late Lord Roden, went out to try and get them liberated. For a long time their efforts were futile, but at last they succeeded. Owing to the hardships endured in prison, Rosa Madiai died a few days after her release; and as Francesco's life would have been unsafe in Rome, he was conveyed to Nice, and established there as a Bible-seller.

Now we come to the part of our story which touches Elba. Francesco Madiai often wandered about the docks trying to sell Bibles, and so spread the Gospel among the sailors; in this way he became friends with Pietro Cignoni, captain of a ship trading between Nice and Elba, and a native of the island. Before parting. He gave him a Bible Pietro asked, "What is this?" Francesco answered, "It is a book containing the Word of God; take it home and read it." Pietro took it home, but for many months it lay forgotten. At last he remembered his gift, and began to read it. He and his brothers, Giovanni and Olento, drank in the water of life from its pages, and soon resolved to become Protestants. Their Bible was their greatest treasure; to keep it safe they hid it in their garden when away at sea, and in a hole in their cottage wall when at home.

Their change of faith did not long remain secret, and they had to suffer much persecution from the rest of the islanders who were incited to it by the priests. However, persecution but fanned the flame of the Gospel. The Cignonis were enabled to influence others, and in unison with these friends they applied to the Vaudois Church for help. A ready response was given to their request, and a pastor was sent to Rio Marino from the Valleys. Under his care the little community increased and flourished, until God was pleased to raise up friends for them in distant lands.

About this time Pietro Cignoni made another voyage to Nice, and was there introduced to Mr. Richardson, who, on hearing his story, began collecting, and soon raised enough money, with the help of a few friends, to build a school and pastor's house in Elba. Partly for the satisfaction of the contributors, and partly because his own personal interest was so much aroused, Mr. Richardson resolved to visit Elba in the spring of 1866. He went there in a sailing boat from Piombino (the nearest point on the Italian coast), and landed at Rio Marino in about three hours. Here he was received by Pastor Bonnet, who conducted him to the church and school. The church had been opened in 1864, and the school-house was not quite finished. On Sunday morning about 120 of the brethren attended service, though this was a small congregation, as many of the men were at sea. Before leaving the island, Mr. Richardson visited the Sindaco or chief magistrate, to obtain from him a promise that the Protestants should have every protection from persecution that the law afforded. This promise was given willingly, as the Sindaco acknowledged that they were the best conducted people on the island.

The last report issued, states that there are now 93 communicants, 160 Sunday-school scholars, and 192 attending the day-school. The progress has been very satisfactory, as a number of converts from Romanism have been received during the year. The report, however, closes with an appeal to wipe off a deficit of £20 odd.

Since issuing this report, Mr. Richardson, being now 85 years of age, has become unable to continue his active work for the Mission. Surely Christian friends will be glad to assist this little band of workers in their need. Further information may be had from Cav. Matteo Prochet, D.D., 107, Via Nationale, Rome, President of the Waldensian Church.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.

THE summer activities of the members having merged into the more restricted operations of the winter months, it is but natural that meetings should be held to give thanks for victories won, and to pray that the seed sown by the wayside may be watered with the dew of God's blessing. One of the most important of these was the anniversary of the Mildmay and North London Auxiliary, held in the Conference Hall, Mildmay, on October 31. After a tea, attended by about three hundred, others assembled in the Large Hall, where Mr. James E. Mathieson presided. Mr. Charles L. Young, the secretary, read a cheering report, showing much good work done amid storm and sunshine.

Rev. Marmaduke Washington, vicar of St. George's, Tufnell Park, gave a modest address on "Your work, your weapon, and your power." He was followed by Captain Henry A. Bruce Moorhouse, who counselled prayer, preparation, reverence, courtesy, and patience. Rev. William Michael Smith, Presbyterian minister, Bow, dwelt upon the need of open-air preaching, the provision to meet that need, and the motive which should influence the preacher—viz., the love of Christ. Mr. Finlay Gibson took for his text the initials, O. A. M., and interpreted them to imply the Object, the Agent, and the Method of the work. Mr. Solomon Ginsburg, going as a missionary to Brazil, and Mr. Gawin Kirkham, secretary of the Parent Society, also spoke.

The West London Auxiliary held its quarterly meeting in Stafford Rooms, on Monday week, under the presidency of Mr. Charles de Selincourt, when an address was given by Rev. James Paterson, of Belgrave Presbyterian Church, on wisdom in winning souls.

DURING the last twenty years the number of liquor shops in the Punjaub is reported to have increased from 874 to 1722.

Some Scottish Missions.—IV.

CARRUBBER'S CLOSE, EDINBURGH.

TURNING to the general scope of the Mission, we learn that it is in its thirty-third year—verily, in the prime of life. Nor is its activity disproportionate to its age, as is amply manifested by its multitude of ramifications. I cannot here go into the details of its rise and progress, but those who have a penny and an hour to spare would spend both profitably by purchasing and reading a little pamphlet, entitled, "A Condensed History of Carrubber's Close Mission" (Gall & Inglis), in which the founder, Rev. James Gall, sketches its development during the first twenty-three years of its existence. Planted in 1857, with but one slender stem, in hard and uncertain soil, chilled by the winds of criticism, but blessed with the sunshine of Divine approval, it has put forth branch after branch, adapting itself to the spiritual necessities of the people, until now its sound has gone out into all the earth, and people in every walk of life have found shelter beneath its shade. Often has the enemy essayed to uproot it, but the Lord of the vineyard has stood by it, until in stature, leaf, and fruit, it is one of the finest trees to be found in the mission field.

All the workers are unpaid; and not only are they busy in every part of the city, but outlying villages and even more distant places are evangelised, on very much the same lines as by our English Evangelisation Society. It is gratifying to note that the work is cordially supported by most, if not all, of the leading ministers of the churches. About eighteen young men, having formed themselves into a male choir, go forth singing and speaking the Gospel. There seems no end to the interest displayed in devising methods for spreading the "good news." For instance, one bright Saturday afternoon, the band of young fellows, instead of enjoying their usual athletic exercises, hired a horse and trap, and drove to a remote working village, where they held two services in different parts.

THE EFFECT WAS WONDERFUL.

Almost the whole population turned out to listen, and such was the interest evinced that, when at last the falling evening shadows warned them to start for home, a great crowd followed the little band, until there was no help for it but to make another brief halt outside the village. "Eh, mon," said one of the members, on returning home, "it's bin one o' the rarest days I ha' ever spent." Nor is this by any means an isolated example. A Free Church minister in a country district, recently visited by the choir, writes:—"These dear young men are engaged in a grand and important work. They are doing well in directing their attention to the villages and towns in the vicinity of Edinburgh. They will, by the blessing of God, create an interest, and give an impulse to Christian work, as they have done here, where it is much needed."

Then, again, as Christians of other nationalities, and from various parts of the world, visit the Mission, they carry away with them a stimulus to engage more actively and hopefully in aggressive work themselves. In this and other ways its influence has

EXTENDED TO THE CONTINENT.

It may be mentioned, for example, that in the Black Forest a little company of German believers, at meetings held every Sabbath morning and Friday evening, unite in supplicating a blessing on this work. Also, in 1888, a citizen of Frankfort gave a property worth £15,000 "for the purpose of establishing an institution similar to that which exists in Carrubber's Close, Edinburgh." The Mission, too, has furnished not a few labourers for the foreign field in past years, and last year one of the lady helpers was accepted by the China Inland Mission, to go forth to win souls in that great heathen empire.

In the city alone, no less than sixty-five meetings, of one kind and another, are held by the members every week. Open-air work forms a staple feature, and this is carried on all the year round, in all weathers, the spots selected varying according to the season of the year. In the summer months, beautiful Calton Hill is occupied every Sabbath afternoon; but this is only one of several special summer stations. At these gatherings it is not unusual for testimonies to be given by Christian men belonging to particular organisations; thus, on one occasion, all the speakers will be University students, or Post-office officials, or railway-men, &c.

Sabbath-schools, Bible-classes for both sexes, meetings for mothers and for young converts, sewing classes, Policemen's Christian Association, Railway Mission, and a host of other institutions, grow and bear fruit on this wonderful tree, and each is followed up by constant personal dealing and supervision. Thus, not only is the seed sown, but the ground is carefully tended, that it may bring forth abundantly. This is made much of, and very rightly too. Especially is it needed (and therefore especially is it given—for the workers seem ever on the alert to meet every emergency) in the Gospel temperance work; and, accordingly, for the past three years a systematic household visitation has been carried on. In the first ten months nearly nine hundred persons who had signed the pledge at the Saturday night meetings were thus followed up. The great aim, of course, in every case, is to bring them to Christ, and not merely to see that they keep the pledge. Never is any argument allowed to lessen the prominence given to the one theme viz, that can gain effectual victory over drunkenness or any other sin.

People thus dealt with seem to be anxious that their neighbours and friends should get good also, and through their exertions many of them have come to the meetings, with attendant blessing. Realising their own weakness to engage in this difficult and self-denying sphere, the workers meet every week for prayer and counsel, when interesting incidents in connection with the work are often related. Amongst the last words that Mr. Waterston (whose death this year the Mission is mourning) said to Mr. Veitch, his colleague, were:—

for the other meetings depend upon it" For the same reason, a Fellowship Association meets every Sabbath morning for the study of the Scriptures, that its members may be rooted and grounded in love to one another and in the Word of God. Thus there is a wise and necessary equalisation of study and work, born of the conviction that no active service can be truly acceptable to God, if the Book of Guidance or the throne of grace be neglected.

On Sabbath evenings splendid evangelistic services are held in the Free Assembly Hall, which has been the spiritual birthplace of many a repentant sinner. Many well-known evangelists have from time to time ministered here, including Messrs. Moody and Sankey, Dr. Pentecost, Major Whittle, Dr. H. G. Guinness, Mr. J. M. Scroggie, and others. In the hall of the Mission, too, the Gospel is preached, at the same hour, with much to encourage the workers.

Most of my readers will recollect that the erection of the magnificent premises in the High-street (in which the greater part of the work of the Mission is carried on) was mainly through whose influence the sum of £10,600 was subscribed. He himself laid the foundation stone in 1883, and opened the building in the following year. The back is occupied by the large hall, holding 1500 persons; while the front part of the building consists of a number of halls and class-rooms, the largest of which can accommodate about 220.

In a characteristic speech at the opening Mr. Moody said: "This place, it seems to me, ought to be a sort of half-way house between the degraded masses and the churches. Why should there not be a grand work of grace bursting out here? There are a great many Christians 'pot bound,' like a plant confined in a small pot where it has not room to grow. Many think that because a thing has been done in a certain way for the last fifty years, it must always be done in that way. We must get at the masses in some way, but I am convinced that we are not going to reach them wholesale. We must have individual effort, seeking to win them one by one." It will be seen from the various features of the work which I have named that Mr. Moody's words have been wonderfully carried out. Indeed, it seems almost as if the concluding words of the earnest evangelist on that occasion bid fair to be fulfilled—"May this building be the warmest place in Edinburgh, and a centre of light and heat to the city!"

I cannot mention all the interesting features of the work recorded in the annual report which has just been published, but my good friend, Mr. G. A. Barclay, who is one of the directors, will gladly send a copy to any willing to show a practical interest in the work. He may be addressed at the premises of the Mission.

G. E. M.

FOLKESTONE LODGING-HOUSES.—Mr. G. W. Smith, 30, Warren-road, Folkestone, has written another deeply interesting report of his work among the poor people in the lodging-houses of that town. A shed has been erected, where destitute men can earn shelter for the night by chopping wood. The mission work indoors and out has resulted in some striking conversions. Help is now wanted for the winter work.

IRISH ROMAN CATHOLICS.—The spirit and feeling of the educated Roman Catholics of Ireland is more liberal than the generality of people in England and Scotland have any idea of. On receiving lately a copy of a tract entitled, "The Ancient Church of Ireland," a Papist wrote:—"I only wish it was circulated broad-cast over Ireland, at any rate, among those calling themselves Roman Catholics. The superstition and ignorance of the Irish masses are grievous impediments to proving to them that they have not now the pure religion of St. Patrick. The Church of Rome contaminated that pure religion for worldliness, self-aggrandisement, and lust of power—the curse of the simple, divine religion of Christ." Those who desire to help in the circulation of this very useful tract may communicate with Captain J. Kearney White, secretary of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin.

THE MARTYR OF ERROMANGA.—Nov. 20 will be the fiftieth anniversary of the death of Rev. John Williams, who was murdered by the natives of Erromanga, one of the New Hebrides islands. The Presbyterian missionaries now successfully labouring in that group are celebrating this year as the New Hebrides Mission Jubilee. They have now there seventeen missionaries, numerous native teachers, about 1500 native communicants, and many thousands who are under Christian instruction. The honour of initiating the work belongs to John Williams. On Nov. 20 1839, after having settled some teachers on the island of Tanna, he arrived at Erromanga. Soon after landing, he and his companion, Mr. Harris, were savagely attacked with clubs, and killed, and subsequently it was ascertained that their bodies were consumed at a cannibal feast. Since the day of the martyrdom of John Williams, marvellous changes have taken place in those Southern Seas, which he loved so truly. The light has spread from island to island, and from group to group, so that already we are within almost measurable distance of the time when the entire Pacific shall have been brought under the influence of the Gospel.

For the Young.

MRS. HILTON'S CRÈCHE.

The very interesting report lately sent out by Mrs. Hilton, of the Stepney Crèche, gives some particulars about the young folk under her care. She says:—

A young man came to us with two little girls aged five and three years. His wife, having wrecked her home by intemperance, had left it a few months before, and had led a terrible life since. She had been taken out of the river, having attempted suicide under the influence of drink, and was now a hopeless lunatic. The children had been terribly neglected, and looked as if their lives had been passed in shadow, without one ray of brightness. Little Edith was asked whether her birthday was in summer or winter. She replied, "I never had a birthday." Had she ever had a doll? No, she never had a doll, or anything pretty. Suddenly she recollected that once she had had a doll; "But it's broke and gone long ago," she added, and the sad look came back to the little face. It is indeed a blessed privilege to bring smiles to the weary little faces.

We have Louisa, aged four years, whose father died of heart disease, leaving eight children; Percy, aged one year and six months; Ada, aged a year and nine months; Cissie's baby sister, Lottie, whose mother had been waiting till she was old enough for us to take her, so that she might get a situation.

On October 31 we received baby Ethel. Her mother, aged 31, was dying of consumption, and greatly feared to leave her baby of eight months old to the care of her husband, who was a confirmed drunkard. The thought was such a burden to her in her extreme weakness that we felt we could not refuse to take the baby, and did so, against the wishes of our medical officer, who said she could only live a short time. The mother died very soon after, leaving eight children.

The baby was a bright little creature, and the children in the Home were delighted with her. For some weeks her health improved considerably under our care. A lady who visited the Crèche one day was much taken with her, and was very anxious to adopt her. We endeavoured to dissaude her, feeling sure that the child had not long to live, but she said she would take her to the South of France, and so give her another chance of life. Having obtained the father's consent, she arranged that she would come for Ethel when the weather was warmer. She returned in four weeks, but ere half that time had elapsed the little one had been gathered into the Saviour's fold.

We have parted with some of our elder girls. Alice Chandler, after some months' training in our nurseries, left to take a situation in the country.

Florence Stowell had been with us nine years when she left us in December. Hers was a very sad case. Her father failed in business and died suddenly, leaving a wife and large family totally unprovided for. The wife was in delicate health and with failing sight, and we wondered at the time what would become of her. But timely help was given—three of the children were taken into Homes, and soon the older ones were able to help her. She is now almost blind; but, with the help of her elder children, she will be able to have Florence at home for a time at least to take care of her and help her. So in this case, at least, the hopes of long, sad years have come to fruition, and the little home become a reality.

Nellie Reimann, who left us last year, has returned to us as teacher in the Home schoolroom. She passed the sixth standard at the Board School while with us, and, as the elder girls are now at Feltham, she is quite able to teach the little ones. She is faithful in the discharge of her duties, and very fond of her little charges. Her sister Annie, who is much younger, is helping in the Lower Nursery.

Florence Williams is second nurse in the Infirmary, and her sister Gertrude helps in the Infant Nursery. Ellen Noel is helping in the Home, and they are all becoming very useful.

ABOUT SOUTH AFRICAN CHILDREN.

Most of our young readers must often have heard the remark that the boys and girls of to-day will be the men and women who will have to manage the world's work in the next generation. Would it not be well for them to think of that now, so as to prepare in good time for the positions they will have to fill? Many, we hope, are purposing in their minds that when they grow up they are to be missionaries of Jesus Christ in some far-away heathen land. Now is the time for them to get all the information they can about the lands they will go to, and the peoples among whom they will live, as messengers of the cross and teachers of the Christian life.

One of our reporting staff went the other Sunday afternoon to hear a missionary address in the Congregational Church, West Dulwich, by Mrs. Thompson, a good Scotch lady, who spent a number of years as a missionary's wife among one of the native tribes of South Africa called the Matabele; and he was glad to see a number of boys and girls there, who listened to her very attentively. It so happens that this very Matabeleland is being spoken about in England a great deal just now, because our British Government has given what is called a "Charter," permitting some men of influence to form a Company for exploring that region, and opening it up for trades and industries. Mrs. Thompson's interesting talk, however, was not about that. She told of what she had seen in Matabeleland; of the ways of the people, and of the good results that had come from preaching Christ's Gospel among them. Much of what she said was very pleasant to hear; but there was also much that was very sad and sorrowful. She and her husband were working for six years, alone among the natives, at a mission station called Hope Fountain, and their hearts were grieved to see the way in which the women and girls were treated, and sometimes the little boys. These boys had been taken away from their own homes, and handed over to the heathen king, to become his slaves. It was not easy for the missionary to do anything for the girls, because they were kept busy doing the work in the gardens. Mrs. Thompson said she was so delighted when she could get some of them to come and sit under her verandah, and could teach them how to read and sew.

Among the other girls that came was the king's eldest daughter. She became very ill; all the doctors in the country gave her medicines, but for a time she was no better. By and by, she went to the mission station where she was cared for, and was taught to make clothing for herself. The king visited the station, and would sit down and talk a little with the missionaries. He would say: "How is my daughter?" The girl would have to go into the room where her father was, crawling on her hands and knees. She would gradually crawl nearer to him, saying, "Great King!" and other things of that sort, sounding the praises of her father. Then, perhaps, he would go near her and handle her as one would handle a dog! He did not love Christ, and did not know how to treat his own little girl kindly. Once or twice, when he asked her some questions, she would say: "Yes, father"; but she never thought of going nearer to him, or showing any love to him. Surely all you English children who have the love of father and mother will love Christ who has done so much for you, and will do all you can to let the little children of Africa know and love the Saviour too. We must remember that these people in South Africa live just as we did in this country before we knew anything about Christ and his Gospel.

These Matabele people, said this lady missionary, live in small houses shaped like beehives, with no windows or chimneys, and a very small door. She had to squeeze herself in when she visited them in their homes, and she was not long in before she wanted to get out again. The people are very fond of European articles of dress, and those kind ladies who send out boxes of clothing to be distributed by the missionaries may be sure that they are giving much pleasure. It is very amusing to see how important they look when they get something nice to wear.

Mrs. Thompson related some very pathetic stories about what she had seen in a part of the country north of Matabeleland. When the king wishes for boys and girls as slaves he sends out a part of his army to some distant villages. After they have been away two or three weeks they may be seen returning. First comes a flock of sheep, then goats, then oxen and cows, and last of all droves of men, women, and little children. The soldiers go to a village at night when everybody is asleep. When the men rush out to see what is the matter, the soldiers kill them; then they take the women and children for slaves, and all the cattle they can get, and set the village on fire. When the little ones are not able to continue the journey they are left on the wayside to die or be devoured by wild beasts. All this and much more was told, that the English children might see the need of sending the Gospel of Jesus Christ to these people, that their hearts may be changed, and they may be kind and loving, instead of cruel towards one another. Mrs. Thompson showed some curious things she had brought with her from Africa, and altogether her young hearers were greatly interested in her story. She has a right to speak about missions, as she has worked for a good many years in the Dark Continent, and her husband laid down his life for Africa. He was the first to go on behalf of the London Missionary Society to the region of Lake Tanganyika in Central Africa, and a lonely grave marks the spot where Mr. Thompson's dust reposes. Surely he could not have died in a nobler cause. May many of the boys and girls now in our Sunday-schools have the happy privilege of following in the footsteps of these Christian men and women who have lived and died for the salvation of Christ's heathen in Africa and other lands.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., Nov. 10, 2 Cor. viii. 1—12; Mon., Nov. 11, 2 Cor. viii. 13—24; Tues., Nov. 12, 2 Cor. ix. 1—15; Wed., Nov. 13, 2 Cor. x. 1—18; Thurs., Nov. 14, 2 Cor. xi. 1—15; Fri., Nov. 15, 2 Cor. xi. 16—33; Sat., Nov. 16, 2 Cor. xii. 1—14.

THE SLAVE TRADE.—It is stated in diplomatic circles that the Belgian Government will submit to the Anti-Slavery Conference a proposal authorising the levying of a five per cent. duty on all merchandise imported into the Congo Free State, the proceeds to be devoted to the extinction of the slave trade.

BRAZIL.—The recent legislation in Brazil abolishing slavery has been attended with important economical consequences in parts of that empire. In some cases the freed slaves remained with the late owners and accepted work on the terms offered, but the bulk availed themselves of their newly-acquired liberty to seek a livelihood elsewhere, or they have disappeared into the interior, where they lead a nomad life. Many flocked to the larger towns in search of employment, but appear averse to regular work even at a high rate of wages, and are generally indolent, only working two days if in that time they can earn enough to support existence for the rest of the week. Crime has not increased as was supposed would be the case from so many freed slaves being thrown on their own resources.—The Times.

ISABELLA MACPHERSON:

The Story of a Devoted Life.

By her Brother, Rev. JOHN MACPHERSON, Dundee.

CHAPTER III.—UPBRINGING.

HOME, School, Church, and Nature—the last not least—had each its part in Isabella's training. Young life in Cullen was healthy, vigorous, free. Plain and wholesome fare; familiarity with rigorous thrift in all things; strong wrestling with northerly gales blowing straight from the Pole; healthy exposure to every kind of weather; and abundant exercise in the open air all the year round, combined to develop a bold and joyous hardihood.

To look up through no vale of smoke into the clear blue sky, with its constantly changing glories day and night, for the first twenty years of life, is itself an education. To look out summer and winter on the great ocean in its infinite moods and solemn grandeur, is an inspiration for life. To look around on hill and dale, forest and field, the purple heather and the golden broom, is to study in the Creator's school. To stand by the shore on a summer evening and watch the fishing-boats pushing out to sea, or to count the sails as they return in the morning laden with the spoils of the deep, has a lesson of its own. To visit the old-world ruins of Findlater Castle on the rocky headland, with the ocean beating on three sides; to peer eerily into the vaulted, cell-like halls; to recall the legend of the baron's only son in his infant glee leaping from the nurse's arms at the open window, and dropping into the raging waters far beneath, and instantly followed into the same dark grave in the angry sea by the despairing nurse, give a wing to fancy, and a hue to thought. To stand on the beach with the foam dashing on one's face, and with a heart at fever heat; to watch the white billows breaking over the shipwrecked vessel on the rocks, and to witness the heroic efforts of the rescue, while man by man is brought safely ashore, is an experience never to be forgotten.

To follow the fishing yawl in a gale as it makes for the sands; to see the ill-fated boat lifted high on the crest of a tremendous billow and capsized; to hear that wild death-cry as the brave men go down, is a scene that traces ineffaceable mouldings on the innermost chambers of the heart. To roam among the rocks and gather shells upon the beach; to wade in the summer tide or bathe among the breakers; to explore the caves in the rocky headlands, and hear the flap of the wild pigeon's wing mingling with the echo of the moaning waves in the gloomy recesses; to climb the lofty Bin and gather blae-berries and rasps and brambles in their season; to see the ten thousand sights, and hear the ten thousand voices of Nature in her loveliest haunts and sweetest moods; to live and move and grow up amidst the murmur of the woods, the warbling of the birds, the babble of the brooks, and the psalm-like music of the sea, is to study at the feet of God, and learn pure, memorable lessons, that educate the senses in innocence; fill the imagination with divine pictures; ennoble taste, and become life-germs in the mind and heart. Happy is the child whose soul is open to their instruction, and who is nurtured among their genial influences through all the docile years!

All this formed part of Isabella's training. To her quick intellect, lively imagination, and keen sympathy with the beautiful, such schooling could not be in vain. In Nature's school there is no tension; no terror; no cram. Her method is quiet, gentle, insinuating. It works a real mind-growth; a capacity for thinking, feeling, judging; and thus forms a character strong enough to stand the wear and tear of life; while also it supplies stores of happy memories, more precious in after years than treasures of silver and gold. Often amidst the gloom and squalor of dingy courts and filthy lanes did the subject of our memoir in later years recall those peaceful scenes of early life. Her love of nature lent a deeper tenderness to her sympathy with the children of the slums; who, instead of woods and braes and wimpling burns, look only on slimy walls and loathsome gutters; instead of the blue heavens see only clouds of smoke; for air breathe poison; and for the songs of birds hear nought but the sounds of cursing and strife. No wonder that the inmost cry of her heart was, "Oh, give me back old Scotland, with its simplicity, its poverty, its virtue; and take away this pandemonium of city life, with its filth and fever, its greed and gaudy show, its sorrow and its sin!"

In the little royal burgh education was plentiful and thorough. First, there was the Dame's school, where the smallest of small boys and girls learnt to read and spell. It is not difficult to recall memories of the primitive school, held in the Dame's kitchen: the high stools and sanded floor; the accidental tumbles and forbidden grovellings beneath the "forms"; the painful experience of sharp incisions inflicted on bare legs by tiny but energetic denizens of the sand, and still more memorable experience of the Dame's tawse or hand, both indeed leathery enough; the drawling lesson; the loud b—y, by, the long g—o, go; the deep droning of some, and heavy snoring of others; the harsh sound of the awful woman's voice ringing in our ears, more terrible than a thunder-peal; with the mingling screams of the small boy whose bare toes have suddenly become the object of special investigation by the teacher's ducks, as they take revenge on the covetous child of Adam for stealing their dinner of pease; which pease, boiled and swollen, looked so big and tasted so sweet as to be a very tree of the knowledge of good and evil; and hence, as in the case of older sinners, many a stolen sweetness, many a bitter tear!

Such was Mistress Betty Philp's seminary in the Red Row. It has long since ceased to be. The Red Row has become the Castle Terrace; the Nation has succeeded the Dame; the School Board has stepped into Mrs. Betty's shoes; and Mrs. Betty herself is in heaven. Yet, even in that humble school, a good foundation was laid.

The older scholars were trained in the Shorter Catechism, the Psalms of David, and the Proverbs of Solomon. What could be better for a young Scotchman, with his supposed inborn metaphysical and theological propensities, than the Shorter Catechism? What more appropriate to the perfervidum ingenium Scotorum than the matchless lyrics of Israel's sweet singer? Or what more in the line of the shrewdly practical, keen, canny Scot than the proverbs of the wise king? In those three books you have theology, poetry and philosophy—a training at the very threshold of life at once intellectual, moral, and religious; more thorough, more wholesome, and more effective than much that passes for education at the present hour. Where in all the wide range of philosophy or literature will you find a dozen words so profound and clear, so far-reaching and full of destiny, as the answer to the first question in the Catechism?—"Man's chief end is to glorify God and enjoy Him for ever." What a rush of hallowed and tender memories has filled the heart of many a grey-headed Scotchman at the very mention of the question—"What is the chief end of man?" And how often have the great underlying principles of the answer been as compass and helm to the wandering Scot far out on the sea of life!

Though its lowest rung was near enough the ground, the ladder of learning mounted high. In the Grammar School the boys were trained in Latin, Greek, and Mathematics; and fully equipped for entering the University at Aberdeen, where they might win a bursary and carry honours. In the classes of this school the girls took their places side by side with the boys, and sometimes rivalled them even i classical and mathematical studies. There was also a ladies' school, where the girls wer trained in the higher accomplishments o female education. The subject of our memoi enjoyed a full share of the best scholasti advantages offered by her native town.

Home training was thorough. Of book there was no lack, whether in theology o general literature. Some of these, such as th Scots Worthies and Bunyan's Pilgrim, wer often read aloud; our father now and agai calling a halt to make comments, often in heroic strain, and always in a manner fitted t impress the young mind. Reverence for th Word of God; faith in the efficacy of prayer strict observance of the Lord's Day; prompt obedience to parents; an utter hatred of lies selfishness, and all meanness, formed part o Isabella's training at home. Disobedience i word or deed was not allowed; the sulky glance was reproved; the wayward act was chastised The discipline was stern, but wholesome: life-blessing was in it.

The standard of duty was by no means low On one occasion, when a lad of fifteen, I wa sent by my father to the factor for the Earl o Seafield, to receive a sum of money due to hi for a finished contract. On my return, th money was found to be largely in excess of th amount due.

"Go back with it," said my father.

I demurred, saying, "The mistake is thei affair."

"True," he replied; "but that is no reason why we should be dishonest."

"The factor will be in a rage at being foun in an error," I urged.

"Very likely," was the reply; "he is a prou man: but better anger him than anger God."

"It will do to-morrow," I said; for it was no dark, a storm threatened, and the way was long

"It must be done to-night," said he, firmly "to-morrow I may be dead, and I should no like to die with my character under a cloud And, if alive to-morrow, I might be tempte to put it off further; I might need the money and under the pressure might take the use o it, with the intention of repaying it; and wha a snare that would be! No, no: either you o I must go with the money now."

Accordingly I went. The darkness, the storm the torrents of rain, and the wrath of the factor who would rather have lost the money than have been convicted of such an error, made th night and the lesson for ever memorable.

A PARADOX.—Let us all remember that startling paradox, which contains the whole philo sophy of evangelism:—"Christ, alone, can sav this world; but Christ cannot save this world alone."—Dr. Pierson.

LITTLE EM'LY, IN "DAVID COPPERFIELD," incidentally remarked that if she were wealthy sh would present her uncle with "a cocked hat and pocketful of money." What should be the guerdo of Mr. Richard Stevens, the well-known officer o the Reformatory and Rescue Union, who was abl to tell the magistrate at Southwark that in th course of three years he had been able to extricat some sixty children from the most horribly vicious surroundings of a common lodging-house in Re Cross-street, Borough. The task of getting thes small children out of what George Cruikshan used to call the "Devil's Frying Pan" is by n means unattended with difficulty. The urchin aged seven, whom Mr. Stevens brought before Mr Shiel, and whom he introduced to Mr. Kennedy was taken from under the wing of his mother; bu the house in which the pair was found was full from roof to basement, of bad characters. Mr Shiel failed to see that the Act of Parliamen applied to this particular case; but the indefatig able Mr. Stevens was more successful with Mr Kennedy; and, fortunately, the little boy's mothe who was present at the hearing, burst out in torrent of bad language against the rescue office The disreputable parent was ejected, and th magistrate consented to remand the child to th workhouse for a week. Go on trying to save th children, Mr. Richard Stevens.—Daily Telegraph

REV. THOMAS CONNELLAN,

Ex-Roman Catholic Priest.

DURING the past few months the subject of this sketch has been exciting growing interest in an ever-widening circle. That an Irish Roman Catholic priest should renounce the faith in which he had been trained is not a common event; but that, declaring himself a Protestant, such a one should return to the scene of his former labours, and endeavour to make known to his countrymen the Gospel in its purity, is more remarkable still. We could wish that many priests would follow the example thus set them of coming into light and freedom. The spiritual experience and progress in this case are very instructive as well as deeply interesting. They will to a large extent be indicated in the subject's own words.

THOMAS CONNELLAN is a native of county Roscommon, having been born in one of its northern villages in the year 1855. His parents were members of the Roman Catholic Church, and they sent him in his thirteenth year to a seminary at Sligo conducted by a religious brotherhood. No life could have been more distasteful to the lad; poring over books, and listening to interminable tales of miracles, martyrdoms, and saintly intercessions, became in course of time so intolerable that he ran away, tramping a dreary road of nearly twenty miles to his home. His reception was anything but cordial. Like others in their position, the relatives looked forward with pleasure to Thomas returning home one day a full-blown ecclesiastic; therefore they regarded his absconding as involving them all in sad disgrace. Being sent back to his studies, the lad endeavoured to resign himself to the place in life which his parents wished him to fill. The wise ones in the neighbourhood had marked him out for the priesthood; therefore he must, without consulting his own wishes, go through the various preparatory stages!

After passing three years at Sligo, young Connellan was sent to the diocesan college of Athlone, a kind of half-way house on the road to Maynooth. Here the course of education was after Rome's most cherished model. The students were kept ignorant of history as written by trustworthy men, and the many stories which have been woven into the lives of the saints were given an important place in the curriculum. "I remember well," Mr. Connellan has since said, "that I believed every tale to be as true as the Gospels, and I presume my fellow-students thought likewise." The course of three years in this institution having been completed, the young man was sent to Maynooth, then the select and favourite training ground for the priesthood. In his pamphlet, "Hear the Other Side" (6d. Dublin: George Herbert, 117, Grafton-street), Mr. Connellan remarks upon this period of his experience:—

> Maynooth was a world in itself. During six years, with an interval of two months' vacation annually, I was as much separated from the world as if underground. The very atmosphere is tinged in Maynooth. Entrance to it is like stepping in noonday summer sunshine into some old Romanesque cathedral, whose small stained windows cast weird, fantastic outlines of saints and anchorites upon the surrounding darkness. A holy and quiet spot, it will be said. Certainly; yet does not the man who elects to pass his life there divorce himself from reality—from God's bright sunshine and the face of heaven—to grope among fantastic spectres? It is still the Middle Ages at Maynooth, and the scholastics are all in the pride of manhood.
> Latin was the only language spoken in class or written on examination papers during the six years of my residence; and really it was not to be wondered at, if, at the end of the time, one was tempted to fancy himself a contemporary of Torquemada. There was a week's retreat at the commencement of the scholastic year, during which time the rules forbade speaking. There were shorter retreats before most of the feasts, a day's retreat once a month, confession once a week at least, and lectures and exhortations on religious subjects without number...No book under the ban of the Index was ever admitted. The meaning of this was that Maynooth students were perfectly free to hear Rome's case stated by her special pleaders, and then make up their minds as to a verdict.
> The spirit engendered was one of abject slavery. Independence of thought or action was discouraged, frowned down, denounced. The stolid animal who took kindly to his bit and curb, and paced with docility before the Church chariot, received every mark of approbation and every reward which the college could bestow...Maynooth lies low. Almost the whole time I spent there I was in wretched health, for its miasmal atmosphere in damp or dull weather is far from invigorating.
> Truly these were experiences calculated to crush the manhood out of most men. Yet they were cheerfully endured, for the students looked upon obedience to Holy Church as a prime duty. Once every year, on the morning of ordination, a hundred young men or thereabouts go down on their knees at Maynooth, and swear before God that they will be faithful to the Vicar of Christ. Mr. Connellan forcibly describes this as an "annual Juggernaut festival,' in which an oath is taken by the candidates to "bear the Pope upon their backs for the rest of their lives." He adds:—
> To be sure, the choice is supposed to be a voluntary one. The candidates have arrived at years of discretion. No person is forced. Of course not; yet we have seen how the opposition have been driven out of court; how Rome, along with a special pleader, calls to her aid family influence, ignorant prejudice, deceit, nay, unblushing falsehood; for the books by whose aid the young ecclesiastic is expected to make up his mind bristle with falsehoods on every page.
> On June 20, 1880, when I first donned the chasuble of Rome, I gloried in my new character. Was not Roman Catholicism the genuine Apostolic religion, leading up link by link in unbroken succession to Jesus Christ? Had not I satisfied myself by public and private reading that she was the true spouse of the Lamb; and did I not long for the time to come when I might break a lance with those blind and wicked men who opposed her? I really believed it was so, and, although in extreme bodily weakness, I left for ever my Alma Mater in extraordinary spiritual strength.

This "spiritual strength" soon turned out to be delusive. With all his confidence in Holy Church, Mr. Connellan was a thoughtful man; and he was as conscientious as he was independent in mental cast. While filling curacies at Sligo and Strokestown, he saw enough of the discipline of the Church to learn that Christ was not in it, and enough of the ways of ecclesiastics to conclude that they were a very mixed community. These charges, as well as another on the northern shore of Lough Gill, were in the diocese of Elphin, from the Bishop of which he in due course received instructions which excited him to conduct investigations which resulted in his enlightenment in regard to the truth in Jesus. These instructions were that he should preach the Holy Thursday Sermon in the cathedral, on Transubstantiation. Mr. Connellan thus describes in brief what followed:—

I believe I had about a month to prepare, and, as I rather prided in my preaching just then, I at once commenced to study my subject. It was the turning-point of my life. The sermon was preached in the presence of bishop, priests, and a crowded congregation. I have been told that it was admired by the audience, but I must confess that whatever amount of conviction it might have brought to the hearers, it certainly left the preacher enveloped in the mists of doubt and despondency.

As he continued to study, praying to God for illumination, our friend found ever-increasing and ever-deepening light dawning upon him. He became exceedingly unhappy, and his remaining faith in Rome was soon dispelled by what he knew of the private lives of the clergy. Transferred from Sligo to Roscommon, he saw clearly that he must one day say good-bye to Rome, but he found himself in a fearful dilemma. His parents were living, also his brothers and sisters, who looked upon him, a priest, as a sort of superior being. His kind and good friends too were a host. To throw up his position, and walk out of the system from conscientious motives seemed out of the question. His relatives would prefer weeping over his dead body to mourning over what they would regard as his fall. He determined to give them the easier alternative, and, being again removed, this time to Athlone, where he had spent some years before entering Maynooth, the opportunity came for him to do so, but in a very peculiar manner. On Tuesday, September 20, 1887, after saying mass as usual in St. Peter's Church, Athlone, he pulled up the river Shannon to Lough Ree, over water on which he had previously spent many happy hours. In the boat he took with him a suit of secular clothes, which he deposited in some underwood on the Leinster shore, near Carberry. Then, pushing out into the river, he divested himself of his ecclesiastical attire, plunged into the river, and, swimming to the bank, put on the secular clothes. The boat, with the ecclesiastical suit, was afterwards picked up, and the newspapers reported "The Drowning of Father Connellan." The water was dragged, but the body was not found. The hasty inference was that "the fair-haired priest," who was as sincerely mourned as he had been universally beloved, had taken a "header" into the river while boating, and, being seized by cramp, had sunk to the bottom.

Writing upon his emancipation, Mr. Connellan says:—

No baptism by water had ever wrought a more wonderful regeneration than had that plunge into the sun-lit Shannon. The load of suffering and care which I had carried for years remained with my clerical garb in the boat. For years I had been as wretched a slave as ever tugged at a galley oar. Now I bounded a free man once again, and my old spirit had returned. I caught the evening train from Moate, and had my first sound sleep for many months in Dublin that night.

Crossing from Kingstown, he came to London, where in a few days he obtained the post of sub-editor on the staff of a weekly newspaper. Seeking more light, he prosecuted studies at the British Museum, following step by step the thread which had guided him out of the labyrinth of superstition and fraud. Introduced to Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, vicar of St. Paul's, Onslow-square, he found a friend in need and deed. To him and Rev. J. Harford-Battersby, now vicar of Pembury, he has since declared himself under lasting obligations. Now he has returned to Ireland, to the very district in which he is best known, to Athlone, and is living among his own people and telling them of the Saviour he has found.

We learn from the last issue of The Christian Irishman that Mr. Connellan is finding out that he is called upon to suffer much for the truth's sake. When it was supposed that he was drowned, two years ago, the whole diocese of Elphin united in proclaiming him to have been a clergyman of exemplary piety and affability. Now he is declared an "apostate," and frowned upon by many of those whom he would benefit. This is not in the least surprising. "The servant is not greater than his Lord." Christ was persecuted, and his disciples are not likely to escape. The Roscommon Herald, which is said to be inspired by the priests, speaks of Mr. Connellan's "vile writings," and describes him as an "unspeakable ruffian." Going further, this organ of "freedom" makes an appeal which we are sure will not daunt Mr. Connellan, It says:—

Are there in those towns no Gaelic clubs, the picked men of the parishes? Could they not have a Gaelic tournament there, if it were only to look into the whites of the eyes of the "Conlons [Connellans] of Geevagh"?

It will need no interpreter to expound this covert suggestion. It is evident that the spirit of wicked persecution is aroused. It seems that the peculiar aggravation of Mr. Connellan's offence is that he has signally succeeded, within the last few weeks, in administering a serious blow to the tyrannical domination of the local priests. The medical officer of the district having died, a number of priests, of no official standing, appointed a nominee of their own as locum tenens, and quietly instructed their people to support his candidature. Regarding this as an intolerable usurpation of the rights of the people, Mr. Connellan protested, and the Board of Guardians taking the same view, the priests, to the evident joy of many of the people, were outnumbered. Such occurrences as these will, of course, increase Mr. Connellan's influence, which will, we are sure, be rightly directed and used.

So far God has taken care of the courageous young man, before whom we sincerely trust there is yet a great future. In addition to the pamphlet already mentioned, in which the heresies of the Papal Church are exposed with great power, Mr. Connellan has written an address to his "dearly beloved brethren, the Roman Catholics of the diocese of Elphin," in which he gives a succinct statement of the truth, and tenderly appeals to his acquaintances to "search the Scriptures," and be partakers with him of the salvation of God in Christ. Mr. Connellan's conversion is a reason for gladness, but his brave ministry for Christ justifies great rejoicing. We wish him grace and wisdom for his self-imposed task, and trust he will see much fruit of his loving labour in the Lord.

OBITUARY.

BARONESS DE ZUYLEN, NIEVELT.

This lady, who died a few days ago, at the Hague, has left behind her the fragrance of a good name. At the time of the siege of Paris, in 1870, her husband was the Netherlands minister at the court of France. In the terror and straitness of the situation she showed a beautiful Christian spirit and exemplary generosity. Regardless of nationality, she visited, and attended to the sick and wounded in hospital, and rendered important assistance to others who were mercifully disposed.

M. JEAN SCHNELL, BERNE.

For upwards of forty years Professor Schnell taught civil law in the University of Bâle, in which city he also filled several important posts. Pre-eminently, however, he was a Christian, humble and benevolent, and his life was one of communion with the Saviour, who sustained him in faith, hope, and love. He had a profound knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, which, notwithstanding his many engagements, he read daily in the original tongues. During recent years he lived in retirement at Berne.

THE MALOGA ABORIGINAL MISSION.—Mrs. Matthews, and Paddy and Jenny Swift, left London on their return to Australia, on Thursday last week, in the s.s. Valetta. Mr. Matthews will remain in England for some weeks, for the express purpose of pleading the claims of the unevangelised Aborigines of our great Southern colonies. All friends who desire him to address meetings should communicate with him, care of Mr. J. T. Matthews, 72, Cornhill, London, E.C.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.—No small proportion of our workers in China are natives of Scotland, and we hope that God will send many more. In past years our work has been much facilitated by a number of friends who have acted as referees there, and latterly it has been felt desirable to ask some of them to unite formally as an Auxiliary Council. As the majority of the members reside in Glasgow, the meetings of the Council will be held there. All candidates in Scotland will please send their applications to Mr. Oatts, 70, Bothwell-street, Glasgow.—China's Millions.

he Manchester Convention.

Keswick" in Manchester! It strikes one as ing somewhat incongruous, since in externals rtainly one is only reminded by contrast of e beautiful valley among the hills. But Keswick" represents to many minds the ner rather than the outer beauty of life, and at is as much a possibility in the heart of the ty as in the "desert apart." So at least we und it, as we gathered together in the Conrence Hall, Strangeways, and listened once ore to the familiar voices, and sang the famiar hymns.

Between the meetings the visitors were ndly entertained by Shaw and Kirlew, who pared no pains in making their numerous ests comfortable. Little parties of friends ight be seen going through the Boys' Refuge, siting the workshops, where the boys were oemaking, tailoring, cutting wood, tying fireood bundles, &c.; the laundries, where busy ands were working for their large family; and ne dormitories, where long rows of neat beds, ach with its text tied at the head, and its ttle locker beside it, made one think sadly of he thousands of little homeless ones still roamng our streets, to whom night brings but the rouch under the low archway, or the policeman's "move on"—homeless still, because here are even yet so many unconsecrated ockets among the Lord's stewards.

The Conference was held in the "Thomas Glegg Memorial Hall," and began with a prayereeting on morning, October 29, when Rev. J. B. Figgis, of Brighton, spoke from Gen. xlix. 9—13, on the possibilities of the Christian life.

At the forenoon meeting, Preb. Macdonald struck the keynote of the Convention—

"CONSIDER HIM"

(Heb. iii. 1). The one thing to realise is the presence of Jesus. The one thing to do is to consider Him. The relation and character in which we are to consider Him, is as holy brethren (ii. 11). This relationship is the foundation of the life of faith; the character follows upon the relationship; He calls us to full surrender, to perfect trust. Both are his gifts; they constitute the conductors through which flows the current of his grace; they are the elements of a holy character.

Dr. Elder Cumming, who followed, took as his subject, "Searching." The object of searching is to know how we stand with God. A critical spirit, or an idea of merely "enjoying the meeting" will hinder the searching; humiliation, not enjoyment, is our object in coming together. Let us present ourselves to be searched by the eye of God which sees all; to be shown the very worst of ourselves; to part with every hindrance which comes between our soul and God. This is a necessary condition without which no blessing can be received. Fear not; no hand is so soft as his, no heart so tender.

In the afternoon meeting Rev. W. Haslam spoke on 1 John i. 9. Mr. Haslam always reminds one of its rocky basin; he does not "speak," he talks to his audience, from the overflowing of his own heart. We are saved, he said, not so much to go to heaven, as to live heavenly lives here. Before we can live such lives we need cleansing.

Rev. J. A. Jacobs, of Bath, then spoke on Luke ix. 57—62, showing how the three men mentioned in that passage were typical of many to-day. The first was too impulsive, wanting in due consideration of all that following Christ involved; the second was, on the other hand, too calculating—he wanted to bargain with Christ; the third was only superficially touched, he was not ready for the full surrender which knows no looking back.

Dr. White, of Winchester, followed on John xii. 21, "We would see Jesus." The life of faith was to him a fresh revelation of Jesus. The object of this Convention is to see Him; the contest, to see no one else. Ver. 24 tells us how Christ first took his new disciples to Calvary; we first see Christ as the crucified, in Him we see self crucified: "Thou canst not see my face...and live." Self-death precludes Christ-revelation; then comes the life lived through the power of the risen Saviour, "who loved me and gave Himself for me."

In the evening Rev. John Sloan, of Glasgow, spoke on John iv. 2—the personal meeting between the sinner and the Saviour. He dwelt much on the thought of "He told me all things that ever I did." Here is a test. Are we willing to be told "all things"? Joy unspeakable, peace passing all understanding, may be ours; but not while there is one secret sin, past or present, kept back from God's searching. Again the solemn thought of the need of perfect honesty with God was pressed home by Rev. J. Luce, of Gloucester, as he told us how, before we could live right, we must be set right. Knowledge of a theory will not do; the soul must meet with Jesus, and have a real transaction with Him, and Him alone, before blessing can come.

An intensely solemn after-meeting was conducted by Dr. Cumming, who urged the importance of choice, speaking from Josh. xxiv. 15, 18, 21, "Choose you this day whom ye will serve....We will serve the Lord." And as the hymn—

> In full and glad surrender
> I give myself to Thee,
> Thine utterly and only,
> Thine evermore to be,

was being sung, many a life, we believe, before perhaps divided in its allegiance, hindered in its service, joyless in its experience, was yielded wholly to be "kept for ever loyal and true to Thee, my King."

WEDNESDAY

began as usual with a ten o'clock prayer-meeting, when Rev. J. Luce spoke on the three conditions of the Life of Faith: Getting, Giving, Growing; in other words, being helped (1 Sam. vii. 12); being brought (2 Sam. vii. 18); being blessed (2 Sam. vii. 29); first, we read of confession and the putting away of idols (1 Sam. vii. 3), followed by the victory. The Philistines were smitten before Israel, because "the hand of the Lord" was against his people's foes, and the record is made, "hitherto hath the Lord helped us." 2 Sam. vii. 18 gives us the second thought: "David sat before the Lord, and he said...Thou hast brought me hitherto" (ver. 26), "let thy name be magnified." We get from the Lord. He helps us. We come near unto Him, that we may learn how to give, and our heart's desire is, that his name may be magnified; to this end we give Him our lives, and an ideal life is a life "poured forth." Lastly, we have the blessing (ver. 29), we are made "blessed for ever," and so the three conditions are fulfilled—we get that we may give, we give, and are blessed in the giving.

Rev. Evan Hopkins followed on Gal. ii. 20, "The Life of Faith." There is something very invigorating in his way of putting things; old truths, re-set by him in telling, forcible language, drive away from the minds of his hearers, and clear the way for the acceptance of the truth he teaches, by the intellect, as well as by the heart. He spoke of the present-tense life, "the life which I now live," which, freed from the power of the law of sin, is lived "by the faith of the Son of God." He illustrated the two laws—the law of sin (Rom. vii. 23), which used to govern, and the law of God (Rom. vii. 22), which now govern — by the picture of a man thrown into deep water. The law of gravitation would sink him and drown him, in spite of all his efforts; but encase him in a life-belt, and he floats—the lower law is conquered by the higher. This life is one of intense activity, but activity re-directed; our fight is a fight of faith, against the foes outside the fortress, not against those inside. It is a fight with a conquered foe; we begin where Christ ended; he has been dislodged from the citadel; our part only is to stand fast—we fight from victory, not for it. This life of victory and rest must be entered by definite, whole-hearted surrender; when the idols are utterly cast out, He reigns. Great possibilities are open to us—rest, instead of worry; ease, instead of strain; victory, instead of defeat; gladness, instead of gloom—these may be ours if we are willing to fall in with the conditions.

Dr. Elder Cumming then urged the importance of deciding the matter "to-day," noting the five-fold reiteration of the word in Heb. iii. 7, 8, 13, 15; iv. 7. Referring to chap. iii. 7, 8: "To-day...harden not your hearts," he said there were

THREE WAYS OF SELF-HARDENING.

(1) Refusal to see, which was indifference; (2) Refusal to hear, which was evasion; (3) The hardening of our hearts, which was the turning away from God. To-day the Holy Spirit offers to break the fetters; we are helpless to do it for ourselves. Let us begin with self-despair. The Lord is able.

In the afternoon, Rev. W. Haslam spoke on the vitality of Christian life, and Rev. J. Luce followed. In speaking of the need of being wholly given up to God, if we would be used by Him, he quoted a French proverb, Il faut se recueillir (so to gather oneself together as to be only occupied with one idea). Then we shall be filled with his love, and used for his glory.

The evening meeting was devoted to Home and Foreign Missions. Miss Perks (Soldiers' Home, Winchester) told of the soul winning work among the soldiers, and of the changed lives led by many whom she knew. Mr. Hutchinson (Children's Special Service Mission) spoke of the importance of winning the children for Christ, and of the honour it was for parents to be called to give their children to the Lord's service. Mr. Graham Wilmot Brooke appealed for workers for the Soudan—where, as he proved by a terrible instance of cannibalism, the god of cruelty still reigns—and urged the need of carrying the light of the Gospel to the nations who sit in darkness.

Mr. Eugene Stock (C.M.S.) spoke of the power with which Ps. xxi. 13, "Be thou exalted, Lord, in thine own strength," had influenced his life. The fact that the Lord is exalted upon the throne of our hearts must make us long for Him to reign King throughout the world. Doors are opening on every side, workers are sorely needed. Let each ask the question: "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"

Mr. Hudson Taylor took up the leading thought of a hymn which had been sung, "God in Christ is all in all," and spoke with earnest words on the coming changes—the close of this dispensation, the gathering together of God's people, the subduing of all things unto Himself, and his reign in the world. He told us of the widely opened doors in China, where millions are still unreached; of the sad question put to our missionaries to-day by the heathen, "If these things are true, why have you been so long in coming to tell us?" and of the grand possibilities, if only the Church would awake to the need, and rise to meet it. On morning we had one of those marvellously comprehensive addresses from Dr. Cumming, in which he seems to meet all phases of mind, all states of need, leaving no argument unanswered, no difficulty unmet. The following is an outline:—

I. How is the Life of Faith to be entered upon? (1) By faith, as in salvation. Salvation includes deliverance from power of sin, and keeping from all besetting sin. "Believe ye that I am able?" (2) By accepting Christ as Keeper. (3) By new surrender, as new light reveals more to be yielded to Him.

II. How is it to be sustained? By new acceptances of faith.

III. How is it to be advanced? By new yieldings to the leadings of the Holy Spirit. If this life is to be advanced, the slightest influence of the Spirit must be obeyed, at all times, at all costs.

Rev. GELSON GREGSON took up the thread where Dr. Cumming dropped it, and spoke of the deliverance from the fog-land of doubt (caused by apparently complex duties, diverging paths, and contradictory advice), by the sure guidance of the Lord who will lead the blind—blind save to his hand, and the deaf—deaf, but to his voice (Isa. xlii. 19), by a way that they know not.

In the afternoon meeting Rev. W. WATKINSON spoke of the force of the human will in the sphere of circumstance, and Dr. WHITE turned our thoughts God-ward again by reminding us that though we might ask to be kept from forgetting what He has shown us of ourselves; yet his will for us is that, turning from ourselves, we should look (lit. "stoop down and look") into the perfect law of liberty, that we might learn how to be doers of his will. He empties only that He may fill; He fills, that He may use. Now we are serving in the lower chamber of his house; when He comes He will call us into the upper. Now we are walking with Him in the outer court: then He will bring us into the Holy of Holies; it will be only walking out of faith into sight.

Rev. A. C. DOWNER followed with test thoughts on the four "abides" of the Life of Faith. (1) The abide of fruitfulness (John xv. 5); Gal. v. 22 gives us the fruit in detail. (2) The abide of answered prayer (John xv. 7). Are our prayers answered? (3) The abide of victory (1 John iii. 6). Our temptations are our Captain's enemies. (4) The abide of power (1 John ii. 6). Abiding with Him gives power to walk even as He walked. Are we so abiding?

In the evening, to a very full meeting, Rev. EVAN HOPKINS spoke a few words on the need of definiteness. "What wouldst thou, that I should give thee," and Rev. J. A. JACOBS spoke on Gen. xlix. 14, 15—to-day. The subject, a most unusual one, was well handled, and proved to be bristling with points of interest. (1) Issachar had left Egypt, crossed the Red Sea, and reached the land of victory; he was "strong" in his own strength, and so failed. (2) He temporised with surrounding nations, submitted to tribute, finally enjoyed it, bore its burdens, and found it "pleasant." (3) He was on conquered ground; he had not to conquer, merely to hold. So with us, we have been forgiven, and delivered, but trusting in our own strength we fail. Then we are apt to compromise with sin, bear its burdens, and, though on resurrection ground, live in bondage, "crouching down," miserable captives, when we might be "more than conquerors through Him that loved us."

After singing "My heart is resting, oh my God!" Rev. W. HASLAM gave us another of his talks, on the line of "Glory to Thee for all the grace I have not tasted yet." This would be how the Israelites felt when they shouted before Jericho's walls fell down. "Oh, but," you say, "the difficulties!" Never mind; He says, "Follow me." You haven't to meet them if you keep behind Him; and as for enemies—are they not drowned in the Red Sea? Why resuscitate them, and fight them over again? We, the temples of the Holy Ghost, have made ourselves the palaces of the world, the flesh, and the devil, for if Christ is knocking outside, we may be sure the devil is inside. Let us stand together, shoulder to shoulder, against the devil and all his works.

Mr. GREGSON followed, with burning words, from a soul on fire, on the need of the power of the Holy Ghost, to do the work which we, with all our complex nineteenth century machinery, are failing in doing.

Think of the ecclesiastical machinery to reach our "lapsed masses," lapsed masses because of our disobedience to the command to preach the Gospel to every creature! Is the result equivalent to the expenditure? The vine-life is the Spirit life in us, but this means self-death. As long as we are trying to grow our own little vine, in our own little denominational flower-pot, the Spirit-life cannot fill us. We must be self-emptied, then comes the Spirit-filling.

The after-meeting which followed was very solemn. One feels it is almost sacrilegious to breathe outside what is done inside those closed doors, when the presence of the Lord is a felt reality, and his voice speaks. One would rather let the changed lives tell the glorious story of the love which so passeth knowledge, that it can take even the weakest and most unworthy, and fashion, from such poor clay, a vessel meet for the Master's use.

The ladies' meetings were conducted daily by Mrs. MacAlpine and Miss Cowan, in the Assize Courts, a most formidable place for a woman to speak, as all admitted, who for the first time found themselves surrounded by the stately judicial paraphernalia. But the messengers were hidden in the message, and much blessing followed their testimony to the faithfulness of the Lord to cleanse, deliver, and empower his children for his glory.

The Convention closed with a thanksgiving service on Friday evening, when heart and voice united in praising the King, whose grace had enabled us to crown Him Lord of all.

AMY BEATRICE CARMICHAEL.

N.E. LONDON GOSPEL MISSIONS.

MUCH blessing has recently accrued from the labours of the friends of the North-East London Gospel Missions, more especially at the Ball's Pond Hall. A number of young people have decided for Christ, and a young believers' meeting has been organised.

The director, Mr. William Chorley (2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, N.), writes:—"We can also say the hand of the Lord is upon us for good in other ways, and specially amongst the girls attending the two Factory Girls' Institutes. Much encouragement is also recorded in the newly opened Bible and Book Depôt, to which we are about to add a stock of anti-infidel literature. As some of our largest halls are found amid some of the most pitiable and destitute localities, our work must of necessity be largely practical, and around one at least of our East-end halls, the bulk of the inhabitants live under the shadow of the workhouse, from year's end to year's end. We give food in the shape of oatmeal and bread, for home use. There is no safer plan to learn whom to assist and whom to resist than living amongst them. This is just what we are doing, and consequently know pretty well whom we are helping, and in the most practical way, we induce thrift, virtue, and industry, and impeach vice and indulgence.

"To describe the cases we meet with, more especially the nakedness of scores of dear little children, not to mention those of riper years, would pain us and grieve our readers. Children's clothing and shoes are especially welcome at any time. In a home we have visited only a few days ago, in one corner, on a bundle called a bed, lay the mother too ill to sit up. Standing and sitting on the floor around the embers in the grate we count just five pale and stricken children, every one of them shoeless and half naked. The man has stood for hours this morning at the dock gates with numbers more, but received no call, and so he has returned 'home' hungry, empty, and dejected, and sits now with his face buried in his hands. The only child able to earn a little is gone to the factory gate to learn if there is any chance of work. The furniture has been going of late to the broker's, and on Monday last the children's bedstead fetched 3s. to pay just one week's rent, to save what remains of the household being turned into the street. To moralise were superfluous. The present unequal struggle must in a few weeks, unless deliverance is forthcoming, drive them forth to swell the sickly crowd of homeless poor, and drift with the tide of low lodging-house life."

A SUCCESSFUL MISSION CHURCH.

HARROLD, a village of one thousand inhabitants, in the vicinity of Bedford, has of late years been the scene of an evangelistic work which may afford much encouragement to Christian workers. Some fourteen years ago Mr. J. C. Croxford visited Harrold for the purpose of holding a few weeks' mission services in this needy district. In a very remarkable manner, the way has been opened for him to continue his labours here, without intermission, from that time to the present. To begin with there was nothing; now there are ninety members in Church fellowship. Mr. Croxford began this work in a dancing-room, and so much blessing accompanied the Word that finally he was induced to remain in Harrold. He entered heartily upon evangelistic work in the surrounding district, opened a night-school, and carried on temperance work. The dancing-room soon grew too strait, and in the summer of 1876 a barn was fitted up for the further progress of the work. That also had to make way for a substantial mission hall, which was erected through the kindness of a Christian lady in the neighbourhood.

For some four years the work was conducted on purely evangelistic lines, and many were brought to the Lord. It was then found advisable to institute means of Christian fellowship for those who had been converted. Gradually a church was organised, and, during the intervening years, 120 have been gathered into fellowship. Some have moved to other districts and joined Christian churches, and some have been called to the home above. The present membership is ninety. The villages around have been vigorously evangelised, and striking testimony is borne to the change in the moral and spiritual tone of life in Harrold.

Under the strain of incessant work Mr. Croxford has suffered much from a relaxed throat, and is compelled by medical advice to cease preaching, and spend the winter in a warmer clime. Previous to his departure, which it is expected will be in a week or two, a meeting of the members was held on October 31. A most profitable and encouraging meeting was held. Many testimonies were borne by the converts to the gracious effects of Mr. Croxford's ministry, and very warm is the attachment of the people to him. During the meeting the pastor introduced Mr. A. Gregory Wilkinson, by whom the Mission is to be carried on during his absence.

BISHOPSGATE MISSION TO THE JEWS.—This Mission, which is conducted by Mr. A. Hornstein, at 29, Duke-street, Brushfield-street, E.C., has for its object the teaching of Christianity among the Hebrew population of the poorest part of London. On Saturday last some 130 of these poor people partook of tea, in the schoolroom of Bishopsgate Chapel, where the meetings are held weekly. After the tea a meeting was held, at which Mr. George Williams presided, supported by several friends of Israel. Pointed addresses were delivered by Revs. J. Gosset Tanner, T. Grear, and J. B. Barraclough. The last-named knew Mr. Hornstein before he was a Christian, and spoke in kindly recognition of his endeavours to bring his brethren to a knowledge of Christ. Friends of work among the Jews in this particular neighbourhood of London may communicate with Mr. Hornstein, at 66, Cassland-road, South Hackney, N.E.

ord Radstock & Canon Wilberforce.

Tuesday, of last week, a meeting of Chris-n friends was held at Eccleston Hall to nmend Lord Radstock and Canon Wilber-ce, and Mrs. and Miss Wilberforce, to God's re and guidance during their visit to India, which they are this week leaving. Lord dstock is going specially on an evangelistic ssion, and the Canon, as our readers are vare, partly for health's sake, and specially to quaint himself with the Opium Traffic, with e intention of making known the results of s investigations on his return.

Canon Wilberforce said he was going with e words of St. Paul ringing in his heart: Rise and stand upon thy feet: for I have peared unto thee for this purpose, to make ee a minister and a witness both of these ings which thou hast seen, and of those ings in the which I will appear unto thee." e was going as a God-enclosed man; and nowing that he was carried in the hearts of hers; and was thereby strengthened and free om anxiety.

Lord Radstock said that when last in India e had been deeply impressed by the enormous lasses who had never heard of Jesus. If we ealised what it is to be the Body of Christ, ow heavily would the responsibility of repre-nting Him lie upon us. They are not going om impulse, but because they are sent. Ie specially asked that he might be privileged be a help to brethren in India, and that the ttle band might be endued with Divine power.

Mr. Donald Matheson and Mr. Broomhall oke briefly, and Revs. Gelson Gregson, C. A. ox, Evan Hopkins, and Mr. James E. Mathie-on affectionately led the prayers of the con-regation.

MISSIONARY "GLEANERS."

HE "Gleaners' Union for Prayer and Work," hough the youngest, is one of the most useful f the various agencies connected with the Church Missionary Society, for arousing and ustaining an active interest in its operations. On Friday last the annual meetings took place n Exeter Hall. There was a Conference in the Lower Hall, in the afternoon, when Sir John H. Kennaway, M.P., presided, and a devotional ddress was delivered by Rev. S. A. Selwyn. In the evening a crowded public meeting was eld in the Large Hall.

Mr. EUGENE STOCK, founder of the Union, mentioned that the present membership is 8,960, the number of new members who have oined during the year being 5641. The Union as a special fund, which is termed "Our Own Missionary" Fund. It does not support a missionary of its own, but provides for the maintenance of a different worker each year. The one chosen for the current twelve months is Miss M. L. Ridley, who has lately gone to China.

The BISHOP OF BEDFORD, who occupied the chair, praised the Gleaners' Union because it joins its members together to promote the cause of missions to the heathen, while, at the same time, it encourages them to engage in practical work at home. Rev. E. A. STUART delivered a rousing address, instancing the efforts on behalf of foreign missions as a stern warfare, in the face of the many criticisms which are being passed upon them. Rev. HENRY SUTTON urged his hearers to remember that, as regards diligent study of the Word, earnest prayer, and by personal effort, they should keep in mind that each one has a definite work to do in extending the kingdom of God.

Dr. S. T. PRUEN pleaded on behalf of East Africa, which is being so rapidly opened up to civilisation. Mr. GRAHAM WILMOT-BROOKE spoke briefly of his recent experiences in West Africa, and referred to the awful misery and woe which exists among the people in the parts where he has been travelling. He dwelt with force upon the great need of the Gospel in those parts, and asked prayer on behalf of himself and several companions, who are returning with him in a few weeks.

The concluding address, which was of a very solemn and searching character, was by the Hon. and Rev. W. TALBOT RICE. It was an earnest call for full consecration to the service of Christ.

The Book World.

BIBLE ATLAS. By T. R. Johnston, F.R.G.S. This is a very useful little work, published by Ruddiman, Johnston & Co., 26, Charterhouse-square, E.C. The maps are sixteen in number, and well up to date. In printing and colouring, this little atlas is a very good specimen of cartography.

HOW TO TREAT THE SICK WITHOUT MEDICINE. By J. C. Jackson, M.D. 3s. 6d. Hamilton, Adams & Co. A reprint of a work which has had a large circulation in America. To those who have found a friend in medicine, as well as to such as have been nothing bettered by drugs, many words of sound sense are addressed in these pages.

THE CREDENTIALS OF THE GOSPEL. By Joseph Agar Beet. 2s. 6d. Wesleyan Methodist Book Room. This is the nineteenth Fernley Lecture, and it will occupy a truly worthy place in that valuable series. Scholarly in statement, and cogent in argument, it is sure to enhance the already high reputation of its author. The Gospel of Christ is proved to be true by moral and material evidences, by internal and external proofs. By an exposition of the contents of the Gospel, Professor Beet grandly shows the ground of our confidence. The accumulation of reasons for the Christian hope is presented with clearness and convincing force. Man's need has been met by the Power from whose hand all things came. The spread of Christianity and the experience of believers can only be explained by the fact recorded in Scripture, that Christ rose from the dead, and anointed his followers with his own power and the Spirit of God, that they might carry to the ends of the earth the good news of salvation. Some philosophical questions are ably argued in a number of added notes.

STUDIES ON THE EPISTLES. By F. Godet, D.D. Translated by Annie Harwood Holmden. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Twelve papers, admirably opening up the Epistles of Paul. As introductions to a thorough study, we can conceive nothing better. The author's well-known expository power is seen throughout, and on some important points this volume represents his maturest views. While commending every chapter to the careful attention of students, we would specify that on the Epistle to the Romans, as particularly rich in suggestion. Professor Godet well says:—"This is no controversy between Judaising and Pauline Christians. Paul is contrasting Christianity itself with the old Pagan and Jewish religions, that he may show forth in Christ the one true and perfect salvation for the human race, lost, as it was, in its father Adam. The antithesis here is not, as in the Epistle to the Galatians, between Christ and Moses, but between Christ and Adam. As De Wette observes: 'It was fitting that the Church of the world's metropolis should receive the Apostle's teaching upon so great a subject.'"

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

THE WELCOME HOUR. Vol. xiii. 2s. 6d. Marshall Bros. This is a capital miscellany of fireside reading. Young and old will find its well-filled pages interesting and elevating. "Wonders of Science and Divine Wisdom" is the title of a valuable series of articles, by Dr. E. H. Riches.

THE SUNDAY AT HOME. 6s. Religious Tract Society. The varied contents of this volume, in which are bound up the monthly parts January to October, provide Sunday reading for every member of the family. The coloured plates are a feature of special interest. There are many biographical sketches, also contributions bearing on missions. "Irish Sacred Literature and Art" is the title of a series of articles by Rev. R. Lovett. Rev. Dr. G. T. Stokes writes several valuable papers on "Recent Discoveries and the Christian Faith." A new vol. is commenced with the November part of this monthly.

BO-PEEP. 3s. 6d. Cassell & Co. A treasury for the little ones, in fact as well as in name. What with the large type, and the many pictures of the kind which delight young children, this serial makes a strong bid for popularity. More than that, it enjoys a high reputation, which is in every way well sustained in this volume. The original stories and verses are a strong feature.

Rev. W. M. Whittemore, D.D., edits two attractive monthlies, published by G. Stoneman, 67, Paternoster-row. The annual volumes will be welcome in many a home. 1s. 6d. each. LITTLE STAR will charm the inmates of the nursery; the pictures are numerous, and the type bold.—SUNSHINE, for the home and school, makes an appeal to all classes. The contents are varied and useful, as well as entertaining.

THE TEMPERANCE MIRROR. Vol. ix. 2s. 6d. National Temperance Publication Depôt. Reading for the home, always healthy, and calculated to commend the cause of temperance. Facts are stated, and principles propounded; precepts are formulated, and examples instanced, throughout these bright and stimulating pages. There are many pieces suited for recitation, and the volume will be a capital addition to school and village libraries.

THE LEISURE HOUR ANNUAL contains the parts from January to October. It forms a handsome book for presentation. Illustrations are excellent and frequent, and the literary matter covers a wide and useful field. Special mention may be made of several articles on "The Handwriting of the Kings and Queens of England," and the "Notes on Current Science, Invention, and Discovery." The November issue of this monthly begins a new volume. (6s. Religious Tract Society.)

THE BOY'S OWN ANNUAL. 8s. Religious Tract Society. The eleventh volume of a serial of sterling worth. Were it not for such high-class publications, the youth of to-day could hardly be blamed for reading the trash which, alas! enjoys a sadly large circulation. In addition to the tales and contributions on outdoor and indoor amusements, there are many articles calculated to draw out the intelligence of lads, and store their minds with information. The illustrations are fully up to the mark.

"A1," volume ii. 8s. Partridge & Co. Here are 832 large pages of entertaining and instructive reading matter, accompanied by many and excellent illustrations. The serial stories are wholesome in tone, the general articles including many of a high educational order. Sir R. S. Ball's "Glimpses at Other Worlds" are remarkably interesting; "British Industries" is a useful series of contributions; and there are some capital papers on travel and topography. Young and old of all classes will find something to please them in the pages of this magazine.

THE GIRL'S OWN ANNUAL fully sustains a well-earned reputation. The contributors to this, the tenth volume, include several good names, and the artists are of the most popular. Of the contents it is sufficient to say that they are as high in character as they are remarkably varied; the practically useful and the wholesomely amusing are blended in a manner which bears high testimony to the excellence of the editorial management. With this admirably illustrated volume at hand, young women will hardly be disposed to neglect reading. (8s. Religious Tract Society.)

THE WHITECROSS-STREET MISSION.—The praiseworthy Mission which has for twenty-one years been carried on in the mass of lanes, courts, and alleys in the neighbourhood of Whitecross-street, made a marked step in advance last week, when the foundation-stone was laid of the "New Leysian Hall," in Errol-street, a narrow street running from Whitecross-street to City-road. About three years ago the work was taken over by the London Wesleyan Methodist Mission, and is now doing good work with Mr. T. I. Jarrott as lay agent, in conjunction with the Leys Christian Union. The new buildings will provide for a large drill-hall, a youth's institute, with gymnasium, working men's club, girl's parlour, coffee-bar, surgery, a large hall capable with gallery of holding 700, kitchen, store-rooms, heating apparatus, lavatories, class-rooms, &c. The total cost will be about £9000, towards which £4000 has been subscribed. The ceremony of laying the foundation-stone drew together a numerous assemblage. A public service was afterwards held in City-road Chapel, when Rev. John McNeill preached. In the evening a public meeting was held, Mr. W. Willis, Q.C., in the chair.

MR. W. R. LANE AT EASTBOURNE.

SIGNAL blessing has attended a ten days' mission at Eastbourne, conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane, at the invitation of the Committee of the Y.M.C.A. The hearts of believers are overflowing with thankfulness for God's great goodness in this work. Prayer has been abundantly answered. Over 20,000 invitation cards had been distributed over the town. Workers were stationed at the corners of the principal thoroughfares, before six o'clock in the morning, to intercept the men on their way to work. The cards were, as a rule, accepted most willingly.

The mission commenced in the hall of the Y.M.C.A., but the people gathered in such crowds that a move had to be made to more commodious premises. By the liberality of two Christian ladies the Town Hall was placed at Mr. Lane's disposal for the last two days of the mission as well as the Sunday previously arranged for. Perhaps the crowning success was the meeting for men only, when over eight hundred assembled. In the after-meeting many signified their desire for prayer, and subsequently confessed Christ. A pleasing feature has been the number of youths from the senior classes of the Sunday-schools who have been brought to decision.

Bible-readings were held each afternoon, referring especially to Christian life and service. During the mission the frequent attendance and assistance of many of the ministers added largely to the interest in the work.

AMERICAN NOTES.

[BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

A JEWISH Rabbi in a Western city gives the following unequivocal statement, in reference to Church amusements:—"I am opposed to anything that increases Church attendance at the expense of theology. I am opposed to any artifices, clap-trap, or side issues, in connection with religion. Just as soon as you begin bolstering up a creed or sect with this or that allurement or enticement, it is at once manifest that all is not well with the heart of the religion itself. I would have devotion as broad and far-reaching as the light of day, but I would not stoop to the inauguration of these petty social frivolities." And now hear a Roman Bishop: "We regard our church as the house of God. There is a time for praying and a time for playing. People should be drawn towards the church to hear the word of God.* The other idea is all monstrously wrong."

A chief object of the promoters of the Baltimore Convention on the Person and Ministry of the Spirit is to seek to win back the Church to the only source of spiritual power. This important Convention was held from October 29 to November 1.

At the present writing, I find myself in Topeka, the capital city of Kansas. The State Convention of the Y.M.C.A. is now in session. Eight hundred young men are here, full of fervour and faith. The breeziness and vim of the great West shows itself in their meetings, and in their whole-hearted consecration. D. L. Moody, George C. Needham, and H. Grattan Guinness, are the chief speakers. Last evening, three buildings were all crowded at the same hour. Missionary work is receiving hearty endorsement, and Africa's claims are presented by Bishop Taylor's son, and Dr. Guinness. Nearly fifty young men are enrolled to enter the Soudan as pioneers. They need special training, but do not lack in intellectual ability. Their physique is capable of endurance. What a noble band—leaders of a vast army to follow! God speed the day when Africa's moral desert shall bloom with freshness and beauty!

* It were well if members of the Romish Church generally were at liberty to "hear the word of God"!—ED.

THE "BRIDGE OF HOPE" MISSION.

THE annual meetings of the "Bridge of Hope" Mission and Ratcliff-highway Refuge, held on Wednesday last week, were certainly very encouraging to Miss Steer and her devoted fellow-workers. In the afternoon, Mr. R. C. Morgan presided over a devotional service, which was a stimulating season to many. The address by Mr. George Holland was full of valuable information; and that of Miss Jones, who gave many pathetic incidents of the Shelter work, was interesting in the extreme. The evening meeting was in a high degree cheering. Mr. THEODORE HOWARD, who occupied the chair, spoke in terms of warm appreciation of the work. As the Lord came right down among us to lift us up, so Miss Steer has gone into the very midst of the poor and miserable of East London, in order to rescue the fallen and help the weak and suffering. Young, old, and middle-aged are all cared for; and alongside the work of rescue goes that of prevention. The hearts of the audience went with the Chairman as he expressed a hope that by the "Bridge of Hope" many will learn the way from darkness to light, from sin to holiness, from death to life.

The financial condition of the institution, as explained by Mr. J. J. CORBIN, was very satistory. Friends in goodly number had come forward to meet the need, and, as the means have been forthcoming, the operations have steadily extended. Miss STEER, in a brief address, beginning and ending with expressions of gratitude to God, pointed out that, as the work has grown, the economical character of the management had been increasingly apparent. A study of the balance-sheet showed that the income of £2500 had been spent to wonderful advantage. The earnings by laundry and needlework amounted to £450. Miss Steer gave no statistics, and justified that course by saying that it is impossible to declare when cases issue well and when they do not. Quite recently, a woman who had been given up as lost called upon her, and rejoiced her heart by affording evidence that loving labour spent upon her some time ago had unexpectedly proved fruitful. Having referred to the trials of the work, Miss Steer spoke of some of its joys. Only three days previously, on Sunday, when talking to a few of the girls, one of them took her by the hand, and said: "When I came into this house, I was a broken-hearted woman; but now I am so happy I do not know what to do. God has been too good to me—such a sinner." Going into details, Miss Steer told of the daily gifts of meals and clothing to the many thousands of needy people in St. George's.

Miss MACPHERSON enlarged upon the absolute necessity of such loving endeavours. Miss Steer's is a work which can only be done by women; and, what with the many temptations (including some new devisings of Satan), there is room for others to emulate the example set by Miss Steer. Heavenly wisdom and grace are constantly required, and never denied to godly and earnest workers.

Mr. J. HOWARD, M.P., spoke a few words in hearty praise of the various agencies. The last to address the meeting was Miss SNEDMORE, who renders cheerful and valued assistance to the work. She told of blessing having resulted from definite testimony for Christ. Love for the Saviour is the sustaining motive in all the exertions; and it was delightful to hear that not in vain is the Gospel preached to the backward and downtrodden, the weary and out of the way. We sincerely trust that next year's work will be on the same line of steady progress.

Factory Helpers' Union.—The workers earnestly ask for cast-off clothing, especially warm skirts and boots, to help to carry on the work amongst the factory girls during the coming winter. Parcels gladly received and acknowledged by Secretary, Clothing Department, 16A, Old Cavendish-street, W.

A SONG OF HOPE.

"The valley of Achor for a door of hope."—HOSEA ii. 15

BRUISED heart so sorely aching,
Wounded spirit well-nigh breaking;
Midst the anguish of thy weeping,
Fruits of shame and sorrow reaping;
Midst thy darkness of despairing
One above for thee is caring.
Through the mists of thy repining
Mercy's golden light is shining;
Through the shadows of thy blindness
Shines the sunbeams of his kindness.
As the tender mother careth
For the frailest that she beareth;
As the loved one seems the dearest
When the hour of death is nearest;
As the shepherd seeks his sheep,
Over valley, plain, and steep;
So, when human strength is frailest,
When the joys of earth are palest,
When in bitterness ye languish,
'Neath the power of sin's deep anguish;
When the sword of guilt's dire dread
Bendeth o'er thy drooping head;
When thy soul with torture burneth,
And to Him with trembling turneth—
Then it is He waits to bless thee,
Then He stoopeth to caress thee,
Cancelling thy every sin;
Giving thee His grace within.
Lift to Him thy yearning heart;
All things earthly must depart;
Yet by trusting in his merit,
Thou mayst endless joys inherit.
He, thine All in all will be,
Now, and through eternity.

HARRIET JULIA EVANS.

MISSIONS BY REV. F. B. MEYER.

DURING the last fortnight this hard-working pastor has conducted two very successful missions at Norwich and Bristol. At the former place the churches under the pastoral charge of Rev. J. H. Shakespeare (Baptist), and E. R. Barrett (Congregationalist), united. Afternoon meetings in the Congregational Church were largely attended, and felt to be a rich means of grace to many. The evening gatherings in St. Mary's Baptist Church were crowded to excess, and were marked by unmistakeable tokens of the Spirit's working. A meeting of the ministers of Norwich and district was held, with very encouraging results. The solos of Rev. W. J. Mayers were highly appreciated.

At Bristol the mission was held in connection with the churches ministered to by Rev. R. Glover (Baptist), and Rev. Urijah Thomas (Congregational), and there were the same gratifying features, both as to numbers and blessing. Perhaps the most noticeable element in the work was the deep and solemn stillness that pervaded the congregations, which represented all grades of social life in the city.

THE YOUNG MEN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.—Many friends may like to know that a full report of the recent Conference at the Metropolitan Tabernacle is published as an extra number of the City of London Association News, the organ of the Aldersgate-street branch of the Y.M.C.A. It is illustrated by portraits of a number of the speakers, and is an admirable record of an important event. The price is 2d.

REV. J. GUINNESS ROGERS thinks there is danger lest sufficient prominence be not given to the primary work of all times and all churches—the conversion of sinners to Christ. Feeling very deeply on this point, Mr. Rogers has begun a series of Sunday evening sermons at Clapham of a directly evangelistic character. The series will continue throughout November, and, if the results justify, a nightly series of special meetings will be held at the close.

Letters to the Editor.

DR. CLIFFORD'S NEW DEPARTURE."

EAR SIR,—I see from your article on the dis-sion respecting Dr. Clifford, lately begun by my end, Rev. John Urquhart, that you blame the ptist Union for its policy of silence. You ume that its duty to speak out is clear: that it ght to do so. Will you allow me to question this umption? I have done my best to judge of both s and of the Down-grade Controversy generally, the light of New Testament precept and ex-ple, and my conviction deepens that duty lies a very different direction. I feel sure that if the ptist Union really wishes to obey the New stament, it ought not, at this juncture of events, institute any inquiry into Dr. Clifford's ortho-xy.

The Scripture law that should govern all such ses is given in the illustration of "The Mote d the Beam." This was echoed by Paul al. vi. 1), "Ye which are spiritual restore such one," and has been re-echoed again by Dr. lross, in that almost perfect address of his, hich you report in your last issue.

Following this simple rule, we shall ask, as our ry first question, "Are we qualified to judge this ported heresy? Are we, as a body, spiritually inded? or are we, like the Corinthian Christians old (1 Cor. iii. 1—4) only 'babes in Christ,' and carnal'; disqualified by deficient spirituality r the sacred and Christlike work of correcting rring brethren?" If this be our condition—nd is it not the condition of every Christian ody existing in England to-day?—our first duty confession, humiliation, and prayer. "First ast the beam out of thine own eye." Till we ave attained to the Pauline standard of spi-ituality, we must leave heresy-hunting alone. We ust gather together to seek God; and, if we do his first work well, there will not be much heresy eft for us to judge. "In his light, we shall see ight." When the defence of God's cause is under-aken by those who, though true believers, are not filled with the Spirit," great evil is wrought. Seldom does Satan do a day's work so much to his mind as when he incites an unspiritual Church to heresy-hunt.

If the Baptist Union, though composed of con-verted men, is not deeply spiritual in Paul's sense of the word—and I know of no religious body that is —why urge us to war when confession and prayer are our plain duty? Should we not all, down-graders and anti-down-graders alike, agree to adjourn the debate till we can conduct it as true brethren, in the Great Father's immediate presence? And this is very much what is being done. I belong to four Associations of Baptist ministers, of which one meets weekly, two monthly, one quarterly, and one half-yearly, and I can testify to a remarkable yearning for more purity and power and true spirituality springing up in each of these circles.

It is not too much to say that there is a quiet, but wonderful, movement towards God and his truth now going on among Baptist ministers generally, and the action of the Baptist Union in appointing January 1, 1890, as a day of prayer was but one of the straws that show the direction of this strong current God-ward. Moreover, not a few of those who are now the most eager for a higher life have been, and still are, opposed to Mr. Spurgeon in the controversy he has raised.

I appeal to you, sir, to use all your just influence to stay this controversy, and to help to foster this new and better spirit. Dr. Clifford has identified himself with this new movement towards a deeper life, and I earnestly hope that he will let this controversy die by refusing to answer his critics.

If we can defend truth by calm, earnest arguments, and without raising any personal questions, let us do so. Mr. Urquhart himself has already done splendid service of this kind in his invaluable book on fulfilled prophecy—"What are we to believe?" (Hodder & Stoughton. 2s. 6d.). I hope that he will do even better service in the new sixpenny monthly (The King's Own) which he is about to publish. But, in the name of our Lord and his sacred truth, let us drop all controversy about Mr. This or Dr. That; at any rate until we are more spiritual. To those who would still contend, I feel inclined to say: "Do be quiet, brother! We are praying—seeking the Lord. By all means kneel down and unite with us; but, pray, don't disturb us!"

Very many of us feel that this is pre-eminently a time to seek the Lord. Let us cease to judge one another; let us pray.—I am, Sir, yours truly,

A LONDON BAPTIST MINISTER.

Evangelistic Notes.

Rev. F. C. Spurr has conducted a mission at Albemarle Baptist Church, Taunton, with much apparent success, both as to attendance and spiritual results.

Ben Hogan has been holding Gospel meetings in the Opera House, at Wheeling, Virginia. They were attended by large crowds, and good results have followed.

Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker are now conducting a fourteen days' mission at Sandpits, Ludlow. Much blessing is attending the labours of the evangelists and their helpers.

Mr. Newton Jones, secretary of the Evangelistic Mission Children's Service Band, has completed an eight days' mission at Pastor Tilley's Baptist Chapel, Cardiff. The meetings were attended with much blessing. The Bible-readings were a source of much spiritual blessing.

Evangelistic Mission.—The Bible Carriage connected with this Mission is still on the road in Buckinghamshire, visiting many of the out-of-the-way places, and scattering the seed of the Word. During the past four months the distance travelled has amounted to over one thousand miles.

Rev. W. A. Meaton.—A brief mission for young people was conducted by this evangelist, in Linden-grove Sunday-school, Peckham Rye, from October 15 to 18; many decided to accept Jesus. A nine days' mission was subsequently held in Bedford Chapel, Charrington-street. The power of the Lord was present to heal and bless.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has brought to a close a successful fifteen days' mission in St. George-the-Martyr schoolroom, Bolton. The Friday night meetings were for men only; infidels and Unitarians put questions to Mr. Bradlaugh, to which he replied. Anti-infidel literature was scattered at the meetings. Mr. Bradlaugh is now meeting with much success in the Tabernacle, Altrincham.

Islington.—A very successful fortnight's evangelistic mission, at Cross-street Baptist Chapel, Islington, was brought to a close on Sunday week. The services have been conducted every evening by Rev. J. S. Harrison, Mrs. Harrison also taking part by singing Gospel solos. The blessing received has been specially remarkable in the fact that, in numerous instances, several members of a family, and, in one case, six out of eight boys in one class, have been led to the Saviour. The pastor, Rev. Frederick A. Jones, presided over an enthusiastic thanksgiving meeting, when many publicly testified to the blessing they had received.

Mr. Herbert R. Francis at Torquay.—During the last week Mr. Francis has given Gospel addresses two or three times each day, either in halls, mission-rooms, or drawing-rooms, besides conducting Bible-readings on the Tabernacle, and preaching on Sunday afternoons and evenings with much of the Spirit's power to numerous and attentive congregations. Unconverted ones from nine years of age to grown-up persons have been turned from darkness to light, the backslider graciously restored, and believers refreshed and strengthened by the uplifting of the Lord Jesus Christ. The faithful testimony rendered will long be remembered. Many prayers will follow Mr. Herbert Francis across the Atlantic when he returns to resume his labour of love in the Southern States of America, where such numbers have already received from his lips the glad message of salvation.

Torquay, Oct. 31. L. J.

Princes Hall, Piccadilly, W., has been taken by the Wesleyan West London Mission for the purpose of holding a continuous mission from November 18 to December 1. Services will be held each evening, except Saturday, at eight. The mission is specially designed to reach the classes of the West-end, and great efforts are to be made to bring it before their notice. It is to be conducted by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes.

Church Parochial Mission Society.—The following missions have been arranged for the month of November. It is hoped they will be made a subject of prayer by our readers:—Rev. W. Hay Aitken: to Nov. 11, St. John's, Carlisle; 17 to Dec. 1, St. Paul's, Aberdeen, N.B. Rev. W. H. Askwith: to Nov. 12, Woolhampton, near Reading. Ring: Nov. 7 to 19, St. Andrew's, Wolverhampton. Rev. F. E. Rogers: to Nov. 11, Holmside, near Lanchester. Rev. F. E. Rogers and Revs. W. Davies and E. F. Ford: Nov. 23 to Dec. 2, Masbrough, Rotherham. Rev. E. B. Russell: to Nov. 12, Monkton, Ramsgate; 30 to Dec. 9, Burstow, Horley, Surrey. Rev. J. Hall Shaw: Nov. 10 to 20, St. Agnes', Burmantofts, Leeds. Rev. H. Pelham-Stokes: to Nov. 11, St. Philip's, Heigham, Norwich. Rev. J. O. West: Nov. 16 to 27, St. Peter's, Highgate-hill, N. Rev. Jas. White: to Nov. 12: Nether Broughton, Melton Mowbray. Croydon General Mission, Nov. 16 to 26:—Rev. E. F. S. Besley, St. Luke's, Woodside; Rev. W. St. Hill Bourne, St. Andrew's, Croydon; Rev. F. B. de Chair, St. James's, Croydon; Rev. J. Cullin, St. Mark's, South Norwood; Rev. W. E. Emmet, Holy Trinity, Selhurst; Rev. Daniel Evans, St. Michael's, Croydon; Rev. H. Falloon, St. Mary Magdalene, Addiscombe; Rev. W. E. Laycock, Christ Church, Croydon; Rev. J. Simpson, St. Peter's, Croydon; Rev. F. S. Webster, St. Matthew's, Croydon. Darwen General Mission, Nov. 23 to Dec. 3:—Revs. R. Catterall and A. S. Rashleigh, St. Cuthbert's, Darwen; Rev. J. P. Cushing, Holy Trinity Church, Darwen; Revs. G. Perry and F. W. Dalby, St. Barnabas', Darwen; Revs. A. B. Sole and Loraine Estridge, St. John's, Darwen.

REV. DR. PIERSON.—In view of the approaching visit to Scotland of this evangelist, a strong committee of friends of mission work has been formed. The convener, Rev. Dr. Lowe, 56, George-square, Edinburgh, in a circular just issued, states that Dr. Pierson hopes to arrive in Liverpool on November 16, and to preach there on the following day. On the Monday afternoon, at a conversazione, a cordial welcome will be extended to Dr. and Mrs. Pierson, and in the evening a public meeting will be held to supplicate the Divine blessing upon the work about to be undertaken. Dr. Pierson will have the cordial co-operation of ministers and laymen of all denominations. For information respecting the arrangement of meetings, we refer our readers to Dr. Lowe.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on Gospel services from Nov. 9 to 13, by Mr. Opie Rodway, at Llantrissant, South Wales.——For united mission services in the Congregational Chapel, Uffculme, Devon, from Nov. 10 to 24.——For blessing on a nine days' mission at Buckingham Hall, Palace-street, Westminster, S.W., Nov. 11 to 19, conducted by Mr. Joseph Samme; service each week-night at eight.——For blessing on a mission to be held at the Mission-room, Maybury, Woking, commencing Nov. 11.——For blessing on the work of the Shrewsbury Town Missionary, especially upon special Gospel meetings about to be held. ——For blessing on a mission by Rev. Mitchell, from Nov. 11 to 24.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Bishop Ryle, speaking at the Diocesan Conference on Monday, said that the death of his wife had been such a blow to him that at his advanced age he must consider the advisability either of resigning his bishopric or getting a suffragan.

The Bishop of Lichfield says he has come to the conclusion that the Book of Common Prayer is not sufficiently adapted to the spiritual requirements of the miners and toilers of his diocese, and that some simpler forms for public worship are much to be desired.

At Westminster Abbey, on Friday, the Archbishop of Canterbury, assisted by several bishops, consecrated the Ven. James Leslie Randall, D.D., Suffragan Bishop of Reading; Prebendary Edward Ash Were, D.D., Suffragan Bishop of Derby; and Rev. Charles John Corfe, D.D., Bishop of Corea.

The Bishop of London on Saturday opened the new parish church of St. Mary, Hornsey, N. The old parish church was re-erected in 1832, and contained seats for about 500. The new building stands on a site immediately adjoining that of the ancient parish church, and accommodation is provided for 1266 persons.

A devotional day for the East-end has been, on the suggestion of the Evangelistic Committee of the East London Church Fund, appointed by the Bishop of Bedford for to-day (Friday). The meditations and addresses are by the Bishop of Marlborough, Rev. H. C. G. Moule, Canon Burrows, Canon Mason, the Dean of Chichester, the Bishop of Melanesia, and Bishop French, while the Bishop of London concludes the day's proceedings with a sermon at St. Paul's, Dalston.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Devonshire House Monthly Meeting has just recorded, as a minister, Mary Anne Marriage Allen, late of Dublin, who soon returns for service among the coloured people of the Southern States of America.

The Christian Worker, of the 17th ult., gives a very interesting biography of the late Charles Hutchinson, an English Friend resident in Iowa, taken from a funeral address by John Henry Douglas there.

Ireland is just now favoured with the presence and help of several American Friends, and John T. Dorland, of Canada, is rendering very welcome and successful service there, especially in Cork, Limerick, and Waterford.

Edith M. Clark, recently returned to Madagascar, is hard at work in the capital. Already she has charge of seven Bible-classes, besides much other work that falls to her lot. She and other workers claim an interest in our prayers.

Charles J. Coffin, of Chicago, has again taken up his residence in London, with credentials, and liberty for service from his own meeting. He and his wife, Rhoda Coffin, also a minister, will receive a hearty welcome among English Friends everywhere.

Another bereavement has befallen London Quarterly Meeting in the death of Henry Hipsley, of Holloway. The loss of two such honoured and devoted Friends as Stafford Allen and Henry Hipsley will be keenly felt, not only in London, but over the whole Society. But our loss is their gain.

BAPTIST.

The congregation of Priory-street Baptist Chapel, York, are observing this week as a week of special prayer for the outpouring of God's Spirit. Meetings are being held each evening.

Rev. W. Purchase, in opening on Saturday week a gymnasium in connection with Regent-street Chapel, Smethwick, said it was a new departure in church work, but good and earnest men, having the cause of God at heart, recognised that a man could be a good athlete, and, at the same time, an equally good soldier of Christ.

The Prayer Union of the Baptist Churches of North Wales and the Border Counties was formally constituted at a meeting lately held at Chester-street Chapel, Wrexham. The members pledge themselves to pray for each other, as far as possible, every Sunday morning. Rev. Gethin Davies, D.D., of Llangollen, is the president, and the secretaries are Revs. Philip A. Hudgell and R. M. Humphreys, Wrexham. It is purposed to hold a monthly Conference at different churches, and also a special quarterly conference.

A new church in Wynne-road, Brixton, was opened on Tuesday, last week, when a prayer and dedication service was held, presided over by the pastor, Rev. Z. T. Dowen. There was a large congregation, and everybody seemed delighted with the new building, and with the additional opportunities afforded by it for aggressive work. The church will seat 700 people. There is plenty of scope for work in Brixton, and if the 150 members of Wynne-road Church bestir themselves, they cannot fail to become an influence that will, as their pastor said, "make history."

Mr. W. P. Lockhart, who has been identified with Toxteth Tabernacle, Liverpool, from the beginning, continues to successfully fulfil the important duties of pastor, whilst still maintaining his connection with business life in the city. At the recent anniversary service he said:—"Although this is only the eighteenth anniversary of the opening of the Tabernacle, it is the twentieth anniversary of the formation of the Christian Church worshipping here. During these twenty years we have baptized on personal profession of faith in Christ 1135 persons, and altogether we have received into the fellowship of the Church nearly 1500. At the present time we have about 750 members."

METHODIST.

The old stable in which the Wesleyan congregation at Hatfield, Herts, worshipped for years, has now been altogether abandoned, and the opening services of the new chapel were held on Wednesday week. The sermons were preached in the afternoon by Rev. Dr. Parker, of the City Temple, London, and in the evening by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes.

Rev. J. E. Clapham is endeavouring to introduce the Forward Movement into the Eastern Counties. He recently visited Hunstanton, and met with an enthusiastic welcome. On the day following, Mr. Clapham spent some hours in inspecting the villages in the circuit. He afterwards visited North Walsham, where he delivered a rousing address, in which he advocated more aggressive work in the churches. Every effort is being made to revolutionise the position of Methodism in Norfolk.

A Circuit Convention was lately held by the Bible Christians in the Penzance Circuit. At the Conference in the afternoon an address was given by Rev. J. Luke on the "Forward Movement," which was spoken of as the Church engaged in aggressive work and adapting its methods to the changed times in which we live. A meeting for Christian testimony followed. At a public meeting held in the evening addresses were delivered on "Conversion: Its Necessity and Blessedness," "Salvation in Christ for all," and "Our Young People for Christ." The meetings were hearty and enthusiastic, and, it is hoped, will be productive of great good.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. T. McDougall Mundle, of Kentish Town, has entered upon the pastorate of London-road Church, Chelmsford, in succession to Rev. George Wilkinson.

New schools have been opened in connection with the church at Green-lane, Liverpool. They will be used for Sunday-schools, gymnasium and educational classes.

On Sunday evening Rev. Newman Hall, of Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, and Dr. Thain Davidson, of Islington Presbyterian Church, exchanged pulpits.

An old room under Chapel-street Church, Salford, has been converted into a gymnasium, and a club has been formed for the young people in the district, which is doing well.

A conference of members of Young People's Unions, Christian Endeavour Society, and kindred organisations was held last week at Carr's-lane Chapel, Birmingham, Dr. Dale presiding. Dr. Ray Palmer showed from his experience in America to how large an extent these societies of young people served as what was once the "missing link" between Sunday-schools and the Church.

During November special services, in conjunction with the West London Mission, are to be held at Westminster Chapel. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes and Rev. Henry S. Lunn, M.D., have arranged to alternately conduct the morning services; the evening services will be conducted by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, who will also give Bible-readings on the Wednesday evenings throughout the month.

Mr. Ebenezer Hawker, B.A., of Hackney College, was lately ordained at Abney Church, Stoke Newington, of which he is a member, as a missionary to South India, under the auspices of the London Missionary Society. The station to which Mr. Hawker has been appointed is Coimbatore, the central town of a large district under the Nilgherry Hills, where, for upwards of half a century, the Society has carried on mission operations.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A Presbyterian Church in Melbourne is said to have introduced some innovations into its services. The choir, composed of gentlemen wearing the kilt, sang the hymns to the music of the bagpipes.

Dr. Monro Gibson had a very hearty welcome from his old friends in Montreal and Chicago. He has now returned from his American tour, and preached in St. John's Wood Church on Sunday last.

It has been suggested in the London Presbytery (North) that Rev. John McNeill should be partially freed from congregational duty in order to undertake evangelistic work. The idea is that his congregation should be satisfied to have him at the morning service, and that he should be set free to preach in Exeter Hall or some other central place in the evening.

At a largely attended meeting in the New North Free Church, Edinburgh, farewell was taken of Revs. G. Smith and W. Macgregor, and their wives, in prospect of their early return to China. Mr. Smith said that the New North congregation had given two lady missionaries to China. There are, he added, 1000 missionaries at present labouring in China, representing thirty different churches or societies.

A conference of ministers and elders from the Presbyteries of Berwick, Northumberland, Newcastle, and Darlington, was held on Monday and Tuesday, last week, in Blackett-street Church, Newcastle. At an afternoon conference Rev. J. S. Rae, Sunderland, read a paper on "The Rest of Faith: How Attained and How Manifested." Rev. R. Leitch referred to the many conferences that had been held of late, for the purpose of waiting upon God with a view to realising how to better enter into the "Rest of Faith." Rev. A. F. Douglas, of Ancroft Moor, read a paper on "The Claims of the Lord's Day upon Professing Christian." A resolution was adopted, saying that "The conscientious observance of the Lord's Day conduces not only to the temporal welfare of the individual and community, but is essential to the spiritual prosperity of the Church, and demands an important place in the consideration alike of ministers and congregations." Some speakers spoke strongly against ministers riding in trains and public vehicles on Sunday.

SALVATION ARMY.

Last week General Booth opened the former head quarters of the Salvation Army, 272, Whitechapel-road E., as a new Food and Shelter Depôt. There will b sleeping accommodation for 106 men, and 450 can b seated in the Shelter at one time. The bunks are stron oblong boxes, fitted with mattresses stuffed with drie seaweed, said to be most healthy, as it will not becom hard or matted, and woollen rugs for covering. Ther are appliances for supplying 12,000 meals per day, a prices ranging from ½d. to 4d. per meal.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Dublin Methodists are taking up the subject o temperance this year with great vigour and determ nation.

The Gospel mission conducted in Londonderry b Rev. James Stewart, has been most successful. At th closing meeting about a dozen young men decided fo Christ, and over fifty persons testified to blessin received during the services.

The Belfast Methodist Mission is launching out int the deep. It has taken the Circus or Hermon Hal which is capable of accommodating some thousands o persons, as a centre in which to carry on evangelistic temperance, and rescue work.

A motion on Protestant union, proposed last week i the Belfast Diocesan Synod by Rev. Dr. Leaver, an seconded by Rev. Dr. Kane, suggesting an exchange o pulpits with ministers of other denominations, wa strongly opposed by Bishop Reeves and others, and wa therefore withdrawn.

A deeply interesting meeting, to commend to the car of God Rev. J. Shillidy and Mrs. Shillidy, Rev. Mr Fitzsimons and Mrs. Fitzsimons, and Misses Shaw Roberts, and Connell, who are going out as Presbyterian missionaries to India, was held on Tuesday evening, i Fisherwick-place Church, Belfast.

An evangelistic mission, extending over a period o three weeks, has been held in the Baptist Church Carrickfergus, by Mr. Robert Clark, of Dublin. Ther was an increasing attendance night after night, an many were awakened to a sense of their need of Saviour, and found peace through believing.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. John Cassidy Travers, late of Holbeach, Lincoln shire, who was about to enter on his duties as pastor o Sherbrooke-road Baptist Church, Carrington, Notting ham.—Rev. William Dougall, senior pastor of Stone haven Free Church.—M. Etienne Grosjean, for forty-nin years a pastor in the Canton of Berne.—Rev. A. B Hemsworth, rector of Bacton, near Stowmarket, Suffolk —Rev. William Doke, a veteran Baptist minister, fo thirty-four years pastor at Chudleigh, Devon.—Mr James Farron, Ashton-under-Lyne, a well-known local preacher of the Methodist New Connexion.—Rev. John Jenkins, minister of Mount Pleasant Calvinistic Metho dist Chapel, Ebbw Vale.—Mr. Thomas Groom, one o the oldest and most prominent inhabitants of Welling ton, Shropshire, and an active supporter of the religious institutions of the town.

Y.M.C.A., SUNDERLAND.—Mr. F. J. Fedarb general secretary, Sunderland, has received and accepted a call to Ottawa, Canada, to be the General Secretary of the Y.M.C.A. there. The good wishes of all Y.M.C.A. men will be with him in his new sphere of labour. Mr. Henry Grattan Guinness is conducting a fortnight's mission in Sunderland Assembly Hall, under the direction of the Y.M.C.A., with whom the ministers of the town are co-operating.

MISSION WORK AMONG CHILDREN.—A well attended meeting, in support of the Children's Special Service Mission, was held on Monday afternoon, at the Mansion House, Rev. Edward A. Stuart in the chair. The speakers were Mr. E. J. Kennedy, Dr. Charles F. Harford Battersby, and Mr. Henry Hutchinson (organising secretary). They described the work of the Mission at the sea-side, among the children of the upper classes, and in foreign lands. The foreign branch of the Mission has issued illustrated leaflets in forty-nine different languages, and about 10,000,000 copies have been distributed.

THE CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE HOME, for women of all ages, which was opened in June last year at 21, Mortimer-street, Regent-street, W., is already too small to meet pressing needs. Many have been turned away for want of room. Another house has been selected, and can be definitely taken if, within two months, the sum of £60 (of which £10 is promised) can be raised. Miss Richards, writing to us from the Home, says:—"This is in the true sense of the word, and above all, a Christian Home, never refusing food and shelter to any respectable applicant, until suitable employment is found. If any of the Lord's children will pay us a visit, they will hear for themselves concerning our work and its needs. Help, including furniture, books, &c., may be sent to me, or to Miss Denham Smith, 38, York-street, Regent's Park, N.W.; or Miss Habershon, 70, Brook-street, W."

MR. C. E. STUART on "THE ROMANS." *

THIS is a larger work than its size would lead one to suppose. The writer has meditated much and closely on the subject of which he treats, and if he has split on any rock at all it is due to over-refinement, and to a tendency to distinguish between things that do not differ. There is much, however, in this exposition which the devout reader will find helpful and instructive.

The main merit as well as demerit of this work lies in the scope given to definition. The author aims at clearness of distinction. He can pass no expression without trying to fix it. The consequence is that Christians and Christian experience are classified to an extent new, and, we fear, abnormal. For example, the expression "In Christ" does not apply to all who are truly regenerate. Mr. Stuart stoutly contends that "more than the new birth, and something subsequent to it, is needed, ere the individual can be said to be in Christ! That something, Mr. Stuart says, is "the Spirit." The contention here seems, on the face of it, absurd. What is more usual than for converted experience from the very first hour, ay, and moment of conversion, to take the form which, in Scriptural language, absolutely demonstrates the individual in question to be "in Christ"? In dealing with new-born souls, nothing is more usual than to hear them say, "It is with me as I read: 'Old things have passed away; all things have become new.'" But this is the very language which the Holy Ghost employs to tell what "in Christ" signifies.

In like manner Mr. Stuart attaches a peculiar meaning to what is meant by being "in the Spirit." This is something over and above what is contained in the state and experience of the new-born soul. Here, again, the author is surely at fault. Many a new-born soul has a richer possession and a more enlarged indwelling of the Holy Spirit at the time of conversion than in many subsequent years. The fallacy of the book seems to us to be this—an attempt to institute distinctions of kind among the true children of God. In our judgment there are no such distinctions. There are distinctions of degree undoubtedly. But these distinctions by no means invariably tell one way.

There are new-born souls who are fully consecrated from the beginning, and in whom that high level is maintained. While there are others whose subsequent career is much lower pitched than in the first instance. Among the true children of God here below it is a question of degree and never of kind. To say that some of God's children are in Christ, and some are not; that some have the Spirit and some have not; that in some the Spirit dwells and in some He does not—is to say what contradicts Scripture and fact. According to such a theory, it is not all God's people who are in a saved state—not all the regenerate who are secure from the deadly sentence; but only a portion of them, namely, those who are advanced enough to be "in Christ." If such teaching were correct, it could not be true that "he that believeth hath everlasting life," but he that after believing is brought up to the higher and additional standard of "in Christ" is in this blessed condition.

We hope the devout author will be led to reconsider his finding on these and similar points. He writes well, and by no means skims the surface of his grand theme; and, while we feel compelled, in justice, to animadvert on mistaken positions, as they seem to us, we are free to confess that the book has considerable merits, and that with no small portion of its contents we are in entire accord.

DAVID'S LAST WORDS.—2 SAM. xxiii. 1—7.

GOLDEN TEXT: VER. 5.

WE have not a very full record of the incidents which marked the closing years of David's life. This is to his advantage. The history is fullest where it is connected with some failure and sin. That there was not much to record suggests that David had not forgotten the important lessons which God's chastisement had taught him.

Of the few incidents that are recorded, the Famine (xxi.) and the Psalm of Thanksgiving (xxii.) may probably be referred to a period previous to the rebellion of Absalom. But the pestilence seems to have been subsequent to that event. For in 1 Chron. xxi. and xxii. it is connected with the purchase of the Temple site, and the instructions to Solomon concerning the Temple. This was probably near the close of David's life. The pestilence resulted from God's anger against the sin of Israel (2 Sam. xxiv. 1), though the immediate occasion of it was the sin of David in numbering the people. The attempt of Adonijah to usurp the crown (1 Kings i.) was one of the last incidents that troubled the close of David's life. So that the prophecy of Nathan (xii. 10) was literally fulfilled.

These verses do not record the whole of David's last words. There are his last words to the princes and leaders of the people in 1 Chron. xxviii. and xxix. whom he stimulated by his own generous example to "consecrate their service to the Lord." Following these were his last words to Solomon (1 Kings ii. 1—9), exhorting him to the best possible kind of manliness, and, as a righteous ruler, giving charge concerning the punishment of Joab and Shimei, and the reward of Barzillai. There is also his last prayer (Ps. lxxii. 20), which, though at first referring to Solomon, reached far beyond him to the Redeemer's millennial kingdom. Our lesson contains his last words to the world. The subject of them is the same as that of his last prayer. It is impossible to read them aright without seeing their reference to David's Greater Son. It is well therefore to note that, as David's sun was setting, he was occupied with that Sun of Righteousness who should arise with healing on his wings (Mal. iv. 2). As David retires, the true King and Righteous Ruler appears.

Note how the Psalmist is described (1). His lowly position as the son of Jesse; his exaltation; his anointing to the office of king; and his gift of song. There is an important sense in which the whole of these steps are possible to us. The lowly are now exalted and filled with the spirit of song (Ps. xl. 2, 3). Note, also, the inspired character of these last words (2, 3). David spake only what God spake to him, and by him. No one can speak with profit to men who does not first hear God speaking to him. Teachers—this is a lesson for us.

The subject of his last words, is the just ruler (3); and the consequences resulting from his rule, first to his loyal subjects (4), and next to the wicked and rebellious (6, 7). David's rule had only partially reached this ideal; but his words evidently reach beyond both himself and Solomon. The margin of R.V. reads ver. 3 as a prophecy of a coming ruler. Its fulfilment is only found in Christ. He is not only the Priest, but the King of his people. They must not only trust his atonement, but must be subject to his authority. They may bring their burden of sin, but must also bear his yoke (Matt. xi. 28—30).

The effect of his rule upon those who submit to it is as the sunlight of a cloudless morning, following the darkness of night; and as the tender grass at springtime following the long season of drought and barrenness. Similar metaphors are used in Isa. xxxii. 15, xxxv. 1—2.

There are two ways of understanding ver. 4. Both the Old and Revised Versions suggest that David was painfully conscious that his own reign had not realised his ideal—"his house was not so with God"; yet the covenant which God had made with him assured him that his desire and salvation should be realised though up to that time He did not appear to "make it grow." But the margin of the Revised Version makes the first clause a question, so that verse would mean: "Is not my house in such a relation to God, through the everlasting covenant He has made with me, that the Righteous Ruler shall arise out of it? The salvation connected with Him (4) is all my desire; shall He not cause it to spring forth?" Either interpretation suggests a useful lesson. The first reminds us that circumstances that appear to be against the promises of God will not prevent their fulfilment. The second, that the well-ordered and everlasting covenant should inspire greatest confidence.

The effect of the righteous rule upon the wicked is of an opposite character (6, 7). They are thrust away as thorns—useless in themselves, and injurious to others, and fit only for destruction (Luke xix. 27). The stoutest hearted rebels will be but as thorns before Him.

This Righteous Ruler has a kingdom now. Entrance to the kingdom requires the new birth (John iii. 5—7); the blessings of the kingdom are manifold and great (Rom. xiv. 17). Are we in the kingdom? Even young children may enter it (Matt. xviii. 3).

Personalia.

Mr. A. H. Baynes, secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, has safely arrived in India.

The Earl of Meath recently occupied the pulpit of Dr. Cuyler's church in Brooklyn, New York.

Rev. Thomas Spurgeon.—In The Sword and Trowel, Mr. Spurgeon contradicts the report that his son Thomas is on the way to England. He will take a period of rest, and look to God to open up a path of future service.

Major Whittle is to commence a united mission at Woolwich on Nov. 17. It is probable that he will remain in London for evangelistic work throughout the winter. Communications to him may be directed to our care.

Mr. William Noble, we are glad to say, has made considerable progress towards recovery, and it is expected by his medical advisers that he will be able to resume his labours in the cause of temperance during the early spring of next year.

Mr. C. H. Spurgeon will preach at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday next, and also on the following Sunday; he purposes leaving for the South of France on the 18th inst. On December 1 Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson is to occupy the pulpit at the Tabernacle.

Mr. Jesse Herbert, barrister, has been appointed legal adviser to the Viceroy of Canton, and Professor of Law at the Canton University. Mr. Herbert is a man who has fought his way up from the ranks. He is a member of the Society of Friends. Since Mr. Alfred S. Dyer went to India last year Mr. Herbert has been editor of The Sentinel, and his departure will be a serious loss to the movement in this country on behalf of social purity.

Rev. Dr. Talmage, with his wife and daughter, left New York for England last week. He will make a brief stay in London, and then proceed on a tour to the Holy Land, as he believes that he can make his pulpit ministrations more efficient when he has seen with his own eyes the places connected with the Saviour's ministry. Moreover, he is preparing for publication a Life of Christ, and he will be able to write more accurately and graphically after visiting those sacred spots. He expects to be away about two months. Dr. Talmage's Tabernacle in Brooklyn, which was recently burnt down, is to be at once rebuilt, the congregation worshipping meantime in the Brooklyn Academy of Music. On Tuesday, last week, ground was broken for the new church, which is to be completed next September. The ground costs £18,000, and the building about £24,000. The Doctor has issued an appeal for funds toward the erection of the new structure.

SALVATION ARMY.—A telegram from Geneva on Nov. 4 says: "Notwithstanding the police order provisionally prohibiting Salvation Army meetings, a number of Salvationists assembled yesterday. The police were consequently called out to disperse them, but in effecting this met with considerable resistance."

GLASGOW HOME-MISSION UNION.—This organisation is carrying on its important work with considerable success. It is purely undenominational, and concentrates its efforts on the non-churchgoing section of the population. According to reports submitted to the Council at a meeting on Thursday last, nearly 350 have, during the past six months, been gathered into the churches, and led to declare their faith in Christ. This is a most encouraging result, and we cannot but hope that the desire of the Union will soon be realised, and all the churches be found heartily co-operating in its effort.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes.

SUNDAY, NOV. 10.—1 Kings VII.

SOLOMON'S "own house," which occupied "thirteen years" (1) in building, included the house of the forest of Lebanon (2—5), which appears to have been used as his armoury (x. 17); the porch of pillars, the position and purpose of which are not stated (6); the porch of the throne (7), the pillars of which were enclosed with cedar; then his own house, with its court; and the house of Pharaoh's daughter (8), of both of which scarcely any description is given. It is worth noting that the stonework was equally excellent on the inside, though covered with cedar, as on the outside (9); in the foundation, though out of sight, as in the superstructure (10, 11). God's eye observes the work that is concealed from the view of men.

The work in brass for the Temple was wrought by Hiram of Tyre (13). His mother probably belonged to Dan (2 Chron. ii. 14); and her first husband to Naphtali (14). "The head of a Tyrian, and the heart of an Israelite," were useful for that work. Note his work: First, two brazen pillars (15—22), each of which was 18 cubits = 27 feet high, and 12 cubits, or 18 feet in circumference, and the chapiters, or capitals, 5 cubits, or 7½ feet high. They were elaborately ornamented, and were placed in the Temple porch. Their names, Jachin and Boaz, were significant. Every priest entering the Temple for worship would be reminded that "He shall establish, or prepare," and "In Him is strength." These truths every acceptable worshipper must learn. Not only for conflict with the enemy, but for worship before God, we need the heart to be established, and must depend upon Divine strength.

The molten sea (23—26) was substituted for the laver used in the Tabernacle. It was called a sea, because of its immense size. A bath (26) was the largest Hebrew liquid measure; and allowing it to be only half the size that Josephus gives, 2000 would equal over 8000 gallons. This was another necessity for the worshipper. The cleansing by blood at the altar must be succeeded by the washing of water by the Word before we can enter upon spiritual worship. God, who provided these things in type for the Temple worshipper, has given the reality to us (John xiii. 10).

The ten lavers (38), and the ten bases on which they rested (27—37), were usually placed five on either side of the house (39). But, being on wheels, they could be moved as required for washing what was to be offered for burnt offerings (2 Chron. iv. 6). The anti-type of the burnt offering—our Lord Himself—submitted the whole of his life to the action of the word.

As we pass on toward the inner part of the sanctuary brass gives place to gold. The nearer to God's throne in the Most Holy Place the more costly and magnificent everything became. Even hinges, and snuffers, and spoons were of gold (50). God's service deserves our very best.

MONDAY, NOV. 11.—1 Kings VIII.

The feast at the dedication of the Temple took place in the seventh month (2), in which month also the Feast of Tabernacles was held (Lev. xxiii. 34). Probably the one feast immediately followed the other (65). The Priests bear the ark (3—6); for the Levites, by whom this duty was usually performed, were not allowed to enter the Most Holy Place (Numb. iv. 20). The contents of the ark were only the two tables of stone (9). Aaron's rod, and the pot of manna (Heb. ix. 4), were useful symbols of the wilderness life, but were not needed now that wilderness experiences were over. The glory of God which filled the house (10, 11) testified to God's acceptance of it. There was no glory until the ark was put in its place. Outward splendour was nothing if the ark was absent. Nor is the temple of the believer's body glorious except by the Divine indwelling.

The house was intended, not only for a place of sacrifice, but also for a place of prayer. It was, therefore, dedicated, not only with numerous sacrifices, but with a memorable prayer. Notice Solomon's attitude in prayer. He began standing with hands outspread (22), but he followed this by kneeling (54). It was the attitude expressive of faith, expectancy, and reverence. Familiarity with God never destroys reverence (Heb. xii. 28). His prayer begins with an ascription of glory to God (23), for his faithfulness to his promises (24); and with the confident expectation that with equal faithfulness God would fulfil all his promises (25—26). The particular circumstances in which God might be appealed to are then supposed. In a case of supposed trespass, He is asked to condemn the wicked and acquit the righteous (31, 32). The distress of the people through war (33, 34); drought (35, 36); or other forms of Divine chastisement (37 — 40) would be times of prayer. (See Ps. cvii. 6, 13, 19, 28). Note that whenever these occur they would be the result of sin; and that the one condition on which God is asked to remove them was confession and prayer. The stranger is remembered (41—43); and the need of the people, when going out to battle (44, 45); and when through their sin, they are carried into captivity (46—48). It was a beautiful and comprehensive prayer, and was followed by words of blessing to the people, which were full of encouragement based upon the fulfilment of the promises of God (56); and of earnest counsel to further obedience (58—61).

It was to all the nation a solemn feast—not less solemn because it was a feast, not less a feast because it was solemn. The joy of it continued not only through the fourteen days (63), but was carried to the tents of the people when they returned (66). Thus the chapter that begins with dedication ends with exultant praise.

TUESDAY, NOV. 12.—1 Kings IX.

The dedication of the Temple does not seem to have taken place until Solomon had finished his own house (1, 2). Probably, Hiram's work required a long time to complete it. The purpose of God's second appearance was twofold; first, to assure Solomon that his prayer was heard (3). The house which Solomon built and dedicated, God had hallowed. If you yield to Him your whole being as His temple, He will not fail to hallow it by his presence and glory. Secondly, to declare again the conditions upon which the continued prosperity of the nation depended. A magnificent temple was no substitute for the obedience of the people. There was the same danger of the people trusting to that, as there is of our relying upon exalted and rapturous experiences. But, like the magnificent Temple, these are only a blessing to us as they lead to fuller trust and obedience. But the people and the Temple (7, 8) would be forsaken if God was not honoured, and the present height of their glory would measure the depth of their shame.

Was it not significant that Hiram despised the cities Solomon desired to give him (10—13)? They must have been valuable in Solomon's esteem, but the Tyrian king could not understand their worth. There are still treasures unspeakably costly to the people of God, whose worth the world cannot understand.

In the account of Solomon's building, note the two classes of labourers he employed (20—22). There were bondmen, and Israelites of whom he could not make bondmen. All the service of God's people is that of sons, not of slaves.

Solomon's piety appeared still to keep pace with his prosperity (25). While we constantly recognise God as the source of blessing, and give Him the praise for it, He will continue his abundant supply.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 13.—1 Kings X.

In reading this narrative we need to remember Matt. xii. 42. It was not only the people of our Lord's day, whom the Queen of Sheba reproves.

(1) She heeded the report (1).—It came from a country very remote from her own; and concerned not only Solomon, but "the name of the Lord." All Solomon's glory was connected with that name. Oh! that men were as wise to heed the report of One greater than Solomon (Isa. liii. i.).

(2) She came to verify it (2).—Not a brief journey either, but "from the uttermost parts of the earth" (Matt. xii. 42). No amount of speculation at home could decide it. "Come and see," is the way to settle all our doubts (John i. 46). Do not disbelieve the report because it seems too good to be true. Put it to the test by making personal application to Himself (Ps. xxxiv. 8).

(3) Was it only curiosity that prompted her visit?—She had questions (3) to ask; probably heart questions that she needed to have answered, before she could be at rest. The Greater than Solomon teaches far more wisely, and answers every heart-longing. Your need may prompt you to come to Him.

(4) The effect of her visit (4—9).—The report was more than verified. All she had heard was not half as great as the fact itself. Exactly the same effect follows a personal application to Jesus. No words of man can set forth his unspeakable wisdom and glory. She sank lower in her own esteem (5). Solomon rose higher (7).

(5) The blessings she obtained (3, 13).—The wisdom of Solomon answered all her heart questions; and the bounty of Solomon gave all her desire, and even more than that. Not only "whatever we ask" is our Lord able and willing to bestow, but exceeding abundantly above" even that (Eph. iii. 20, 21).

The riches and glory of Solomon are described in verses 14—20. God's promise to him is still fulfilled. He has found that having wisdom, he has riches and honour, too.

THURSDAY, NOV. 13.—1 Kings XI.

The life of Solomon hitherto has been marked with such continuous prosperity that it is unspeakably sad to read the sins that marked its close. Throughout the whole of this chapter the gloom deepens, until it ends in densest darkness.

The practice of polygamy, and the multiplication of wives to which this led, began Solomon's downfall (1—3). To take such wives was a direct violation of the Divine command (Deut. vii. 3, 4). To this was added the sin of idolatry (4—8). One sin, which general practice allowed, led on to another considerably worse.

No wonder that God was angry (9); for Solomon's sin was aggravated by the twice repeated warning he had received (10, 11), and by the prosperity God had previously given. No man had been honoured so greatly. Idolatry in him was doubly guilty.

Chastisement for wrong doing is one of the privileges of God's people (Heb. xii. 5, 6), and had been specially foretold of Solomon (2 Sam. vii. 14). The instruments God raised up for his chastisement were Hadad, the Edomite (14—22); Rezon (23—25); and Jeroboam (26), who afterwards became so infamous. His commencement was not unpromising (28); and the message delivered to him by Abijah (29—39), enforced as it was by the warning example of Solomon, ought to have strengthened him to do right. Instead of this, he became one of the worst examples of wickedness.

The last thing recorded of Solomon is his attempt to kill Jeroboam (40). Thus sadly had Solomon fallen. Who can read the story without feeling constrained to cry, "Hold Thou me up, and I shall be safe" (Psa. cxix. 117)?

FRIDAY, NOV. 14.—1 Kings XII.

Rehoboam inherited his father's throne, but none of his father's wisdom. The complaint of the people (3, 4) proved that they had paid a considerable price for the glory of Solomon's reign. Such splendour meant a heavily burdened people. Rehoboam first heard the counsel of the old men (6, 7). It was wise, and recognised that the king had his responsibilities towards the people. Had he accepted it, the kingdom would have been established. But the young men gave contrary counsel (8—11), which poor Rehoboam was foolish enough to take (12—14). The Lord was behind this. Wicked men, even while carrying out their own plans, are only like puppets in the hand of God.

As predicted by Abijah (xi. 31), ten tribes revolted, and under Jeroboam formed a separate kingdom (16—20). But idolatry soon marked his reign. He sought to preserve his kingdom by making gods that could be worshipped, without the necessity of journeying to Jerusalem (26—31). He seems to have regarded them as symbols through which the people could worship their own God (28). Such a bad start augurs ill for his future reign.

SATURDAY, NOV. 15.—1 Kings XIII.

The name of this prophet is not given, but he came "by the word of the Lord" (1). His message was not his own. In this prediction, the name of Josiah was known and mentioned 300 years before his reign began; and during his reign this prophecy was fulfilled (2 Kings xxiii. 15, 16). The sign (3, 5), and the withering of Jeroboam's arm, solemnly confirmed the message. How readily Jeroboam asked for God's help then (6). Surely these incidents will serve to bring this wicked king to himself. Alas! no. His heart is wrong, and refuses to be instructed.

Even the prophet commissioned to deliver such a message proves disobedient himself. His sin lay in listening to the message of the old prophet from Bethel, when it contradicted the clear direction he had received (11—19). A message, professedly from an angel (18), was not sufficient to alter what he had heard by the word of the Lord (1).

His death was mysterious (23, 24), and was manifestly a Divine judgment; for a prophet to be disobedient, and especially while on a special errand for God, needed summary judgment. His message will be less likely to be received as true, if he disobeys the word of God. His death was, therefore, a further confirmation of his message. Jeroboam's guilt (33, 34) became still greater.

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN SOCIETY.

Patron—Admiral H.R.H. THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH, K.G.

THIS Society labours among the great seafaring population of our country, numbering upwards of 625,000 men, who man some 36,000 Merchant, Passenger, Emigrant, Light, and other Ships, and 29,000 Fishing Vessels; not one of which carries a Chaplain. It also labours among the 60,000 Seamen of the Royal Navy.

AFLOAT—Its work is carried on by holding Services or Bible Readings on board the ships when in ports or roadsteads, distributing Tracts, selling Bibles and Prayer Books, and giving Boxes or Books of sound reading to be taken to sea.

In 1888, about 6,000 Bibles were sold; 750,000 Disused Bibles, Tracts, &c., distributed, and 10,000 Boxes or Bags of Books given to ships.

ASHORE—Its work is threefold:—

I. Spiritual: In 51 Churches or Mission Rooms at various ports, at home and abroad, where seamen are ministered to on Sundays and week-days, by the Society's Chaplains and Scripture Readers.

II. Philanthropic: The men being rescued from publichouses and crimps, and induced to come to the Society's Institutes, where they are provided with good reading, newspapers, &c., with means of writing to their families, and harmless games.

III. Temperance: In 1888, about 8 000 Seamen signed the Temperance Pledge; and during the last 10 years 77,000 have signed it.

Information as to the details of the work is given in the Society's Magazine Word on the Waters.

Increased FUNDS are urgently appealed for, to enable this good work to be maintained and extended. Subscriptions and contributions should be sent to the Secretary, Commander W. DAWSON, R.N., at the Society's Offices, 11, Buckingham Street, Strand, London.

DOCK LABOURERS & FACTORY GIRLS.

In various ways the North-East London Gospel Mission seeks to minister spiritually and practically amongst the suffering poor. The well-appointed Halls at Bow Common, Cubitt Town, and Millwall are centres of blessed activity, reaching most largely Factory Girls and Dock Labourers, amongst whom the direst moral and temperal need is found. There are eight Gospel Halls and two country Homes for the ailing poor.

FATHERLESS.

315 ORPHANS of both sexes are now in the ASYLUM FOR FATHERLESS CHILDREN at Reedham, Purley, Surrey, and the Board of Managers most earnestly appeal for help to maintain and educate them. These children have been admitted to the Asylum at ages varying from 6 months to 11 years, and will all be retained and cared for until they are 15 years of age. This Charity is entirely unsectarian, and has no endowment; it is therefore dependent upon public benevolence for support.

The necessary expenditure averages £8,000 per annum, but the only reliable income—that from Annual Subscriptions—does not provide one-third of that amount, hence the necessity for this appeal.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS AND DONATIONS will be most thankfully received.

HENRY SPICER, Treasurer.
J. ROWLAND EDWARDS, Secretary.

Office, 35, Finsbury-circus, E.C.

Notices.

A CORRESPONDENT asks for the name of the writer of the lines:—

"What though to-day
Thou canst not trace at all the hidden reason
For his strange dealings through the trial season,
Trust and obey!
Though God's cloud mystery enfold thee here,
In after life and light all shall be plain and clear."

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most desirable that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Text for November 10 (Jer. xvii. 7, 8):—"Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is. For he shall be as a tree planted by the waters, and that spreadeth out her roots by the river, and shall not see when heat cometh, but her leaf shall be green; and shall not be careful in the year of drought, neither shall cease from yielding fruit."

INFECTIOUS DISEASES.—Many householders will be apt, from various causes, to overlook an Act of Parliament which came into force at the beginning of the month, requiring them, under a penalty, when a case of small-pox, diphtheria, or any of the infectious fevers is found in their household, to notify the same at once to the medical officer of the local authority. The enactment is for the benefit of the community, and if it is loyally carried out, much danger to public health will be obviated.

SOUTHERN MOROCCO.—Persecution seems to be growing in intensity. In the provinces of Ha Ha and Shedma it is hardly possible to travel and preach at present. A native convert, cruelly and unjustly scourged some months ago at Mogador, was again thrown into prison. Mr. Baldwin was endeavouring to procure his release after a month's confinement. The Jewish converts have been put out of the synagogue, which means they are shunned like lepers, and one of them was for a time in chains. A native convert writes from Fez of having been imprisoned, and put in chains with an iron collar round his neck.—The Reaper.

CAPE COLONY.—Rev. A. Welsh, of the U.P. Church of Scotland Mission, writes from Emgwali, Dohne, Cape Colony, on September 27: "I have cheering news to report in this letter. Over a hundred persons have been admitted to the candidates' class here within the last three months on professing conversion to God. The great majority of these are young men and young women. Evangelistic meetings have been held in the church and the girls' school, as well as at all the villages throughout the district. The drought still continues in this district. Many cattle and sheep are dying of starvation. May the Lord have mercy on man and beast, and send us rain soon."

Geneva Railroad Mission.—Madame L. E. RILLIET (11, Rue Galloix, Geneva) writes that, owing to affliction in the family of her co-worker, the annual sale in aid of the funds of the Mission has had to be postponed. Not only is a considerable sum owing for rent, but if the work is to be carried on satisfactorily, it will soon be needful to build a hall. The present building is unsuitable and unsafe. A "snowball collection" has been started, and it is hoped that friends in England will lend a hand.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

An influential conference on scientific temperan teaching in schools has been held in Glasgow.

Over 3200 pledges have been taken in connection wi the Central Hall Wesleyan Mission, Manchester.

The National Temperance Society, New York, pr poses to hold a World's Temperance Congress in co nection with the projected World's Fair in America 1892.

The Birmingham Temperance Institute, a handson block of buildings, has just been opened. It has be leased and furnished by Mr. Richard Cadbury as centre of temperance work in the town.

Dr. Wade has just concluded a deeply interestin mission at North Camp, Aldershot. The men of th three regiments now stationed there were greatly i terested, and many pledges were taken. Dr. Wade h made for himself a warm place in many hearts, and h quaint speeches will not easily be forgotten.

"Nice little corner beerhouse; good drinking neig bourhood; easily managed; suit young couple." reads an advertisement in a provincial paper. It wonderful how blind to everything but self-interest th drink patrons can be. The degradation of the sou's ar homes of the poor counts for nothing so long as th landlord's pocket is filled. We pity young couples wh allow themselves to commence wedded life under suc dangerous conditions as these.

HELP WANTED FOR THE ANNUAL SALE

ON BEHALF OF

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children,"

Now Sheltering, Educating, and Training over 3,000 Poor Waifs and Strays.

Will all who are preparing gifts for the ANNUAL SALE on behalf of these Homes

KINDLY SEND THEM IN AT ONCE?

Will those whose busy fingers are at work for the Sale remember that crochet shawls, really fine underclothing for ladies and children, shirts for boys and men, suits for little boys, aprons and pinafores for girls, and sets of baby clothing, are particularly valuable additions, being much asked for and readily sold? Well-made woollen shawls are frequently asked for, and, indeed, women's garments of all kinds would be especially useful. Of course, besides these, jewellery, old coins, old china, curios, musical instruments, and fancy work, trinkets, articles of vertu, books, drawings, bric-a-brac, and other examples of the thousand-and-one tasteful ornaments which are sought for by purchasers, will be very gratefully received and acknowledged. Valuable help would be afforded if donors of gifts of old china, foreign goods, articles of vertu, &c., would kindly mark on them their value, or indicate the price which is likely to be obtained.

The SALE will this year be of the SAME CHARACTER as for the LAST FEW YEARS; that is to say, instead of holding a Public Bazaar at the West End of London during the month of December, as formerly, all the goods received will be made up into

£5 and £10 Boxes. These Boxes will each contain a very excellent selection, of at least the value of £6 and £12 respectively, and will be sent to any part of the country on receipt of P.O. Order or Cheque made payable to Mr. J. T. Page.

Ladies willing to order these Boxes confer a great benefit on the "Homes"; for by this easy method all the articles received may be disposed of without any loss in the way of such expenses as are usually incurred by holding a Bazaar at the West End.

Many kind-hearted sympathisers have repeatedly expressed warm approval of this plan, and have promised to purchase Boxes, with the contents of which they propose to hold in their own houses, to which their personal friends can be invited during the winter season.

If there be many articles left over unsold, they can be disposed of in the last week of January (D.V.), in the Large Gymnasium of the Boys' Home in Stepney, E.

DR. BARNARDO earnestly invites all who love poor children to co-operate with him in this effective plan to increase the funds of the "Homes," by which, too, all the wearying, disappointing, and expensive drawbacks of a public Bazaar may be avoided.

The Boxes, carefully lined and packed ready for transmission, can be despatched on receipt of remittance to any railway station in the Kingdom. Applications (PREPAID), with full instructions as to conveyance, &c., should be sent in as soon as possible, addressed to

THE SECRETARY,
18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

To all who have already in any degree helped by Contributions of Useful or Fancy Articles, Dr. Barnardo desires to offer the expression of his very grateful acknowledgments and hearty thanks.

18 TO 26, STEPNEY CAUSEWAY, LONDON, E.

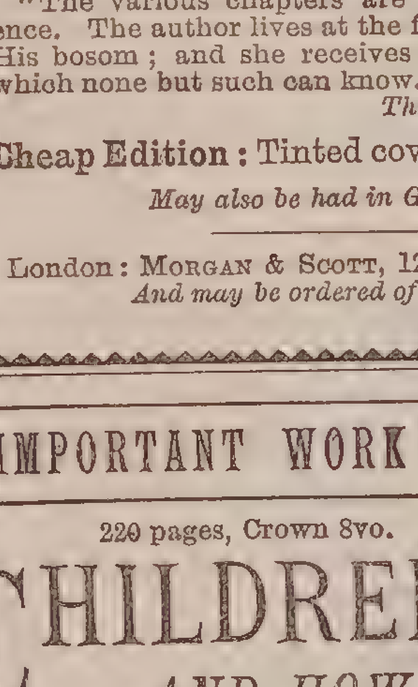
CHILDREN'S MEETINGS:



AND HOW TO CONDUCT THEM.

BY LUCY J. RIDER AND NELLIE M. CARMAN.

CONTAINS

FOURTH THOUSAND.

Sixty Outline Lessons for the Class,
Forty-three Diagrams for the Black-board,
Twenty-five attractive Children's Hymns.

"A thoroughly practical book, by teachers who have learned by experience the bes methods. Teachers will find it most helpful, especially in blackboard word-work. The Addresses are teachings—which very many Children's Addresses are not."—The Teacher at Work.

"We do not remember meeting with any better book than this for help in Children's Meetings. It is first-rate. There are objects to be drawn on the blackboard; but there are also capital lessons to go with them. Blackboards get very, very black; and the children are very bored, when it is al chalk and no sound sense. Many of these Addresses would make sermons of the first water—and what more can we say of Addresses?"

Rev. C. H. SPURGEON in
The Sword and Trowel.

"We have no hesitation in advising all who are engaged in the good work of teaching children and young people in Gospel principles, and the way of salvation, to possess themselves of a copy of this work. It will be found to be a very valuable and suggestive book, and helpful to the teacher of the Infant—as well as to the teacher of the Bible-class."—Baptist Messenger.

The Christian Portrait Gallery.

CONSISTING OF

Over One Hundred well-executed Portraits

Of Well-known and Highly-esteemed Christian Men and Women of the Present Day.

WITH ONE HUNDRED CAREFULLY WRITTEN AUTHENTIC BIOGRAPHIC SKETCHES OF THE SAME.

OVER 400 PAGES OF LETTERPRESS.

Demy Quarto, Attractively Bound, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 10s. 6d.

"Upwards of a hundred portraits of ministers; missionaries; evangelists; peers; philanthropists; and various other Christian workers—are given in this handsome volume."

Publishers' Circular, October 15, 1889.

"Many churches; several of the more prominent religious movements of the day; and lands widely separated—are here represented. Our own church occupies a fair measure of space. . . . The statement on the title-page that the portraits are "life-like illustrations" is no empty boast. Of the kind there are few which more nearly fulfil the requirements of popular taste, or indeed of artistic criticism. The letterpress also is admirable. As a worthy record of noble lives, it deserves a place on every Christian drawing-room table."

Methodist Recorder, October 17, 1889.

"The volume presents a mass of interesting information respecting many of those who are among the ranks of Christian leaders. Next to the study of God's Word, there is scarcely anything so edifying and stimulating as the careful reading of faithful biography. In the Scriptures we see the principles on which true Christian character is based; while in the biographies we see these principles translated into LIFE, and taking a concrete form. A work like the present has, therefore, a distinct aim in stimulating spiritual life by the presentation of striking examples; and we hope this useful mission may be largely fulfilled. The binding of the volume renders it an ornament to the table, while its contents make it a valuable addition to the library."—Footsteps of Truth, November, 1889.

"The Rev. F—— B——, who recently resigned his pastorate of twenty-four years at M——, . . . received from the children of the Sunday-school a richly bound copy of THE CHRISTIAN PORTRAIT GALLERY."

British Weekly, November 1, 1889.

"The features and history of workers whose names have become familiar in connection with many noble causes possess an especial interest in many distant lands as well as at home; and on this ground, as well as on its intrinsic merits, THE CHRISTIAN PORTRAIT GALLERY should command a ready sale. It contains over one hundred Portraits and Biographic Sketches of men and women of our own times, who have laboured long, and in many cases have laboured to the end, for the welfare of their fellows. These papers have already appeared in The Christian, but are worthy of reproduction in a more permanent form.

"Men of varying shades of opinion are here equally honoured; and philanthropists and missionaries of the weaker sex are given their right position side by side with their male colleagues. The volume opens with the late Earl of Shaftesbury; the remaining sketches being arranged in alphabetical order. In appearance the volume is a handsome one; and the portraits reproduced from photographs by well-known firms are mostly very successful. The Book is one that should find a place in many libraries."—Literary World, October 25, 1889.

"A volume which will be welcomed in many a household is THE CHRISTIAN PORTRAIT GALLERY, consisting of over one hundred Portraits and Biographies of eminent Preachers and Missionaries. In respect of truthful portraiture nothing could be more desirable than the Sketches here presented, many of the faces familiar to the public of to-day starting from the pages with the vividness of life. The subjects are drawn from a very extended tract of religious life: and a meed of praise is rendered equally to the popular pulpiteer; the worker in the slums; the gleaner in the Indian mission field; and the South African evangelist."

Scottish Leader, Oct. 24, 1889.

"A handsome book. A collection of about one hundred fine Portraits of leading Christian men, about two-thirds of whom are living. A biographic sketch is given of each. A good book for a Present to a friend."—The Freeman, October 25, 1889.

"We have here, in a handsome quarto volume, attractively bound, and containing over four hundred pages, the Portraits and Biographic Sketches of over one hundred well-known Christian men and women.... Publishers are now issuing their new and elegant gift-books for the season; but to Christian families no more welcome or appropriate volume can be introduced than this handsome Portrait Gallery of Noteworthy Christian Men and Women, whose devoted lives have been spent in service for the Master, and for the temporal and spiritual good of their fellows. The reading of this interesting volume cannot but refresh and stimulate to more active endeavour in religious and philanthropic work. We, therefore, most heartily commend it to the notice of our readers."

Primitive Methodist, October 31, 1889.

"This is certainly a splendid volume. It contains more than a hundred portraits of celebrities: including clergymen; missionaries; ministers of various denominations; temperance reformers; and other workers for God and the Gospel. The Portraits are beautifully executed; and in all the instances in which we can speak from personal knowledge, are life-like in their accuracy. To each Portrait a well-written Biographical Notice is appended. Paper, printing, and binding are superb. This is a volume which would ornament any drawing-room table. What an elegant Christmas or New Year present it will make!"

Christian Age, October 25, 1889.

This Volume contains OVER ONE HUNDRED PORTRAITS and Biographic Sketches of noteworthy Christian men and women; and it will be here seen how persons of various walks in life and of widely differing conditions have been called to the service of the same Master, and the realisation of the same hope. Here are Christian men from the House of Peers: others from the ranks of ship-owners, merchants, and manufacturers: and yet others from humbler walks of life. Of all these it may be truly said that, having themselves been made the recipients of Divine Grace, they became the channels of that grace to others.

NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

PULVERMACHER'S WORLD-FAMED GALVANIC BELTS, for the cure of NERVOUS DISEASES, have received Testimonials from three Physicians to Her Majesty the Queen and the leading Physicians of Nine London Hospitals, including Forty Members of the Royal College of Physicians of London.

The distressing symptoms of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION, Loss of MUSCULAR POWER, RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA, PARALYSIS, EPILEPSY, &c., are speedily removed by means of Pulvermacher's World-famed Galvanic Belts, which convey the electric current direct to the affected parts, gradually stimulating and strengthening all the nerves and muscles, and speedily arresting all symptoms of premature waste and decay.

Dr. [illegible] JAMES, F.R.C.P., F.R.S., Physician to St. Mary's Hospital, says: "I am satisfied that Mr. PULVERMACHER is a [illegible] and earnest labourer in the field of science, and I think he deserves to meet with every encouragement from the profession and scientific men."

Dr. H. A. ALLBUTT, M.R.C.P., 24, Park Square, Leeds, writes, October, 1888: "I always recommend with confidence Mr. PULVERMACHER'S BELTS. Ladies recovering from illness incidental to their sex will find these BELTS of vast assistance in restoring lost nerve power."

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE at LAUNCESTON, CORNWALL—CONSUMPTION following HÆMORRHAGE.

The case of this patient (THOMAS FARTHING) was first brought under my notice by REV. J. CLEAVE, Methodist Free Church Minister, of LAUNCESTON, on the 9th Nov. in last year.

On the 27th June I received the following testimonial from Mr. Cleave:—

"To Mr. Congreve—Dear Sir,—Thomas Farthing, residing at St. Thomas-hill, Launceston, was at the point of death. Hæmorrhage of the lungs had reduced him to a skeleton; there was a wound on the top of the right lung. His medical adviser stated that it was useless giving him any more medicine. As a last resource he applied to you. After taking two of your largest bottles he was able to leave his bedroom.

"This morning he came to my house requesting me to write, stating that he commenced work on Saturday and has not felt any bad effects; he can walk uphill without stopping; his appetite also is excellent.

"T. F. says that he owes his life, under God, to your medicine, and is anxious for others who are suffering to know.—Yours truly, J. CLEAVE, The Manse, Launceston, June 26, 1889."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

The Spezia Mission

FOR

Italy and the Levant.

THE remarkable growth of this Mission in the face of difficulties so formidable, has inspired its united Friends to give greater publicity to its efforts to permanently benefit the Italian people. The great thankfulness of many in Italy for the blessings received is felt to be an encouragement to the Friends of the Mission to unite in earnest prayer for a large measure of the Holy Spirit to be imparted to those who superintend the Mission; to its varied and numerous agents; as also to those who contribute of their substance for its support and growth; that their willingness and ability may be equal to the Mission's needs.

Real compassion and tenderness of soul for the perishing has always, and will always, open the heart and hand.

"Italy for Christ" should be the aspiration of thoughtful, earnest Christians. It is proposed, from November 24 until December 1, inclusive, to hold Thanksgiving Services for the blessings already granted the Mission, and to bring its needs before God in prayer, that He will graciously so assist in every respect as to make it a perennial and vastly increasing blessing in the land so long benighted and oppressed.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. J. N. Murdock, D.D., secretary of the American Baptist Missionary Union.

A letter has been published representing the missionary needs of India, and purporting to be the joint production of missionaries in Madras belonging to British, American, and Danish Lutheran Missions. What is set forth as requisite is essentially what Dr. Duff recommended long ago, and the general scheme is, therefore, not new as some seem to suppose. The proposed plan calls, first, for a class of native agents more highly trained and equipped than any yet provided for the Indian field; second, for European missionaries competent to deal with educated Hindus who have hitherto rejected Christianity; and, third, for a few men with leisure for Christian literary work in the native dialects of India. It would be well if the native agents received their education, not in England, but in India. The demands under the second and third heads must in the nature of the case be difficult to meet. It is well, however, to keep these needs prominently before the public, so as to lead men of ability to incur—as so many noble men have done—the self-sacrifice necessary in the cause of Christ.

Mr. Stead, of The Pall Mall Gazette, has gone to Rome to get an inside view of the Vatican, and to ascertain, if he can, whether the Romish See is likely to prove a beneficent factor in the new democratic era, which, according to our Radical mentor, is upon us. Three "Letters from the Vatican" have appeared in Mr. Stead's journal from his pen. In the first he states his purpose, which we have summarised in a sentence. In the second he records some evidence, procured at first hand from Romish ecclesiastics and others, which certainly does not foster the hope that any good thing for the world at large is likely to come from "the poor prisoner in the Vatican." The third letter adapts the Temptation of our Lord to the circumstances of the Pope, and asserts that the great temptation to him and his advisers just at present is to embroil Italy and France in deadly strife, in the mad hope of a restoration to "His Holiness" of the Temporal Power.

Mr. Stead's new venture is, of course, well meant; but it strikes us as being about the most hopeless enterprise of modern times. At any rate, all the light he has as yet got from his quest seems to be darkness indeed. The voice of history is fatal to the claims of the Papacy to be "a boon and a blessing to men"; as one small chapter in that history from Dr. Barnardo's pen, recorded elsewhere, will help to show. So far as we can read the signs of the times and the predictions of revealed truth, we are led rather to coincide with the view expressed at Cheltenham, the other day, by Rev. H. E. Brooke, that the Papacy as a system is doomed to certain, and we trust not far distant, destruction.

A writer in The Times of Tuesday seems to us to exhibit greater insight in this matter than the editor of The Pall Mall. Referring to the centenary celebration of Romanism in the United States just held at Baltimore, the writer says:—

> Perhaps the most remarkable proceeding of the celebration in the eyes of a philosophical observer is the presentation to the President of the United States of a resolution extolling the Federal Government for the protection it has always extended to religious liberty. The praise is undoubtedly well-merited, since the perfect equality of all creeds and religions is proclaimed not only by the Federal Constitution, but also by the Constitutions of all the different States. But it is a little odd to hear laudation of this secular impartiality from a Church which has always claimed for itself a unique position, and has refused to admit any sanction for the secular power save such as can be derived from implicit submission to its own authority. Intolerance in its grosser forms is, of course, impossible for a decided minority, and men can always repudiate with wonderful energy any weakness which they are not tempted to indulge. But the essential inequality of creeds, and the nothingness of all creeds but its own, are tenets so inwoven with the whole system of the Roman Catholic Church that praise of State indifference coming from that Church seems slightly incongruous, notwithstanding the obvious advantages it derives...Nothing can be securely inferred from present praise of toleration, or from any other departure from ancient habits temporarily forced upon the Church of Rome by circumstances.

One of the many interesting missions in West London is that conducted by Mr. W. Martin, who has laboured for fifteen years among the working classes of Westminster, Richmond, and Kilburn. The hall in Carlton-road, Kilburn, which was built a little over a year ago, is the home and centre of many valuable agencies. No sooner, however, has it become free of debt than the fact has come to light that the ground on which it has been erected was wrongly staked out, so that half the building stands on land belonging to a second party. Mr. Martin finds himself compelled either to pay £200 for the freehold of the land, or to pull down the half and pay compensation. He and his friends, all belonging to the working classes, deserve our sincere sympathy, and we are sure that they will not appeal in vain for substantial help so as to save their hall.

If these are days when increased zeal for God is greatly needed, they are also days when Christian testimony should not be shorn of its force, or to any extent neutralised, by the coquetting of believers with the world and the things which are of the world, and therefore passing away. We rejoice to find that this fact is being realised on many hands, but yet all the snares have not been removed from the path of God's pilgrims. "Be ye separate" is an injunction to which we all require to give unceasing and most earnest heed. One of the snares to which we refer is the practice of having "shows" in connection with bazaars in aid of church and other undertakings. These may be perfectly harmless in themselves, but they are, nevertheless, the thin end of the wedge for the world to get the upper hand of some who would not like to deny their Lord. It has been well said that if Christ is to be Lord at all, he must be Lord of all. Those in congregational authority who would be loyal to Him need to see that "shows," as well as many other stumbling-blocks, are not put in the way of their fellows.

In view of the increasing number of Jews in Spitalfields and the adjoining districts, it is matter for regret that the Vicar of St. Botolph, Aldgate, chaplain to the Jewish Lord Mayor, should have again refused to allow his church to be used as a centre of evangelistic work among the Jews. This is not the true attitude of the Church towards Israel. The marvellous manner in which God has preserved his chosen people "through banishments, burnings, and bannings," and the glorious future which Holy Scripture reveals as being destined for them—a future fraught with blessings also to the Gentile race—should alone suffice to arouse Christians to forward by their money, talents, or prayers, the efforts which are being made to open the eyes of the Jews, that they may be "grafted in again." But how much more so when, as was emphasised at the recent "Conference concerning Israel," the express New Testament order of evangelisation is "to the Jew first."

The Hospital, in pointing out that the Poor Law Guardians certainly have to deal with a vast amount of destitution produced by idleness, drunkenness, and vice, urges that they fail to reach a large proportion of the unfortunate poor who are reduced to want through causes which do not arise from any personal fault, and goes on to say that the dread of vicious companionship is at present the real workhouse test. We are quite satisfied that this is the case, and we are prepared to go with the writer in his assertion that—

> The Poor Law system at present fails in the workhouses, because people of all classes and grades are mixed together without any regard to moral, social, physical, or other classification, though this is to be found in every other institution throughout the country.

Perhaps if a reasonable classification were carried out—say, the separation of the moral and deserving from the immoral and degraded—we should hear of fewer cases of those who prefer to die of starvation rather than accept relief from the State.

The death of the venerable Bishop Sargent, who has for more than fifty years laboured for the Church Missionary Society in Tinnevelly, may serve to remind our readers of the complete and practical refutation which the wonderful progress of the Gospel in that district affords to such disparaging statements as those of Canon Taylor and others. It appears that, whereas in 1835 the number of Christians under his charge was only eight thousand, it is now more than fifty-five thousand; the children in the schools now number upwards of twenty thousand, as compared with only two thousand at the former date. Fifty years ago only two hundred and twenty villages in Tinnevelly were occupied by missionaries; now there are more than a thousand. There are sixty-seven ordained native clergymen, and in one year the native Christians have raised £4700 for mission purposes. It is recorded, also, in Mrs. Murray Mitchell's most interesting book, "In Southern India," that out of a population of two millions in this district, one hundred thousand are Protestant Christians, the number having been quadrupled in twenty years. The whole Christian community is described as growing in influence and importance, and in Bishop Sargent's own words, "the very look of the people is changed." These are facts which cannot be gainsaid: let those who glibly talk about missions being a failure explain them away if they can.

It is stated that a revised "Directory of Public Worship," for the use of Presbyterians, is in the press, in which it is laid down that, while "sprinkling or pouring on the head" is the mode of baptism generally observed, that of "dipping the whole body," in cases in which that mode is preferred, may be adopted. The provision applies to both children and adults, and it is stated that it is in accordance with the traditions of Presbyterianism. If this be the case, it seems to point to a possible union between two large sections of the Christian Church.

Race prejudice bodes serious trouble, and offers just now a grave hindrance to the progress of the human family. On the Continent anti-Semitism is growing, and we are informed that in Vienna lists of scholarly Jewish professors are published with a view to arousing the antipathy of students, and to the exclusion of learned Jews both from chairs of learning and the country. In our own Cape Colony the colour question seems far from a solution; and, says The Spectator, in America there is a deepening abhorrence on the part of the whites to social intercourse with men of colour, and a social antagonism, which a writer in that journal, of last Saturday, traces to political retrogression. A correspondent of The Manchester Examiner has been giving many and most distressing examples of a bitterness in this race prejudice which in cities even in the North, and by the jealousy of white workmen, shuts out the negro from almost every kind of employment; and even in some Christian institutions, unhappily, the feeling obtains. A book, mentioned in a New York journal, entitled, "An Appeal to Pharaoh" advocates that the whole coloured population of the Southern States should be transferred to Africa. The book is, it is said, awaking considerable interest.

There are, however, some few signs of a better feeling. The Christian Union argues strongly against this colonisation scheme. The National Congregational Council, which lately met at Worcester, Mass., discussed the matter with admirable temper, and coloured ministers who spoke received frequent and prolonged applause. In a General Conference of Secretaries of the Y.M.C.A., held at Grand Rapids, Mich., when a Secretary of colour rose to speak, the whole body sprang to their feet and cheered him to the echo. And better still, at Harvard College, Mass.—a college of the first order in the States—the white students have chosen to the position of orator the son of a negro who was a Virginian slave, set free by Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation. The distinction is the highest a student can receive from his fellows.

The attention of readers of the daily Press is drawn to the present action of tramway men. Mrs. G. S. Reaney's paper in the month's Contemporary Review on "Slave-Driving by Public Companies" appeals to shareholders. This is a proper way to look at these labour complaints in road and railway travelling. We are told there is a low moral sense among tram and omnibus men. If, however, their lives are such as leave them time for nothing more than working and sleeping; if they are deprived of the improving influence of home life, healthful associations, and religious observance, there is a manifest cause for what is complained of. Shareholders who share the profits and appoint the directors in these public companies very inadequately realise their responsibility in the matters now disputed. Their more prominent action would be very healthful.

In St. Jean du Gard, in the heart of Cévennes, Protestantism once was spiritual and progressive. But rationalism brought its chilly frost. Piety declined, and now material things bear witness to the loss. Filthy streets and unwholesome dwellings are visible signs of the decay. But there an unimposing assembly of French Protestants has recently met. Young and earnest pastors formed the chief speakers. There was much prayer, and the writer of the account dwells on the actuality of the prayers, mentioning names and places, as well as their brevity, as especially striking him. The venerable M. Léon Pilatte, editor of L'Eglise Libre, gave encouragement to these younger pastors. It is much to be wished that this Synod of the Free Churches of France, with its purpose to revive spirituality and evangelisation, may give the very Gospel the French churches most need, and witness the extension of that old spirit of Christian zeal which in France was once unsurpassed.

The words of Lord Salisbury at the Guildhall on Saturday, relating to the forthcoming Brussels Conference for the abolition of African slavery, will meet with general commendation. An international conference for dealing with the traffic in human beings has never met before, and, as Lord Salisbury pointed out, it is purely the outcome of humanity and good-will. With such an object it ought to be a success.

It is difficult to say anything new upon the gambling and betting mania which runs through every phase of life, from drawing-room to cellar, which taints and degrades every class, numbering among its votaries the statesman and the stableman alike. But the following extract from a recent leader in The Manchester City News—which, unlike some of its contemporaries, is consistent in excluding betting and sporting matter from its columns—partly indicates the direction in which improvement is to be sought:—

> Newspapers might set themselves against inserting advertisements and articles from tipsters and prophets. If such advertisements and predictions were kept out of the columns of the ordinary newspaper the influence would be salutary. The upper classes might do much by their example. At present, from the Prince of Wales downwards, a bad example is set the people in gambling and betting. Is it wrong for a prisoner to imagine there is a touch of irony in the denouncement of gambling, which has led to crime, from the lips of a magistrate or judge who himself notoriously gambles and bets?...It is a moral force which wants putting in motion.

True: in treating with this, as in dealing with so many other social disorders, recourse must be had first to Christian principles: purification must begin with the individual; and it is only the grace of God which can renew the individual heart, and rouse the individual conscience: mere external applications will not heal the sore.

The striking narrative, "Isabella Macpherson: A Devoted Life," which is appearing in our columns, has just been issued complete in a volume, price 2s. 6d.; bevelled boards, 3s. 6d. Particulars will be found in the advertising columns of the present number.

In the tapestry of life the "religious" and the "secular" threads are constantly crossing one another all through the pattern. But the tendency of the present day is to create a separation between religion and life, resulting in injury to both. Commenting upon this error in a recent lecture at Manchester, Mr. George Harwood, a well-known writer and speaker in Lancashire on religious and social questions, said:—

> If religion is not to guide us in regard to the greatest problems we have—the housing of the poor, the condition of the masses, the development of empires, the great political movements of mankind—then religion is "played out," and should be done away with. It is false reasoning to say that religion has to do with the next life, and that other questions have to do with this life.

These are true words: religion, founded upon the Word of God, not upon the modern "commandments of men," and not a mere profession, should be the staple thread of life, whether national or individual.

Dealing also with the subject of Socialism, the same speaker said that "the first socialistic teaching came from the lips of Jesus, and the first socialistic example from the first Christian Church." But it should be remembered that the socialism thus indicated is very different from that which is generally understood by the term to-day: in the mouth of the agitator and mob-orator it means that poverty, per se, gives a man a right to the property of others, to the produce of his neighbour's industry and thrift, and that there should be a general levelling up and redistribution. That there are grave abuses of property cannot be denied; but the remedies for them must be sought, not in wholesale confiscation, but on the lines of the Sermon on the Mount.

CITY YOUNG MEN.—The committee of the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. have made arrangements for a special mission to the young men of the City of London to be held from Sunday, 17th inst., to Saturday, 30th inst. The addresses will be given by Rev. James Smith, of Dufftown, N.B. Earnest prayer is asked for much blessing upon this effort.

VEGETARIANISM.—Mr. Joseph Knight, secretary of the Vegetarian Society, 75, Princess-street, Manchester, writes:—"If any of your readers desire to know more about vegetarian food, which is at once cheaper, healthier, and pleasanter than the ordinary mixed diet, I shall be pleased to forward a few papers on the subject on receipt of request."

LADY MARY GLYN paid a visit last week to the Fine-Art Rooms for Church Needlework, 72, Gower-street, Bedford-square, to view the new patent bed, the "Turnover," invented by a nurse. It is proposed (when there is enough money subscribed to pay for the bed) to give it to a hospital, or for nursing the sick poor in the East-end of London. Address: Lady Mary Glyn, Vicarage, Kensington, W.

"Dr. Clifford's New Departure."

A fortnight since, in an article on this subject, we expressed our conviction that Dr. Clifford owes it to himself and to the Union "of which he is so prominent and useful a member," to give a clear and unmistakable denial to the statements made by Rev. John Urquhart and endorsed by Dr. Weymouth, if they are not correct. We also "gravely doubted the wisdom no less than the honesty of the policy, which the Baptist Union seems to have adopted, of silence with regard to those concerning whom charges of false teaching are made, and of censure for those who have the courage and fidelity to make them."

"A London Baptist Minister" has, in our last issue, taken a directly opposite view; and his reasons for this are so extraordinary, that having inserted his letter we are constrained to answer it by asking a few questions on some of his words, which we quote:—

If ministerial members of the Baptist Union are not "qualified to judge this reported heresy" because they are "babes in Christ, and carnal; disqualified by deficient spirituality for the sacred and Christlike work of correcting erring brethren"—are they not also disqualified for the ministry, with its solemn responsibilities as pastors of the church and evangelists to the unconverted? Does not our correspondent assert too much?

If, as it seems, Dr. Clifford is regarded by the "London Baptist Minister" as among "erring brethren," is it right to "earnestly hope that he will let this controversy die, by refusing to answer his critics"?

If the L.B.M. includes himself as disqualified to judge in this matter, does he not in fact express a judgment and transgress his own canon, by describing it as "a heresy-hunt"?

If the above disqualification to "correct erring brethren" is "the condition of every Christian body existing in England to-day," is it to be understood that they would each and all fail "to obey the New Testament" if they attempted to judge false doctrine or to correct "erring brethren"? And if so, what becomes of the reproof and exhortation to Pergamos, which had there them that had held the doctrines of Balaam, and of the Nicolaitanes; and to Thyatira, which suffered Jezebel, which called herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce the servants of Christ (Rev. ii. 14—16, 20—25)?

If, "till we have attained to the Pauline standard of spirituality, we must leave heresy-hunting alone," who is to decide when that standard is attained? Are we meanwhile to permit "erring brethren" to promulgate error unchecked? And is it quite consistent with "a quiet but wonderful movement towards God and his truth now going on" to stigmatise as "a heresy-hunt" the regretful protests of faithful servants of Christ against the unsound teachings of "erring brethren"?

If "all, down-graders and anti-down-graders alike, agree to adjourn the debate till we can conduct it as true brethren in the Great Father's immediate presence," when will that opportunity arrive?

If "a quiet and wonderful movement towards God and his truth is now going on" among Baptist ministers generally, including Dr. Clifford, who "has identified himself with this new movement towards a deeper life," is there any reason why they should agree to adjourn the debate? Why can they not at once "conduct it as true brethren in the Great Father's immediate presence"?

If "erring brethren" teach error, how can we "defend truth by calm, earnest arguments," "without raising any personal questions"?

If "to those who would still contend" the L. B. M. "feels inclined to say, 'Do be quiet, brother! We are praying—seeking the Lord. By all means kneel down and unite with us; but, pray, don't disturb us,'"—may not those who "still contend" and "earnestly contend, for the faith once for all delivered to the saints," remind him of the occasion when "the Lord said unto Joshua: 'Get thee up; wherefore liest thou thus upon thy face? Israel hath sinned.... There is an accursed thing in the midst of thee, O Israel; thou canst not stand before thine enemies, until ye take away the accursed thing from among you"?

May not the disqualification which the L.B.M. so pathetically laments, and which weakens all God's Israel—as when "the men of Ai...chased them...and smote them in the going down [the down-grade?]; wherefore the hearts of the people melted and became as water"—be traceable, at least in some degree, to the controversy which God has with us, because "Israel hath sinned, and they have also transgressed my covenant which I commanded them: for they have even taken of the accursed thing, and have also stolen, and dissembled also, and they have put it even among their own stuff"?

May not the Rationalising error which we have put even among our own stuff be fairly likened to the Babylonish garment whereby Achan troubled Israel? The characteristic of Babylon is that its builders have brick for stone, and slime for mortar. But the City of God is not built up of such materials.

> Its ageless walls are bonded
> Of amethyst unpriced;
> The saints build up its fabric,
> And the Corner-stone is Christ—saints, born again by the incorruptible Word of God, which holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

The answer lately given to the question, "What is a Christian?" is very like saying, "Bricks are stones, and slime is mortar." While the living stones of the Temple of God are cemented together by the truth of his inspired Word, the bricks of Babel are slimed together by half truths and untruths, and by Scriptural terms used in an unscriptural sense.

If "not a few of those who are now the most eager for a higher life have been, and still are, opposed to Mr. Spurgeon in the controversy he has raised," does not the L.B.M. go very far to justify Mr. Spurgeon's contention, if not his methods, by asking, "Are we, as a body, spiritually minded? or are we, like the Corinthian Christians of old (1 Cor. iii. 1—4), only 'babes in Christ,' and 'carnal'?" Mr. Spurgeon did not make so indiscriminate a statement; he said there was widespread error, and he indicated its character and its effects. If he was right in his facts, how is it that "those who are now most eager for a higher life are still opposed to him"? Would it not be wiser for them at least to adopt that prudent counsel:—

> If a foe have kenn'd,
> Or worse than foe, an alienated friend,
> Some rib of dry rot in thy ship's stout side,
> Think it God's message, and with humble pride,
> With heart of oak replace it: thine the gains;
> Give him the rotten timber for his pains"?

But Mr. Spurgeon is not a foe, nor by his own choice an alienated friend, and nothing would be more grateful to him, and all truly evangelical men, than the replacement of the rotten timber by heart of oak.

CHRISTMAS LETTER MISSION.

It is seventeen years since the Christmas Letter Mission commenced operations in the district of St. Mark's, Brighton, and its career is still marked by encouraging progress. During last year, 557,000 letters and text-cards were circulated in the English language, exclusive of about 40,000 distributed in America, while in Wales and foreign countries something like another 40,000 were put into circulation. Gospel ministers, district visitors, and Sunday-school teachers will find, in the productions of the Mission, books and cards well suited for general distribution.

The annual report gives extracts from letters received from many quarters, speaking in terms of high appreciation of the Mission's objects and methods. A London secretary illustrates the finding of fruit after many days, by giving the following sentences from the statements of a hospital nurse:—"The first time I had Christmas letters was years ago in the north of Durham, during a visitation of small-pox among the miners. There were only two or three of us nurses to do all the work, and the disease spread awfully. Everyone was afraid of us. We had to coffin our own dead—but the Christmas letters found us out. I shall never be able to tell what they were to us at that time. The miners would have us go to their huts and read them over and over again, for they were so plain—just what they wanted to show them the way of life. And now, here, when Christmas morning comes, we find, each of us, her nurse's letter on her plate, and they are a blessing to our souls." A pleasant few words concerning his love who gave Himself to bring life to the world brought from the nurse the joyous response: "Ah, ma'am, with the thought of that love, nothing's hard!"

Employers of labour in some parts have distributed the letters among their workpeople. At cottage homes they have been gladly received, while among railway and post-office employés a specially good work has been done. A new departure is the preparation of a Christmas letter for the blind, in Moon's and Braille's raised types. The chaplain of an Irish hospital writes: "The letters and cards are most highly prized by our patients, nurses, and servants; and Roman Catholics read them as well as Protestants. I have known the best results of comfort and decision for Christ from just reading and speaking." We are pleased to say that the tone of the letters is excellent, and that they are got out in a very attractive style by the printers and publishers, Messrs. Hazell, Watson & Viney, 1, Creed-lane, Ludgate-hill, E.C.

The Mission stands in great need of fresh friends, to superintend distribution in the villages. Christmas is nearing us rapidly, and it is hoped that many thousands of these statements of the message of salvation will, in due course, be delivered to all classes, even to some whose "Christmas Letter" is emphatically the one letter of the year. The hon. organising secretary of the Mission is Miss E. Steele Elliott, 66, Mildmay-park, London, N.

The First Epistle of Peter.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

IX.—CHRISTIAN LOVE.

1 PETER i. 22, &c.

WE love the Lord whom we have not seen (8). We must also love our brethren whom we have seen. The latter indeed is the test of the former. "He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God, whom he hath not seen." "See that ye love one another."

But such love is not an easy thing. We are inclined to read such an exhortation as this, and go our way, saying, "Oh, yes, this is all we need do. We must love everyone, and especially those who belong to the same Christian church as ourselves—our brethren." And what is the love to which we set ourselves? Is it not too often an easy sentimentality? To give things away—to indulge every wish and whim—to make things easy and pleasant all round—to wear a gracious smile—this is too often the life which we propose to ourselves, as the carrying out of the precepts of universal love. And for some temperaments this is the easiest life possible. They are naturally affable, pleasant, genial, and generous. But does this fulfil the repeated injunction of the New Testament, that we should love one another as Christ has loved us? For, after all, there is often a species of refined selfishness in our apparent courtesy, which desires to stand well with all, or shrinks from taking too much trouble.

What is that love of which our Lord and his Apostles speak? Not only, or primarily, kind feelings, or generous impulses. Not certainly the sentimentality which breathes itself out in sighs and raptures. Not merely the fond attachment which clings as the rose against the trellis. But, above all things, service—ministry—self-denial and self-giving. To put another's well-being before our own, not because it is pleasant to do it, but because it is right. To make another the pivot around which the wheel of activity revolves. To sow oneself as a corn of wheat a hundred times a day in unobtrusive, trifling acts of self-denial. To check the hasty word, the unkind speech, the damaging criticism. To vacate a comfortable seat in a railway carriage for the sake of the love of God. To lead a little child home, when lost in the street, or in an agony of terror from a thunder-storm, to win the "inasmuch." To show to the inmates of one's home, in the most trifling incidents, the same behaviour as is prompted in men of the world by mere politeness, and to do it for the sake of Jesus. All these things are traits of a love which has no native origin in human hearts, but emanates from the being of God, descending into the hearts of his own, and passing back through them to Him again. And this is what God asks of us. Let us examine the marks of such love, its efficient cause, its Divine origin. And may the Holy Spirit, whose firstfruit is love, shed it abroad abundantly within our hearts.

I. THE MARKS OF SUCH LOVE.—(1) Unfeigned.—Dissimulation is a disease very antagonistic to Christian love. More than once we are warned against it in the Apostolic writings (Rom. xii. 9). We are all tempted to profess more than we feel; to kiss those whom we are betraying; to cover with soft words crevasses which are yawning deeper every day. How much more effusive we are to our friends than our thoughts of them sometimes warrant! How often we are one thing to their face and another to their back! How subtly we are tempted to maintain appearances, because of some ulterior gain, like those who stand on the grassy sward, from which the underpinning cliffs have long since fallen away.

Our politeness is often but skin deep. Our smiles assumed for a purpose. Our words smoother than butter, whilst our hearts are drawn swords. Our acceptance of apologies as superficial as Joseph's brethren thought that his would prove to be after old Jacob's death. Our love is not altogether "unfeigned."

(2) Pure.—"Hearts may be cemented by impurity, by ungodly conversation and society in sin, as in uncleanness or drunkenness. The mutual love of Christians must be pure, from such causes as are pure and spiritual, arising out of the Saviour's command or example." The eye of the heart must be single; its habit stainless; its motives "white as the light." There must be no thought or suspicion of the passions of the flesh, which lie so near to the springs of intense spirituality in men and women. The love of the world so often ends in lust; lofty ideals shattered; cloudless mornings overcast. And our temptation lies in the same direction. It is a mistake to think, because we meet in religious assemblies, and talk of hymns, and sermons, and sacred themes, that, therefore, there is no danger of the taint of impurity destroying the delicate sensitive bloom of our spirits. Too often our love is not pure.

(3) Fervently.—"On the stretch." Not with the loose string of the unstrung bow, but with the tension of the strings of the violin drawn out to their full. This is a model which almost seems to mock us. It is so much easier to be on the stretch for ourselves than to seek the good of others with the same eager energy. Our love seldom gets beyond "temperate," and never to boiling point. We have not learnt the secret of the heart bubbling over. We are not fervent in our love. We do not weep over our brethren's faults, or rejoice in their success as much as in our own, or love them with a passion which should act as an alembic for the evil that is in them.

It was the Master's last prayer that we should love like this. He meant that we should put off anger, wrath, malice, and evil speaking; and that we should put on bowels of mercies, kindness, longsuffering, and forbearance. So would the world believe.

II. THE EFFICIENT CAUSE OF SUCH LOVE.—"It will come through obeying the truth." This is very marvellous. We should have thought that our love to each other would have been promoted best by meeting for social enjoyment, by knowing each other better, by constant association in Christian work. But this is not God's way. The true lens by which hearts are made to glow is the Truth.

We must know the truth.—Put two burnished mirrors opposite each other, and there will be no glow of light on either; but if a candle stand between, the beams of light are flung to and fro, to an extent impossible to either or both alone. So the mere contact of Christian with Christian will not necessarily produce the burning heart, unless there be also between them the Truth of God.

Study the lives of the saintliest men, and you will find it to have been their invariable experience that their love to God and men grew in the precise proportion in which they explored the treasures of Divine truth. It was when their intellects were most engaged in discovering the depths of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God, that their hearts seemed almost rapt away in irrepressible and inexpressible ecstasy. "Did not our heart burn within us while He opened to us the Scriptures?"

We must also obey the truth.—Do, and you shall know. Obey, and you will love. Some try to promote love by the use of endearing epithets, or by the endless repetition of experience, or by reading rapturous expressions, like those which were so natural to a Rutherford or a Bernard. But such endeavours will soon wear themselves out.

A thousand times better shall we find it to set ourselves to obey the truth. Let no command lie unfulfilled in some dusty corner of the soul. Let no margin intervene between your feet and the limit of your light. Let the life follow the Divine Word as closely as the great Lawgiver followed the cloud sailing majestically through the heavens. Translate all precepts into the vernacular of daily duty; and you will verify, in a yet deeper sense than ever, the Master's words: "He that hath my commands and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me."

As we obey the truth, we shall be purified by it.—Young men cleanse their way by taking heed to them according to the Divine Word. The Bridegroom purifies his bride by the washing of water through the Word. Oh, all ye who groan under the sense of a defiled heart, here is one secret of cleanliness, obey the truth.

Many will read these lines who are athirst for purity and love. Innocence can never be theirs—the innocence that consists in ignorance of evil and unconsciousness of temptation. But they desire that purity which passes through evil untainted, as sunbeams through a fœtid atmosphere, and for that love which floods cannot drown, like the old Greek fire which burnt under water.

The atheist does not think that these things are possible. He has no hope in God, and no belief in man. He looks darkly on all profession, and sadly suspects every motive. Oh, do not let your high hopes be dashed or your ambitions lowered by his suggestions. Undaunted, still seek for the holy grail of a pure and burning heart. It shall certainly reward your search at last.

Nor is there any need to seek this blessed gift in the wilderness, like St. Anthony; on the pillar, like Simon Stylites; in the recesses of the forest, like Gaudama. "The word is nigh thee, in thy mouth and in thy heart." Purify your heart in obeying the truth unto unfeigned love of the brethren.

Nor will it be difficult to understand how it is that so simple a method will achieve so great a result, when we have given the next consideration its true weight.

III. THE DIVINE ORIGIN OF THE LIFE WITHIN.—It is "not of man, or of the will of the flesh, but of God." We have been twice born. Born once by nature into the stock of the first Adam; and born a second time by grace into the stock of the second Adam, the Lord from heaven. "Of his own will God begat us by the word of truth, that we should be a kind of firstfruits of his creatures." "Being born again."

And the life that has been implanted within us is like the inheritance which awaits us (4) and the blood which purchased us (18), incorruptible. It cannot, therefore, be limited by the narrow landmarks of time, or sense, or this fleeting world. It overleaps and defies them all. It partakes of the nature of the Infinite and Eternal. Thus it follows that the piety it affects is of celestial temper, and the love it manifests is the true unfeigned love of Deity. The best guarantee of the permanence and reality of Christian Purity and Love is to look at the life from wnich they emanate, and which is implanted by the second birth—a life which in turn is best considered in the seed from which it has come, and by which it has been communicated into the believer's heart.

That seed is here contrasted with the outward life of men. All flesh is as grass; men and women pass away as the successive crops on the meadows. And the glory of man as the flower of grass. The king-cups and daisies share the fate of the lowly blades around them, emblems of the impotence of wealth, or strength, or beauty to resist the ravages of the sickle of Time. But in contrast to this stands out the eternal Truth of God, which is enshrined in the holy words of God. It is living and life-giving. It remaineth and abideth for ever.

The fact that the Bible is amongst us to-day in spite of all that has been done to destroy it, by fire, and search, and sword, attests the fact that there are properties in it which divide it by an impassable chasm from all books beside. This fact that it lives and abides, notwithstanding all that has been done against it, proves that it possesses something of the life of the eternal and infinite God. It is clearly true of all Scripture words, that they are spirit and life, and can never pass away, and that not one jot or tittle shall fail. Manifestly, therefore, God is in this Book, as of old in the acacia bush of the desert; or as natural life burns like a tiny spark within each seed falling adown the bank. The persistence of the Book proves God to be in it. And therefore it is God's life which enters dead human souls through the Word, and makes them live. The life which is thus begotten in them is infinite and eternal as Himself. And, being so, it lifts its possessors above the time sphere into the very realm of heaven, and enables them to love, not with the poor faltering love of man, but with the royal, pure, unfeigned, blessed love, which is the very soul of the life of God Himself.

MR. FRANCIS MURPHY.—An Indiana paper, referring to a Gospel temperance mission by Mr. Murphy in the town of Peru, in that State, says that 3000 persons signed the pledge. The interest manifested in the meetings throughout has been something phenomenal. Many men have signed and actively participated who were almost beyond the pale of redemption. A fact worthy of publicity is the act of a prominent saloon-keeper, who deposited money for the purchase of a new suit of clothes for one of the signers, conditional on his remaining firm in his pledge until January 1. A temperance league has been formed, and commences its existence under hopeful auspices.

AN ESSEX VILLAGE. — Mr. W. Howard-Flanders, of Lyle Hall, Latchingdon, Essex, writes:—For nearly twelve months a much-needed evangelical and temperance work has been carried on with considerable success in a mission-hall built at my own expense. Unfortunately, it has been destroyed by fire, and was uninsured. The cost of the building was £100, with an additional £30 for fittings. I do not feel that I can again incur so much expense. The parish consists of 500 inhabitants, but they are very poor. Unless, therefore, help is forthcoming, the work must be crippled, as there is no available room in the village. I have fitted up a barn to meet immediate needs, but there will be no means of warming this during the winter months, and it is at some distance from the village. The room was used for various educational purposes—such as a reading-room, for Band of Hope meetings, lectures, and services.

Some Scottish Missions.—V.

THE GRASSMARKET MISSION.

All those who labour for God in Edinburgh recognise the importance of evangelising the immediate neighbourhood of the Grassmarket. This fine open space lends itself admirably to open-air preaching, but it is surrounded by hundreds of dingy tenements, into which the preacher's voice seldom if ever penetrates.

Recognising this, Mr. Jas. Fairbairn (brother of Principal Fairbairn) has for many years carried on systematic Gospel work in this vicinity. With little difficulty, one Sabbath morning, I discovered the spacious schoolroom which is used as the headquarters of the Mission but found that Mr. Fairbairn had not yet appeared upon the scene. The fact was that he was engaged in a visitation of the low lodging-houses and other dens which abound thereabout; so I employed the interval in gleaning from the janitor a few ideas of the work carried on during the last twenty years.

"Little Fairbairn," as the worthy promoter is familiarly and affectionately called, is well known by every man, woman, and child in the Grassmarket. He has rescued many little boy and girl offenders from the clutches of the police, and put them in the way of doing well. All the officers of the law and the magistrates know and respect him. Some even fear him—for his perpetual reforming zeal would often than they would otherwise perhaps be inclined to go.

As a man, he has a burning passion to save men, women, and children from vice, and all his spare time is devoted to this work. Saturday night is a great field-time for him. He has in his mission-room a popular concert, to counteract the attractions of the public-house. His mode of procedure is to secure as many voluntary lady and gentlemen helpers as possible to make this an artistic success, as well as a thoroughly popular entertainment; and then, charging no pennies for admission, he goes about eight o'clock in the evening round all the neighbouring public-houses, and, standing outside and shouting as only his lungs of iron can, he attracts those drinking within to come out to hear what is the matter. In a very few minutes he robs the public-houses and corners near by of many of their loafers, who are soon carried away with the delights of their national music, and charmed in this way until it is too late to return to their drinking dens.

On Sunday mornings, about nine o'clock, Mr. Fairbairn makes his rounds of the awful and sickening homes in the Grassmarket, coaxing out aged sinners, male and female, many of them half tipsy as the result of the previous night's indulgence. They come—say fifty of them—to his meeting. He gets them, in broken accents, to read their Bibles (disused for many a long year). Then he talks to them, and beseeches them for Christ's sake to return to the Lord while still there is hope. In this work he is sometimes helped by occasional visitors; but he depends more on those men whom, by the grace of God, he has to talk to and earnestly plead with their fellows.

Thus a splendid rescue work goes on. Many a family now owes all its happiness to his unflinching faith, indomitable zeal, and unfailing kindness. He has a heart for everybody, and men soon feel he means to help them, and that if they do as he tells them they will get set right. Many a girl owes to him what is better than life; and many a soul now in heaven first realised at his meetings the love of God to sinners.

A friend, with whom I was recently conversing about this work, thus describes his impressions of a visit he paid to the Mission:—"At this meeting it was my privilege to listen first to an address from Mr. Fairbairn, that can be described in no other way than tremendously earnest. No other style could ever have penetrated the sin-stupefied souls before him. After him a man rose up, and in a quiet, gentlemanly, but most fervent and affectionate way, spoke to his fellows, urging them to come to Christ. Six months before that same man was lifted up by Mr. Fairbairn as he lay in drunken and dirty helplessness in the street. He had been well educated, but fell into sin, till he could well fall no further. And now he had the tale to tell of newness of life and hope and power in the Lord who had had mercy upon him.

"A children's gathering followed this meeting, at which a young woman sang in soft and melodious voice the tender hymn,

Pass me not, O gentle Saviour.

Two years before she herself was living in terrible degradation and sin; but the Lord directed Mr. Fairbairn to her, and he was the means of her salvation. In the first year after her own rescue she had been the means of reclaiming of shame; in the second year, twelve. One felt that the Gospel which can work such moral wonders is more than an old song; it is the very power of God unto salvation."

FIVE OTHER GIRLS FROM THAT AWFUL LIFE

Unfortunately, the children's meeting was the only one I had the opportunity of seeing, and the arrival of Mr. Fairbairn was the signal for instant good behaviour on the part of the youngsters. There were assembled perhaps between two and three hundred; and it would be hard to find a more ragged and unkempt little crew, with perhaps half-a-dozen odd boots among them. But it was perfectly evident that they knew with whom they had to deal, and their behaviour was almost unexceptionable.

Mr. Fairbairn has a knack of gaining and holding their attention. First, an informal hand-drill is performed, the last exercise being the clasping of the hands, and the bowing of the head in prayer. Then, "What boy or girl has got a solo ready?" and no sooner is the question asked than two or three barelegged lads or lassies are standing on the form ready to sing as soon as Mr. Fairbairn has elected which shall do so first; then each follows in turn. "Why do you encourage them to sing alone?" I asked. "Because it first of all interests the children themselves; then their parents become pleased at the attention bestowed upon their little ones individually, and after hearing the children sing the hymns at home, they come to the meeting to hear them sing there."

It is remarkable the love some of these children have for their parents, even when in the lowest depths of degradation. As an example:—Two bright lads, aged twelve and eight, suffered greatly from their parents' intemperance. The mother drank deeply, the father occasionally; but at last both found themselves in gaol for drunken brawling. Mr. Fairbairn asked the lads, "Will you go to a Home?" "No," was the reply;

"THEY WOULD BE WORSE WITHOUT US.

They're aye good to us when they're sober!" And, like true "guardian angels," they still strive to keep their erring parents right.

Following the singing came a brief Gospel address, happily illustrated and brightly delivered; after which each child received a piece of bread, with just a suspicion of treacle streaked upon it, and off they went, each laden with messages to their parents, inviting them to come to the subsequent meetings for adults held in the afternoon and evening.

The expenses of the work are generously defrayed by a venerable Christian lady (the mother of one of the M.P.'s for the city), who takes a deep interest therein, and was present in person on the occasion of my visit.

Anyone desiring to see or learn more of this practical Christianising work should communicate with Mr. Fairbairn, 12, Antigua-street, Edinburgh.

THE DAISY'S GIFT.

ONCE, in the morning twilight,
Ere the sun rose over the sea,
In at my window a soft breeze came,
And whispered a tale to me.

Wouldn't you like to hear it,
That tale that the breezes told
To me in the early dawning,
Ere the hills were touchedwith gold?

. . . .

The day was fresh and lovely,
It was just in the early spring;
The birds were beginning to stir themselves,
And some were on the wing;

For the eastern sky was glowing,
Though the sun had not risen yet;
And hither and thither they flew afar,
Their morning meal to get.

And when they had eaten their breakfast,
They perched on the trees near by,
While they seemed to warble a song of thanks
To Him who made earth and sky.

Then the great sun rose in splendour,
And gilded all around—
The trees on the far and lofty hills,
And the grass upon the ground.

Gaily the flowerets opened
Out to the sun's glad light:
The pimpernels, and forget-me-nots,
And the buttercups so bright.

But one little flower who lifted
Her face to the sun's glad ray—
A silver flower with a golden heart,
Open and pure as day—

Looked brightly up at the wondrous sun,
With an earnest gaze of love;
While a radiant flood of glory shone
Around her from above.

She thought as she watched him rising
Out of the glowing east:
"How good he must be to shine on all,
The largest and the least?

I wish I had something to give him,"
She said, "for all he has done;
But what can a poor little flower give
To the great and glorious sun?"

Then whispered the breezes softly,
"Is there nought that you can give?
Little flower, have you given yourself to him?
Have you given the life you live?"

"But that is so small," she answered,
As her tiny head she bent;
And then, as the zephyrs floated on,
She smiled with a sweet content.

"I'll try," she thought, and gently
She lifted her timid voice:
"Great sun, shining down from the fair blue sky,
Making all the world rejoice,

Some gift I long to give thee,
But I have no precious store;
I have only myself to offer,
Wilt thou take me? I have no more."

Just then the heart of the floweret
Was filled with a strange new bliss;
And the golden sunbeams gathered round
Her upturned face to kiss;

Till they tinged her snowy petals
With the rose-flush of the dawn;
While down the path that the sunbeams made,
The voice of the sun was borne,

Saying, "Gladly, O little flower, I take
The present that thou dost give;
And, listen—this thy reward shall be—
In my favour thou shalt live.

And amid the blossoms scattered
Over field, and wood, and dell,
'Mid buttercups, and forget-me-nots,
And the bright-eyed pimpernel,

Thou shalt ever be first to open
Unto my golden ray;
And men shall call thee the "day's eye"
Through the ages far away.

[1034]

And whether the storm-clouds gather,
Or whether my fair rays shine,
In the brightest hours or the darkest, still Remember—thou art mine."

. . . . .

This is the story, children,
That the breezes told to me,
All in the early twilight,
Ere the sun rose over the sea.

And I wonder whether the story
Has whispered a thought to you,
Of the under-current of meaning there,
Wonderful, deep, and true.

Are you longing to come to Jesus,
Longing to be his own?
That your heart may be a kingdom
With Jesus upon the throne?

Then look to Him humbly, simply,
Look as the daisy did;
Open your hearts before Him
From whom there is nothing hid.

Give Him the life you're living,
Just the life of every day,
With its gladness and sorrow, sun and cloud,
Its pleasure, and mirth, and play.

Only give it Him now, dear children,
Your hearts to Him uplift;
And the King will stoop from his heavenly throne
To take your precious gift;

Saying, "My son, my daughter,
I take thine offering now
To place it among the jewel-stars
Shining around my brow;

And whether the storm-clouds gather,
Or whether the sunbeams shine,
In life, in death, ay, for evermore,
Remember—thou art mine" (Mal. iii. 17).

Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth, S.W.

A FINE series of meetings, lasting over a fortnight has been brought to a close at Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth-road, under the guidance of the pastor, Rev. D. M. Cameron. A thanksgiving meeting was held on Monday week, and we were glad to learn that the effort has been greatly blessed. Mr. Cameron took occasion to assure his friends that although the special meetings were over for the present, the winter's work was only getting well started; an important item being a Bible-class especially intended for the new converts. One of the greatest difficulties is the fluctuating nature of his congregation. Being composed of working people, removals for the sake of work are always going on. The congregation, however, is nearly self-supporting with regard to ordinary expenses, but the yearly payment of fifty pounds interest on £1000 still due on the building account is a heavy burden.

It is desired to build class-rooms, which are greatly needed. For the want of these, the pastor's own house from the cellar to the parlour is in use every Sunday. Mr. Cameron said that within five minutes he could walk to twenty public-houses, one of which was lately re-built at a cost of £12,000. There is work for ten churches in the neighbourhood, but this Tabernacle stands almost alone fighting the battle for Christ.

Mr. Robert Paton, who was in the chair, and Rev. A. P. Milne, gave interesting addresses.

MR. J. RENNIE, COLPORTEUR, Hitchin, has distributed during the year £700 worth of Bibles and books, in all 38,331; of tracts, 110,000; and conducted over 100 Gospel and temperance meetings in various chapels in his district, much good resulting.

THE CHRISTIAN BUILDINGS.

THERE were hearty rejoicings on Thursday last among the friends and fellow-workers of Pastor Archibald G. Brown, on the occasion of the public opening of "The Christian Buildings" in Devon's-road, Bow-common, E. We have already described this block of buildings, formerly called "Hawthorn Dwellings," and long notorious for vice, filth, and misery. Purchased by Mr. T. A. Denny, and handed over to Mr. Brown for Christian work, the premises have been put in trust as residences for Christian widows and aged poor. Having been thoroughly cleaned, repaired, and decorated, the place now looks the very pink of neatness, and will in a short time be occupied by clean and quiet people in each and all of its twenty-four sets, each of four comfortable little rooms. Alike outwardly and inwardly, there is a great contrast between the Hawthorn Dwellings of four months ago, and the Christian Buildings of to-day. We are perfectly sure that in the matter of tenants there will also be a difference as great as between light and darkness.

Retiring man that he is, Mr. DENNY had neither desire nor intention to be publicly known as the kind purchaser of the block; but, as his generosity became widely reported, he accepted the situation, and presided, in his genial manner, over the opening proceedings. At the meeting in the evening there was an attendance which well filled the spacious East London Tabernacle. In some opening words, the Chairman remarked that he deemed it a privilege to buy the property, and a greater privilege to hand it over to Mr. Brown for Christian purposes. He was very desirous that the tenants should be men and women who would practise as well as profess Christian principles, so that from the buildings there may be a truly blessed influence upon the region round about.

In some cheery remarks, Mr. BROWN observed that in the management of the enterprise he and his helpers would have to learn much as they go on. The place will be in no sense denominational, but will be managed by Tabernacle friends for Christ and his poor of any evangelical denomination. Rev. W. J. MAYERS, who followed, emphasised the spiritual character of the undertaking. There is nothing in the Church of Christ that may be touched with secular hands, the fulness of power being required for the meanest service we do for the Lord. The Christian Buildings will be a marked block in the district, and he prayed that all engaged in the management may have grace and wisdom equal to their requirements. As for the poor people who have been turned out of the place, we must not shut them out of our thoughts. He said: Let the problem of the degraded press heavily upon all who follow Him who "had not where to lay his head," until the light is seen to break upon it, and the finger of the Lord is observed pointing the true solution.

Mr. R. C. MORGAN spoke of this as one of the many advances of Christian work in the East-end of London, all of them in answer to prayer offered twenty-five years ago, when Baptist Noel and others met regularly, and made East London and its pressing needs the subject of mighty supplication. God began immediately to answer these prayers, and to-day He is still increasing and strengthening agencies of blessing. Surely this departure is another evidence of what God is willing and able to do, if we will only put ourselves into his hands. Messrs. F. N. Charrington and J. Marnham, Rev. Michael Smith, and Mr. Ovenden also spoke, all regarding the enterprise as a grand and promising departure. It was pointed out that Mr. Denny had set a good example to philanthropists, and for this he was thanked and God's name was praised.

Friends' Indian Missions.

On November 5 a large gathering of Friends from London and the provinces took place at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate, to bid farewell to a party of eight missionaries about to proceed to India. Two of these, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Williams, have been home on furlough.

A considerable company, including the missionaries, with some of their friends and the committee, took tea together, previously to the public meeting. On this occasion earnest desires for a blessing on the missions were uttered by Mr. Joseph S. Sewell, the veteran pioneer of Quaker missions in Madagascar. Then Mr. Isaac Sharp, another veteran evangelist, exhorted his brethren and sisters to devotedness and prayerful perseverance, and adduced encouraging examples of successful self-sacrifice amongst his own acquaintances. Two of these were young ladies, who are now evangelists in Mexico, one of whom had been implored by her own mother not to leave her home; but the brave girl replied, "Mother, if I do not yield to the call of God in this matter, home will be no longer home, or happy for me." So she went to Mexico, and, whilst learning the language, she speedily established a Dorcas Society there within a few weeks of her arrival.

Another young lady, mentioned by Mr. Sharp, is labouring in South Africa. Every Sunday she and some girl companions visit the huts of the natives in the mountains, at some distance from any church, and sing and read the Scriptures to them. A veteran missionary among the same tribe, the Basutos, told Mr. Sharp: "Thirty years ago I left France to labour here in Africa. I have never since been home for a holiday, although I might have had the opportunity given me by my brethren. But God, who let me have full passports to come out here, has never given me a passport to go back again, so I willingly work on for Him who loves me, and whom I also love."

The public meeting was so crowded that the company had to adjourn to the larger meeting-house adjoining. Mr. J. B. Hodgkin, of Darlington, took the chair. The eight missionaries were introduced to the assembly in turn, and each of them made a few remarks, descriptive of the circumstances which led them to devote themselves to the service for which they had been set apart. One of these, Miss Murphy, of Bolton, had been a Roman Catholic before her connection with the Society of Friends. Many prayers and exhortations from various speakers followed.

Mr. Henry E. Clark, of Leeds, who has long laboured in the Madagascar mission field, earnestly and sympathisingly encouraged the brethren and sisters now about to leave for India. He cautioned them against undue and over-sanguine expectations, but also against depression and despondency. He especially recommended them to turn a deaf ear, habitually, to all idle gossip and tale-bearing, which had been a fruitful source of mischief in some mission stations.

An interesting feature of the meeting was an address from one of the most active of the Society's home missionaries, Mr. Frederick Sessions, of Gloucester, who announced his own prospect of accompanying the out-going missionaries to India, on a special journey of independent observation and inquiry. He will be enabled to undertake this, through the liberality of a wealthy friend, who desires that Mr. Sessions may have the opportunity of acquiring information about India and its religious and social condition, which he may afterwards be able to turn to good account. He will make special and impartial inquiry into the real condition of missions in that country, and hopes to be able to encourage some of those devoted men and women there who have lately been pained and discouraged by certain undeserved criticisms.

Mr. Sessions also hopes to learn something of the causes which hitherto have so peculiarly obstructed the success of missions to the Mohammedans of India. If he succeeds in throwing some light upon this one question, his visit will have been of important utility. The subjects of the opium trade and the increase of intemperance in that country will also have his careful attention.

This gathering of Friends, so large in point of numbers, so sympathetic and encouraging in its feeling, and especially so prayerful in its spirit and tone, affords another indication of the revival of religious life and effort with which, of recent years, the Society of Friends has been graciously favoured by the Divine source of all good gifts.

The party of missionaries for India left London on Thursday last in the Oriental, along with Rev. Canon Wilberforce and Lord Radstock.

THE GOSPEL IN NORMANDY.

Mr. Henry Cook has spent five weeks at Fécamp, preaching on board the Gospel ship Mystery. Every evening during the week, and twice on the Lord's Day, the people assembled in large numbers, and special meetings were held for children and parents. Considering the prevailing superstition, the workers were greatly cheered by the hearty reception accorded them. Many persons eagerly bought copies of the Scriptures, and to the poor many New Testaments were given freely.

Fécamp is an open door for work for God. There is a deep-rooted desire to know more of the Gospel, as was evident from the great grief with which the people learned of the termination of the stay of the Mystery. They said, "Will you let the evangelist come back? If so, we will gather stones and sand for a building in which to meet, in order to hear the Word of God?" Mr. Cook writes to us: "Among the hearers were some very low characters, who listened with great attention. We believe that numbers of them were solemnly impressed. We were therefore led to promise that, God willing, we would send the larger vessel, The Herald of Mercy, now at Folkestone, after we have done our work among the fishermen. We had to get the Mystery to England, as she was in a leaky condition, and needed overhauling. The poor people at Fécamp require just such a mission hall as we have been able to erect at Trouville. I should rejoice to hear of some Christian gentleman giving up his yacht, and of some energetic worker taking the Gospel to the coast-towns of France."

Mr. Cook's general work on the South coast is well known to our readers. His address is: Belle Vue-place, Stoke-road, Gosport, Hants.

FEMALE MISSION TO THE FALLEN.—Twenty-five agents are working under the immediate direction of the committee of this Mission. There are five mission houses for the temporary shelter of young women in different parts of the Metropolis. The inmates are brought under kindly and Christian influence, and every effort is made to reclaim them from their evil ways. A rich blessing has rested on the work during the thirty-one years of its existence, as many as 20,000 fallen women having been aided through its instrumentality. In the discharge of their beneficent task, the missionaries do not forget to visit the hospitals and workhouses, as well as the dwellings of the young women. Moreover, two missionaries are engaged in dealing with cases of attempted suicide and other cases received from the magistrates of the various Metropolitan police courts. The annual expenditure of the Mission is about £4500, towards which friends far and wide are asked to make contributions, as the greater part of the whole has to be raised through public appeal. The annual report, giving interesting details of the work, may be had from the secretary, Mrs. A. J. S. Maddison, 32, Charing-cross, S.W.

A GLIMPSE OF HERRNHUT.

Rev. A. W. Clark, of the American Board of Foreign Missions, resident at Prague, describing life among the Moravian Brethren at Herrnhut, says:—"This quiet thrifty Saxon village has a population of about 1500 inhabitants. Here Count Zinzendorf, the friend of the persecuted, welcomed to his estate, nearly 170 years ago, Christians who had fled from spiritual oppression in Moravia, the province just east of Bohemia. In 1722 the first tree was felled, and the foundations of Herrnhut laid. The few Moravians were soon joined in their new home by persecuted people from various parts of Germany. For some time divisions rather than harmony characterised the new town, but in 1727, at a communion service at Berthelsdorf, about a mile distant, the Holy Spirit was wonderfully manifested, and all dissensions healed. This was on August 13, which, down to the present time, has been regarded as the spiritual birthday of the Church. The anniversary services are always very hearty, and include a memorial sermon, a love-feast, and the Lord's Supper.

"This year the day of gladness was followed by one of sadness. Bishop Reinke, of New York, died after an illness of some weeks, and was buried on August 14. The cemetery has a unique and impressive appearance. No upright tombstone meets the eye, not even over the grave of Count Zinzendorf. A simple flat stone marks alike the grave of bishop and peasant. Men are buried in one part, women in another, and children in a third. There are no family lots: the one who next falls is interred alongside his or her immediate predecessor. On no slab is there the word 'died,' but the impressive terms entschlafen ('fallen asleep'), or heimgegangen ('gone home'). The new grave is lined with evergreen twigs, and the coffin lowered to its last resting-place with strips of white cloth.

"Every evening there is a half-hour service in the church at Herrnhut. One time only hymns are sung; another time the pastor communicates missionary news, explains the Scriptures, or reads the life story of some eminent member of the Church. The mission festival is a great event every year. The Herrnhut Church sent forth her first missionaries in 1732, and has now ten very important and well-managed missions. Travellers passing through Saxony should visit historic Herrnhut, where may be found good friends, pleasant walks, and new strength."

LONDON CITY CHURCHES.—The Charity Commissioners have issued proposals for dealing with the funds of the superfluous London City Churches, as the resident population of the city is said to be still decreasing, and, in addition to St. Paul's Cathedral and The Temple, ten parish churches would now and for all future time afford more than the necessary accommodation. By the sale of some of the church sites, a capital sum of at least two millions sterling would probably be realised, and this sum, together with fully £20,000 per annum produced by the revenues of livings no longer occupied, and by the property of the city charities, applicable to Ecclesiastical purposes, would be available for the loudly lamented spiritual destitution of the suburbs.

A WESLEYAN GUILD FOR BIBLICAL STUDY.—Circulars have been issued from the Leys School, Cambridge, inviting ministers to become members of a Wesleyan Guild for Biblical Study. The document states that the need has long been felt for some means of organising the work of individual scholars in the ministry. The Guild will, it is hoped, serve this purpose, and encourage interchange of thought in Biblical study. It is proposed that the Guild shall consist of Wesleyan Greek Testament or Hebrew students, who may apply for membership. It shall be the duty of a Council from time to time to draw up lists of subjects for study, such as will demand some degree of research and original work. Rev. J. H. Moulton, headmaster of the Leys School, is acting as organising secretary.

BISHOP TAYLOR, OF AFRICA.

DEAR SIR,—I may say for the information of your readers that this year I am not opening new mission stations in Africa, but visiting the most of the thirty-two already opened, to note their progress in self-support, and in getting the heathen reconciled to God.

In Angola, where we commenced four and a half years ago, our people have made a great success; first, in mastering the Portuguese and Umbunda languages; second, Abanguepepo, Pungo, Andongo, and Malange reached self-sustentation at the end of two years, and have since made a large advance on that, using their earnings in building missions, and will go on opening new stations. In one of these we have a society of about twenty natives, saved and kept by the power of God; and in another, about thirty.

Where they have done the most in the school of material industry, they have had the greatest success in soul saving. This is but a beginning of a work that will, by the might of the Master, assume vast proportions in due time.

In younger stations we have several little societies of saved heathens that promise well. On our plan of industrial schools we shall reach subsistence at periods of time ranging from two to five or six years.

At Malange, Mr. W. H. Mead, one of my men, about two years ago, taught four heathen men to work pit saws, and since that, under his superintendency, they have made sawn timber to the value of £300. On the Liberian Coast we shall depend for marketable cash values mainly on coffee, and it requires five or six years to develop a coffee tree to profitable fruit-bearing; but then, with care, it will go on producing "the best coffee in the world" for fifty years. We have no absolute rule as to the line of industry, but in each place try to utilise such resources as will promise greatest help to our Mission, and utility in native industry. WILLIAM TAYLOR.

London, November 5.

In a "personal" note, Bishop Taylor says:—I have been afflicted with bronchitis for a year and a half; never ceased work for a day, but laboured under that disability. It was not very troublesome in the torrid zone, but, coming suddenly from the Congo into this damp, chilly climate, it greatly increased, even to alarming symptoms; but I have been indoors a fortnight with friends at High Barnet, and, with quiet rest, so greatly needed, I am toning up generally, and almost entirely relieved of bronchitis, more so than at any period for a year and a half. So I hope in a few weeks to return to Africa with renewed strength and fresh courage for the work of God in that empire of darkness and death.

CHARACTER STUDY IN A CONVENTION is always peculiarly interesting. Here, as elsewhere, the face tells the story of the purpose or purposelessness of the life behind it. In all such gatherings five or six classes are usually represented. There are the Casuals, who drop in for an occasional meeting and find it "very nice"; the Superiors, who come with an "infatuated" friend, and sit through the addresses, the teaching of which they "have heard all their lives" (this class has much to say concerning "religious dissipation," and the "excitement" consequent on "running after meetings"); then there are the Sponges, who absorb everything devoutly, smiling seraphically all the time; the Criticals, who, recognising the force of the truth taught, yet hesitate to accept it, and, instead, criticise the manner of the speaker, and analyse his matter; and there are the Seekers, perplexed, provoked, or persuaded, as the case may be; and lastly, there are those, who, for want of a better name, we may call Keswickers, and who, having tasted of the fulness of the blessing themselves, long to share it with others.

ST. GILES'S CHRISTIAN MISSION.

THE atest development of this Mission is an endeavour to reclaim fallen girls and women, who, in many instances, have been scared away from Whitechapel and that neighbourhood, to quarter themselves in the West. It has proved eminently successful. The roomy old house in Drury-lane, and the quondam tavern at Seven Dials—formerly one of seven which thrived on the fools' pence in that notorious centre—are now well adapted to their new requirements, and are open nightly. Besides these, a house with a large garden at Kentish Town has also been secured. Many erring women who enter these homes are finding them to be more than a mere temporary refuge; each becomes a door through which they can pass, in more senses than one, from death to life. The extended sympathy which has been awakened for women and children has certainly not been in vain; for the reclaimed are already a numerous sisterhood, doing credit to those who rescue them.

In connection with this part of the work, a new London police order has been issued, which shows what abounding confidence the authorities have in Mr. Hatton and his helpers. Many poor women and young girls have recently been found by the police, wandering about the streets and at railway stations, friendless, and without even the means of obtaining a shelter, some of them having travelled long distances from their homes. Mr. Monro, the Chief Commissioner of Police, has issued an order that all such are to be at once taken to the nearest police-station, in order that the inspector on duty may communicate with the secretary of the St. Giles's Christian Mission, who will receive them into one of the Mission Homes until permanently relieved and cared for, the Mission defraying all the expenses.

That section of the work which has for its special aim the reclamation of thieves, and which is chiefly superintended by Mr. William Wheatley, is still carried on with vigour, and it is believed that the results are such as are without parallel in the annals of similar enterprise. While the nation generally gains very largely by such service, the authorities who have to do with enforcing the criminal laws value this service very highly, numbers of lads, more particularly, who would otherwise be hardened by being sent to prison for the first time, being handed over by the Judges to this agency. Then, in addition to this, the continuous efforts which are put forth by getting hold of discharged prisoners, as they come out of the four great Metropolitan gaols morning by morning, cannot but have had a very visible effect in aiding that diminution of crime, which has been going on in this country for some years.

In the course of a year more than a thousand discharged prisoners pass through the Industrial Home, in Brooke-street, Holborn, alone; while hundreds of boys, handed over to the care of the Mission by Judges in the various courts, have also passed through the Home in Greville-street. It is gratifying to find that this effective method of dealing with criminals is being imitated in other parts of the country as well as in the United States, where crime is on the increase.

In carrying on these departments of this Mission, which are necessarily somewhat costly, Mr. Hatton will still command the sympathy and aid of many friends. As regards the more general work, St. Giles's remains much what it has been for generations as regards its need. Much of the squalor may seem to have disappeared; but how large a proportion of the people still sorely want all that the Gospel can do for them. St. Giles's is a dark quarter of London, but as a mission field it is full of promise.

The Bible at the Paris Exhibition.

M. MONOD, the agent for France, of the British and Foreign Bible Society, has sent a very interesting account of the Bible-stall at the Paris Exhibition. The paper will appear in a forthcoming issue of The Monthly Reporter. A large number of Gospels and specimens of languages and of leaflets (some 139,000 when M. Monod wrote) have been distributed. M. Monod says:—

"At the angles of the stall we placed books of specimens, leaflets, catalogues, and Gospels, with placards written in large letters, 'Prenez, c'est gratuit.' It is almost incredible how many people were attracted from great distances by the inscription. Specimens had a marked success among the intelligent people; the leaflets were also in favour. As regards the Gospels, it must be acknowledged that the pretty coloured covers did much to make them in demand. The visitors have been the most numerous on Thursdays and Sundays. On Sundays our stall was shut; but the guardian had the key to our store, and kept the tablets full. Every Sunday from 3000 to 4000 copies are taken.

"A curé once said to two girls: 'Take some; they are Protestant books; when you get home you can burn them.' Another said to women: 'Do not touch these books; you would kill your soul by reading them.' But others took them very courteously, and allowed their children to do the same. A police officer, whose little boy is at the school of 'Les Frères,' told us that the curé, having found one of our Gospels in the hands of his son, took it from him, but returned it on the following day, saying 'You can read that without danger, although it is Protestant.' Since that day the police officer called often, and took Gospels for his friends and acquaintances. The Bible Society secured for itself the unreserved admiration of linguists. Of all the classes of visitors, these spent more time at our stall than at any other.

"The 'trains de plaisir' brought to Paris multitudes of families from the country. As it is an understood thing that they shall not return empty-handed, these good people took many presents to their friends at the expense of the Bible Society, and it is quite certain that the Gospel will be read next winter in many a farm, during the long evening hours. We have abundant reason to be thankful for the full liberty we have enjoyed, and for the measure of success we have obtained. By means of this Exhibition we are now known to a large number of persons who were previously ignorant of our very existence or purpose."

BIBLE SOCIETY MEETINGS AT OXFORD.—The annual meetings in Oxford on behalf of the British and Foreign Bible Society have this year had an unusual interest. As usual, they brought together evangelical Christians in spite of denominational differences; but they also constituted a noble testimony for the present value of the Word of God. One meeting was presided over by Rev. Principal Fairbairn, the other by Professor Sir G. G. Stokes, M.P., President of the Royal Society, who, in some powerful words, justified the operations of the Society in giving to the world the Book which makes known God's work in the earth and his will and purpose toward man. Sir Henry Acland, in the course of a brief address, told, for the first time in public, a very interesting story of Faraday. When that great man was ill, he was visited by Dr. Latham, who found him in tears by his fireside. Asked whether he felt more ill than usual, Faraday put his hand on a Bible which was lying on his table, and said, "No; but I was thinking what a sorrow it is that the world will go astray, although it has this blessed Book to guide it." Professor Pritchard, who afterwards spoke, rightly said that the day was a great one for the Society in Oxford. Professor Stokes was cordially thanked for coming over from Cambridge to attend the meeting. His words were certainly heard with joy by many who had his love for Christ, although lacking his great intellectual power and culture.

Dr. Pentecost in Scotland.

INCIDENTS OF THE AIRDRIE MISSION.

THE first man known to be converted was a skilled mechanic. He was brought to the Lord on the initial night of the mission. There was no after-meeting, but this man lingered behind and sought an interview with the evangelist, and there and then gave himself to Christ. He had been very godless, but his conversion was so marked and thorough that he proved a conspicuous person in all the meetings, not by his individual prominence, but by the shining of his face and the remarkable change that had come over him. Every night he was in the meetings with some one of his old companions, whom he brought with him, and not a few of them were converted. His testimony went everywhere through the town, and there was not a more efficient soul-winner in Airdrie, albeit he is very quiet and modest.

During the first week of the meetings a miner was present. As he went on his way home about a mile out of the centre of the town, so great was his conviction of sin, that he was constrained to fall on his knees in the open field and cry to God for mercy. Next day while down in the bowels of the earth, picking out coals, so heavy was his burden that he threw down his pick, fell on his knees and surrendered himself to God, having there, as he afterwards expressed it, been "born again." He came to the meeting that night, publicly confessed Christ, and asked the Christians to pray for his wife, who a night or two afterward gave herself to God.

One night a man of middle age came forward to confess Christ. He was a very respectable-looking man. He said to Dr. Pentecost, "I have been a hypocrite and formalist in this town for fifteen years, going through the forms of worship and sitting at the Lord's table, all the time knowing that I was not a real Christian. It was respectable to belong to the Church, and so I have continued; but I have carried a sore conscience for years, and can bear it no longer. I now give myself to Christ, trusting that He will forgive my past hypocrisy and make me a true child of God." He was deeply moved, making this confession with tears.

One night a minister was returning from a visit out of town, and on the way met a young man who was coming from the meeting. He stopped the minister and told him that he was in great distress about his soul. This surprised the minister the more, because the young man did not belong to his congregation and was one of the exceptionally moral and upright young men of the town. The minister returned with the young man to his house and there found his brother in similar distress. They remained in prayer and conversation till midnight, when both brothers accepted Jesus. The next night both these young men openly confessed Christ in the meeting, to the joy of Christians and to the amazement of many who supposed that they "were good enough already." Since then two other brothers have come out for God. The mother of these young men remarked, "A'body thocht they were Christians. They are guid lads, but I kent fine they werena born again." There is great joy in that house. The mother said to Dr. Pentecost; "I hae ither five sons (ten in all), and the Lord maun convert them a'. I'll nae be satisfied wi' less." These young men are spreading their testimony far and wide, and their shining faces may be seen everywhere. Several others of the most conspicuously moral and religious young men of the town have been converted, showing that, "Ye must be born again" is a doctrine not wholly for the Nicodemuses of the first century.

Another case is that of a middle-aged business man. He came to Dr. Pentecost and said: "I was converted twenty years ago, and for fifteen years followed Christ, but through a church quarrel I got away from God and for four years and more I have lived a very careless and even godless life. Your first sermon on: "Roll ye away the stone," made me see that I was not only like Lazarus, dead in the tomb, but my life was like a big stone over the graves of my unconverted family, for my wife had backslidden through my backsliding. I went home that night, confessed to my wife my sin, told her that I had returned to God, and asked her to come back with me. I called my family together and told them likewise, and asked if they would join with me in confession and prayer, and unite in rearing a family altar. My wife was broken down and gladly came back to God. A few nights after my grown son yielded to Christ, and later on my younger son was converted in Miss Tyson's meeting. We are a happy house again. God be praised."

Many conversions have occurred altogether outside of the meetings, and the good work is going on all about. Scores of other incidents might be related, but these may suffice to indicate how precious the work has been.

"BEREANS" IN FORMOSA.

ABOUT two years ago Mr. George Ede, who is resident at Taiwanfoo, in charge of the middle school, in connection with the Presbyterian Church of England Mission there, proposed to some of his young men to form a class for Bible study to be conducted by themselves. Some members of the congregation also asked for admission. and the meetings were arranged to be held on Sunday morning.

To these native Christians this was a novel and an important undertaking. Subjects were intimated a week in advance, so that all might make preparation in private. After the opening paper the meeting was free for discussion. The meetings have been most successful, and a source of great blessing. Almost every male member of the church in Taiwanfoo has taken a part in the meetings, although many of them had never before opened their mouths in public. Even blind men have been chairmen and given the opening address.

The Association of the Pi-li-a, or Bereans, is spreading to other churches in Formosa.

BAPTIST FORWARD MOVEMENT.—Success has attended the Forward Movement at John-street, Bedford-row. Since its inauguration, some six weeks ago, numerous branches have been added to the work. Much of the success is due, under God, to the efforts of Rev. J. E. Shephard, the director.

PIETERMARITZBURG, SOUTH AFRICA.—A Soldiers' Home was opened in Pietermaritzburg, in May, 1888. Such a Home had long been wanted for the use of the military stationed here. It is situated close to the camp. Mr. Pinnick, the manager, opened this Home entirely at his own expense, and, up to the present time, the only benefit he derives from it is the satisfaction of knowing that himself and wife are doing a really good work for our soldiers.

THE TOLLINGTON HALL GOSPEL MISSION (Hornsey-road, Holloway, N.) was commenced two years ago. From a report recently published we learn that the workers have been greatly cheered from time to time. The members are, without exception, pledged abstainers from intoxicating drinks. One of the agencies, the Gospel Samaritan Mission, has for its special object the reaching of the poor of the neighbourhood. Two lady missionaries living in the midst of the people visit them at their homes, carrying with them the glad message of a Saviour's love to perishing sinners. God has signally blessed the workers, who have certainly entered an open door. A trouble now weighs upon them, however. The lease of the hall expires in April next, when the building will have to come down. Unless money is forthcoming to raise a new hall on a suitable site close by, the Mission will be rendered homeless. Details of the need may be had from the President of the Mission, Mr. F. J. Brazier, 56, Seven Sisters-road, Holloway, N.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.

A DISTRICT CONFERENCE was held at Leicester on November 2 and 3, which proved interesting and successful. The work at Leicester, which for some time has been greatly blessed, is under the superintendence of Miss Walker, who undertook the arrangements for the Conference. Delegates from surrounding branches gave most encouraging reports of the progress of the work.

A public meeting was held on Saturday evening in Melbourne Hall. The Mayor presided, and addresses were given by Mr. S. G. Sheppard, Mr. A. A. Head, Rev. A. A. Isaacs, and Mr. R. Nixon, secretary of the Mission, who urgently appealed for funds to develop the work, and also to establish a Convalescent Home, which is a very pressing need at present.

On Sunday afternoon a testimony meeting was held in the same place, under the presidency of Mr. S. G. Sheppard, and in the evening a Gospel meeting was conducted in the Temperance Hall. At the after-meeting a number of deeply interesting cases of spiritual inquiry were met with.

AMONG ROMANISTS IN IRELAND.

Two Christian workers have of late been itinerating in one of the darkest parts of Ireland, taking the Gospel to Roman Catholics under the auspices of the Dublin Visiting Mission, in connection with the Irish Church Missions. One of them had previously been with Messrs. Hyde and Stevenson, two of Mr. Moody's evangelists from Northfield, and had become impressed with the need and possibility of the work in which he is now engaged. Writing to Rev. Henry Fishe, superintendent of the Irish Church Missions, he says:—

"The meetings have been wonderful times. Many were alarmed at their condition, as revealed to them by God, and were thrown into a state of great anxiety. This was upon some to such an extent that, after leaving the meeting, they came back and asked us to pray with them, and explain more fully the way to be saved. Even after all this was over, we found others waiting in the streets to meet us as we went home, earnestly desiring to know more about eternal things.

"Some have asked if they can come to our lodgings and have a further explanation. I can scarcely realise that it is all a reality. Of the visiting I cannot say all I would wish. It is just beyond expression. The door is wide open, and the people are longing for the bread of life. Many tears have been shed over the reading of Scripture in the cabins. We have not heard one harsh word since leaving Dublin."

Cheered by the result in this case, the Visiting Mission proposes, as soon as possible, to send two more workers to another needy quarter. Communications should be addressed to Mr. Fishe, at 12, D'Olier-street, Dublin.

MR. JOHN HAMBLETON, writing to a friend from his residence, Foster-street, South Geelong, Victoria, Australia, says:—"On July 4, I entered upon the threescore-and-tenth year of the natural span, and I can praise God that the voice and bodily strength keep good, both for outdoor and indoor evangelistic work. I have been enabled to erect a house as a Bible-Carriage Depôt, which I trust will be the garner of precious seed-corn of eternal life to be scattered over these colonies in years to come. The work is in its infancy yet, but I believe the Lord will raise up and continue to send out labourers as the population increases, for there is a great work to be done out here in making known the way of the Lord among the heathen. Already many Chinese, who are now beginning to spread abroad in the earth, are preaching the Gospel in these colonies, both in their own and in the English language."

MR. VARLEY'S WORK IN AUSTRALIA.

THE work in Melbourne during the months which are past has been signally owned of God. Despite the heat of the summer season, and the needful care not to try my chest and lungs unduly, I have been permitted to preach to many thousands in this great southern centre. A noteworthy feature of our work has been the great majority of men who have crowded the Theatre Royal. Large numbers have confessed Christ, and, judging from the growing interest, the Holy Spirit has, in the preaching of Christ, wrought mightily and effectually. The great fight, for such it has been, against the varied forms of immorality, has resulted in the awakening, to a large extent, of the moral conscience. Verily, many notorious men have been trembling lest their names should be the next needed for exposure and denouncement. "Fearfulness hath surprised the hypocrites, and the sinners have become afraid." What is better, however, than the deterrent influence involved by this knowledge and fear is the fact that thousands of men have been drawn to the meetings, and, by burning words of sober truth, have been convicted of sin.

I rejoice to believe that consciences have been aroused and awakened; yea, more, "the pleasures of sin" have been ruthlessly invaded by the light of God. Conscience, instead of being practically voiceless, is now crying out. The alarm is sounding long and deep, and in many cases the inward monitor is cutting and wounding like a set of sharp and keen-edged knives. I am just home from Sydney, where I have been for the past six weeks; and wide and effectual is the door opened, that in about ten days time I hope to return, for three months longer, to continue the work which has been greatly blessed of God.

Tens of thousands of the wealthy and intelligent men of these colonies have hardly any moral sense. Men of the Joseph type are simply ridiculed, whilst women of the type of Potiphar's wife are common and popular enough. Money is a great god in Australia, and his worshippers are legion. It is pitiable to know and hear of the doings of many of these idolaters. Then come love of pleasure and pride of life. I do not affirm that things are worse here than in London, but the moral characteristics which the Word of God gives as marking the close of this wicked age are strongly accentuated here.

We had in Sydney, on Sunday evening, Sept. 15, the narrowest escape I have ever known from a tremendous calamity. The new Masonic Hall, where I was preaching, was crowded out, large numbers being unable to gain admittance. About eight o'clock a cry of "Fire!" was raised, and in a few seconds a tremendous panic occurred. The people rushed en masse toward the doors, and had I not been enabled, almost in tones of thunder, to quell the excited and panic-stricken crowd, large numbers must have been trodden down and crushed to death. The caretaker, in excitement, opened the "escape" doors, quite oblivious of the fact that outside there was no way of escape; building operations were going on, and, had the people crushed through the escape doors, scores, and probably hundreds, would have been precipitated into an open and unprotected excavation, about sixteen feet below. Several persons were bruised, and one workman fell into the excavation, and cut his head rather seriously. It was a marvellous deliverance; to the Lord be praise.

Several hundreds have confessed Christ as their personal Saviour during the past five weeks; and, in the evening of the day on which the Convention of Believers was held, just before I left the city, fully 1200 rose to confess special blessing received, and to give expression to their determination, in dependence upon our God, to take the indwelling Christ as the power henceforth of their daily life.

Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN remember the work and the workers in special and fervent prayer?

HENRY VARLEY.

Mr. Benjamin Short writes from Sydney:—"For many months before Mr. Varley came here, quite a number of Christians, unknown to each other, were led to ask the Lord to fit him for the work, and then to send him. Mr. Varley came at the request of a few brethren, principally laymen, who were diligently at work themselves, and Mr. G. E. Ardill became hon. secretary of the band of helpers. There were prayer-meetings at noon, Bible-readings in the afternoon, and crowded meetings night after night in the Masonic Hall. On Saturday evenings there were large meetings for men only, when the question of social purity was presented. Many thousands of persons have listened to the various addresses; eternity alone will disclose how abundant the fruit has been. Over a thousand persons rose to confess their faith in Christ, and many more have since been confessing Him by a consecrated life.

"It is impossible clearly to describe in words the intense joy that filled hundreds of hearts during the meetings. Last Monday nearly a hundred brethren, about seventy of whom were ministers, representing various sections of the Church, adopted unanimously a resolution of loving confidence in our brother, whom they requested to return as soon as possible, pledging him cordial sympathy and support. Responding to this desire, Mr. Varley acknowledges that he has seldom realised a wider door of utterance. Now we are believing that greater things are in store. Already requests have come in from many churches and neighbourhoods, in connection with which missions are desired."

YORKSHIRE WOMEN AND TEMPERANCE.—The twelfth annual conference of the Yorkshire Women's Temperance Union was held at Leeds, November 5 and 6. Much interesting discussion took place, elicited by the reports from the branches, of which there are now thirty-five in Yorkshire. Women's work for the victims of intemperance and sin in connection with our police courts and prisons was the subject of one meeting. The High Flatts Sanatorium for the restoration of intemperate women is reported to be in a very satisfactory condition, and has at present fourteen inmates. Prayer-meetings were held each morning before the business of the day was commenced.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of the Chislehurst branch of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society, was held at Christ Church room, on Monday, last week. The meeting was largely attended. The report ready by Rev. G. J. Hill, stated that this branch had taken in hand the building of a Sailor's Home and Rest at Fowey, and, mainly through the energetic efforts of Mrs. A. P. Townend, the hon. secretary, over £400 had been raised towards the £1200 required. The roof would be placed in the building in a few days, and this Sailors' Home would be ready for opening early in the new year. Rev. W. W. Cox, F. A. C. Lillingston, M.A., Messrs. Hodder, Theodore Howard, and A. P. Townend, Mrs. G. J. Hill, and several converted seamen also took part in the proceedings.

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.—The Bishop of London, with Sir James Whitehead and others, have issued a statement on behalf of this Mission, in which they say:—"During the last half century, the Committee of the Thames Church Mission have cared for the spiritual welfare of the floating population and others connected with the port of London. The chaplains and missionaries of the Society are daily engaged in the work of visitation, Bible distribution, and general colportage. The tide of emigration has greatly added to the labours of the Mission. The committee are constrained to make a special effort to meet the wants of sailors, bargemen, emigrants, passengers, watermen, and others, who, owing to their calling, are removed from the ordinary religious influences enjoyed ashore. We commend this good work to the sympathies of the Christian public." The secretary is Rev. H. Bloomer, 31, New Bridge-street, London, E.C.

A QUIET DAY.

ON Thursday last week the weekly meetings for the deepening of the spiritual life, at Portman Rooms, were resumed for the winter season. These meetings, as arranged for by the late Mr. H. F. Bowker, have been a source of blessing and spiritual stimulus to many. The conduct of them now devolves on Rev. E. H. Hopkins, of Richmond, and for the opening occasion he arranged "a quiet day," with morning, afternoon, and evening meetings, addressed by well-known expounders of the spiritual life. The announcements had been widely spread, and there were large gatherings during the day.

At the morning meeting Rev. H. SHARPE, of Hampstead, gave the first address, based on Heb. xii. 11. His three key words were: Chosen, Chastened, Crowned; around these points he gathered many helpful thoughts and exhortations bearing on the risen life of the believer. Rev. E. W. MOORE gave the second address on Christ's baptism at Jordan as a prophecy of Calvary and a pattern of Pentecostal blessing. The conditions of this blessing on the believer's part are willingness, self-surrender, self-abasement, and prayer. From God there comes a declaration of sonship, power for service, and purification.

In the afternoon, Rev. NEVILE SHERBROOKE, commenting on 1 Kings iii. 1—15, said that here there is a "royal" prayer and an "imperial" answer. God prompted prayer that He might send an overflowing response. As Solomon made a feast to his servants, so let us pass on to others any blessing we receive, let us put into immediate use what God gives. Rev. EVAN HOPKINS took up 2 Cor. xii. 9, showing it to contain the record of a remarkable experience and a law of the spiritual life. This experience came to the Apostle some years after he had been living the Christian life. We judge from the fact that Paul gloried in the thorn in the flesh that it was some bodily infirmity and not a sin. Divine power needs human weakness for its fullest manifestation. So in like manner God graciously meets our guilt by his own righteousness and our helplessness by his almighty strength. At a second meeting, conducted by Mr. Hopkins, many indicated definitely their desire to be fully surrendered to God's purifying and possessing power.

At the evening hour Rev. H. W. WEBB PEPLOE gave a telling address on the daily crucifixion that ought to mark the Christian life, founded on the words of the Apostle, "Always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus." If some sorrow comes to us, or some temptation, or some worldly allurement, we must put it in the place of death and show practically that the risen life of the Saviour is ours. In pressing home the practical side of this truth, Mr. Peploe was severe on the inconsistencies of Christians: as for instance of some who were described as very spiritually minded people, but who quarrelled at home like cat and dog! The closing address by Rev. CHARLES A. FOX was on the incident in Peter's life, where he walked on the water at the bidding of the Lord. It was full of richly suggestive spiritual application. As will be seen from our announcements, these helpful meetings are held at Portman Rooms every Friday afternoon.

"A GREAT NEED IN GIBRALTAR."—The extract from Miss C. Hanbury's letter, given in our issue of November 1, might be taken to imply that there is no place in the entire town except the public-house where soldiers and sailors may obtain refreshments and sleeping accommodation. The real purpose that Miss Hanbury had in view was to call attention to the great need which exists in the Europa Main-road district, which the friends of the Sailors' Mission Home are very desirous to remedy, by purchasing the public-house which is at present the cause of much trouble and sin. With the public-house added, the usefulness of the Mission premises would be greatly enhanced.

"PUNCH" ON LONDON POVERTY.

r humorous contemporary, though it now d again offends by irreverent witticisms and eers at well-meant efforts on behalf of tem- rance and social purity, yet does good service chivalrous attacks on the selfishness, greed, d oppression that are too prevalent amongst . It is now publishing a continued poem titled, "Untiled; or, The Modern Asmodeus" a vivid glimpse into some East London teriors. We quote some stanzas from last eek's instalment:—

Look down!" I looked, and in an attic lone, ith blank foul floor, and hearth of bare cold stone,
A grey-faced woman, grizzled
y years and sorrows, sat, and shrank, in vain, rom the damp walls whence oozed the ruthless rain
That through the dark night drizzled.

he rifted roof leaked misty moisture down
n her grey locks; her frayed and scanty gown
To her shrunk bosom huddled tilled not the shiverings of her ill-fed frame, hilled by the rusty grate devoid of flame,
The rotting floor rain-puddled.

et worked she on. Ah yes, she worked, worked, worked;
he one dead burden that may not be shirked,
Whilst lingers life's last ember,
s drudgery. That still weights her morn and noon, hrough the rare gleams of London's leaden June,
The fogs of drear December.

lone, age-stricken, grey and silent, she titches on there. A mug of cold pale tea,
A slice of bread, sole diet
f the poor struggling solitary, stand ard by her; so, with work and food at hand,
She plods on, pale yet quiet.

This is her world; from year to year she sits,
Heedless of Babylon's wealth as of its wits,
Its pleasures, panics, prophets;
All pass her by, she never sees the sun
Shine on a field; her home is this damp, dun,
Most desolate of Tophets.

Ten years of this grim life of want and toil
Have left her premature and hopeless spoil
Of age and grinding labour.
Her needle and her garret she leaves not,
Save for "the Shop." Mute drudgery is her lot
And venal vice her neighbour.

"What is her work?" I cried, "if that be work Which is a worse task-master than the Turk?"
"Look closer," said the Shadow.
"Oh, shrink not! Wise Economists will say
Her fingers must wax thin, 'tis the sole way
To stock Trade's Eldorado.

"'Shirt-finishing,' good friend, at three poor pence
The dozen garments; and, with toil intense,
Unceasing, superhuman,
She may earn some three shillings in the week.
Hideous? Nay, eager hundreds vainly seek
The 'luck' of this lone woman!

"Hard-by are harsher scenes, sick husbands prone,
Dead children coffinless. She is alone,
This slave, and so half happy.
And now look yonder!"—In his snug stage-box,
With sheeny front, trim shoes and flaming socks,
Lounged what slang dubs a "Chappie."

That means a callow, callous cad, a thing
All dandy insolence and diamond ring,
And cynic cockney "patter."

"There," said the Shadow, sits the ghoul who thrives
Upon the labour of such lingering lives.
Could he look rosier, fatter?

"He owns the rookery whence, by roguish sleight,
From bodily ill and spiritual blight
Greed sucks a rich subsistence.
Ten thousand needles flash, with brush and paste
A myriad match-slaves drudge dull years to waste,
To yield such brutes existence.

"Ill-paid they are, half famishing may be,
Bare are their lives of comfort as of glee;
But one thing they must offer
To the new Moloch. Yes, the Rent! the Rent!
Must come, the maw of Mammon to content,
And cram his gaping coffer.

A Week of Prayer at Birmingham.

A REMARKABLE outpouring of God's Holy Spirit has attended a week of prayer held at Westminster-road Church, Birmingham, of which Rev. Walter Searle is the pastor. The church being burdened with a debt of nearly £3000, the members decided to meet together and lay the matter before the Lord. This was at the suggestion of Rev. F. B. Meyer, who conducted a mission in the church last spring.

While praying for this object a wondrous quickening of spiritual life was experienced, increasing the faith of those present in God's promises, and leading them to make a fresh and full consecration to the Lord, that they might be filled and baptized with his Holy Spirit. Moved by the Spirit of God, without collection or invitation, the members present at the prayer meetings were impelled freely and spontaneously to lay nearly £200 on God's altar, some ladies giving up articles of jewellery, and others, amongst them working men and children, making great sacrifices and self-denial.

Not rich in gold, the people are rich in faith, and unwaveringly believe that God will yet send the remainder; and, which is of greater import, they are asking for 3000 souls. Ever since the church was led last year to separate itself from worldliness and error, and to make a bold stand for the inspired Word and the doctrines of the Cross, God has richly blessed his word, adding over a hundred to the church membership. The pastor's address is 78, Trinity-road, Brickfield, Birmingham.

THE CHRISTIAN HARBOUR LIGHTS.—Admiral Grant, C.B., presided at the monthly muster of the above, at the Seamen's Chapel, St. George's-street, E., on Thursday last week, and gave a very earnest and helpful Gospel address. Rev. G. J. Hill, Captain Dalrymple, Miss Messer, and a number of seamen took part in what proved to be a very pleasant and profitable meeting. At the close several new members were enrolled.

MISS CHILD'S WELCOME HOME.—At the meeting in the "Fo'c's'le," on Tuesday, November 5, earnest addresses were delivered by Miss Child, Mr. R. C. Morgan, Colonel Macgregor, Messrs. Jay, Nicholson, Mrs. Miller, and other friends. Bright testimonies were given by several of the seafaring members of the Christian Lifeboat Crew. A second meeting was held, when the net was drawn, and not a few were found inquiring the way of salvation.

CHANGE OF NAME.—As some confusion has arisen from the similarity in title of "The East London Gospel Mission," conducted by Mr. George Fuller, and "The North East London Gospel Mission," conducted by Mr. William Chorley, Mr. Fuller's committee have decided to adopt "The East-end Gospel Mission" as the title by which in future his work will be known. The headquarters of the Mission are at Brunswick Hall, Brunswick-place, Poplar; but in various localities over the East-end, assistance, both material and spiritual, is rendered to the poor, and work is done among policeman, railway-men, in workhouses, and in other directions. The president is General Sir Arthur Cotton. With the winter's work in view, the co-operation of friends is solicited.

MAJOR WHITTLE IN SCOTLAND.

[From a Correspondent.]

Ere this notice reaches the hands of your readers, our much-honoured and beloved friend will have left Scotland. It is with a sore heart we part from him, and the prayers or hundreds who have been blessed through his ministry will follow him wherever he goes.

The last week was spent in the Christian Institute, Glasgow. Being the week of prayer for young men, the evangelist addressed himself principally to that class, and many conversions have been reported, while not a few backsliders have been reclaimed. Miss Whittle has helped her father in the singing of Gospel solos, and on some occasions she has been assisted by the fine, deep contralto of her mother. Dr. Moxey has read the Scripture lessons and some of the hymns, as well as, on Thursday evening, Miss Havergal's dramatic poem "Now!" He has been associated with the friend whom he loves so dearly for the last nine months, and only parts with him now, in consequence of his college work in Edinburgh demanding the severance.

Major Whittle commences a united mission in Woolwich on Sabbath next, and we hear of hopeful preparation and expectancy.

SUNDAY IN BOMBAY.—A telegram from Bombay records the success of the effort for the conservation of the day of rest. The memorialists who protested against the departure of the English mail on the Lord's Day have gained their point, and the Sunday mail day has been abandoned.

RAGGED SCHOOLS.—Among the recreative and educational features of ragged schools at present the magic-lantern is one of the chief favourites. We learn that the secretary of the Ragged School Union is hard pushed to satisfy all who desire to borrow his apparatus. If there are any friends who could increase his stock, either of lanterns or slides, will they please note the address, Mr. John Kirk, Exeter Hall, Strand, London, W.C.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.—On Monday week, a meeting of the members was held in their Memorial Hall, Bethnal Green, to review the open-air work of the past summer. About twenty representatives gave in reports, all of which seemed to be satisfactory. It was stated that about 440 services had been held, 1320 addresses delivered to an estimate of over 66,000 hearers—the right classes, "street idlers," who never attend church or chapel. Close attention had been given by the Jews, who would stand by and listen to the word of God being preached, and it was said that good impressions had been made. Cases of professed conversion were reported.

CHRISTIAN INSTRUCTION SOCIETY.—Sir,—This Society, I am happy to say, is prospering. Additional branches have recently been affiliated in London and the country. A new departure has been taken by the employment of a mission preacher, by whom series of special services have been conducted in several churches with gratifying results, and for whom engagements are made for some months to come. It has been decided to employ one or two evangelists to labour in London and the surrounding districts, and the other departments of the Society's work are being successfully maintained.—Yours truly, Arthur Wickson.

Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C.

A LOST SON FOUND.—All classes, rich as well as poor, are affected in some way or other by the rescue work done by London missions. Here is a sad story, with a sequel of great interest: A few years ago a gentleman died in a north-western town, leaving £5000 to each of his children. One son came to London and entered a ship-broking concern, which soon afterwards collapsed. Disappointed, the young man took to drinking; then, in destitution, he wandered about the streets. Worn and tired, he went into an East-end mission-hall for a rest, being subsequently spoken to by the kind Christian worker. He had once been the secretary of a large Sunday-school; now he gave his heart to the Lord, and signed the total abstinence pledge. His mother, a Christian lady, was communicated with, and heard with joy of the rescue of her lost son to virtue and piety.

ISABELLA MACPHERSON:

The Story of a Devoted Life.

By her Brother, Rev. JOHN MACPHERSON, Dundee.

TRAINED in the old Puritan theology of the Highlands, our father held firmly the doctrines of grace. Conversion as a clear outstanding work of the Holy Spirit in the soul was kept well in view of the children. To be saved, they were made to understand, they must be born again. His own early observation gave emphasis to this fundamental truth. In his youth he had seen the great religious awakening that took place mainly under the preaching of Dr. Macdonald, "the Apostle of the North"; he was wont to describe to the family the solemn scenes he had witnessed—men smitten with a sense of sin crying aloud for mercy; wicked men turning from the error of their ways and leading a holy life. The oldest of the children can recall a warm discussion on the doctrine of regeneration, between their father and the minister of the parish. The minister maintained that the man who paid his debts and lived decently needed no other title to heaven, or fitness for it; while Macpherson entrenched himself behind the words of the Lord Jesus to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."

The Lord's Day was observed with profound reverence: some would say, with Puritanic strictness. All the ordinary occupations and amusements were set aside. But there was withal special good cheer. The three meals of the day were richer than usual, and at all of them there was a special treat for the children. Of interesting reading there was no lack; for the older children there were religious stories, wholesome and instructive; whilst the pictures of Scripture scenes and characters in the big Bible, together with a vast number of ministerial portraits in a pile of copies of The Evangelical Magazine, furnished the younger members of the family with a delightsome employment—which saved the hours of the sacred day from tedium; made salutary impressions; and even left happy memories for life. Pure and healthful is the atmosphere of a house in which the Lord's Day is wisely and reverently kept; it is the bracing air of God's own heaven, and infuses into the life-blood of children an element of moral strength and purity that is never lost. The Bible, the Sabbath, the house of God, and a holy life, stand and fall together.

In Isabella's home-training there was another element of a less common sort. Our mother was a sweet singer, and a rare story-teller. From her capacious memory she was wont to fetch stories and songs—stories tragic and humorous; songs full of pathos and tenderness, some of them composed by herself—causing the eyes of the young audience to glisten; while every tale and poem had its own lesson. Many an encore was given: nothing was too often told or sung. [Specimens of these memories are given in the volume, but omitted here for want of space.]

This daily play of wit and humour; the mother's stories, songs, and repartee; the father's glee when in the evening hours he relaxed into boundless merriment, often describing the incidents of the day with comic touches, and hitting off characters by laughable names, and so setting all in a roar as cheery as the blaze upon the wide hearth—this innocent hilarity mingling with the severe discipline, the stern duty, the Puritanic religion, rendered the home training in the highest degree stimulating and wholesome. The warmth of affection, the prevailing joyousness, the unsophisticated naturalness and perfect openness, make the memory of those days like gleams from Eden—a long sunny summer, leaving a genial after-glow on life's sober year. Here Isabella learnt her best lessons.

Her girlhood was uncommonly bright and full of promise. Her personal beauty drew universal admiration; but this did not spoil her: from self-consciousness she was remarkably free. Healthy, energetic, affectionate, she was happy at work and at play. Her openness of character, sweetness of nature, and readiness to serve others, made her the friend of all. When skill, fine nerve, and cool head were needed, Isabella—canny, old-fashioned, and wise—came to the front. Somehow she could use her left hand as effectively as her right one in everything except writing; and it was a saying among her comrades that "Isie Macpherson can do with her left hand what none of us can do with our right."

An early privilege enjoyed by Isabella was the love and prayers of several godly persons who were frequent visitors at her father house. Among the rest and in particular was Mrs. G., a woman of rare intelligence, piety, and force of character. For some thirty years she came and went less in her capacity as nurse than as a Christian friend. During the last fifteen years of her life she, being poor though respectable, daily received a little portion from the house, which was carried to her by Isabella; the portion being doubled on Saturday in view of the Sabbath. Thus, day by day, from childhood to mature years. Isabella enjoyed the counsels, benedictions, and prayers of one who lived "next door to heaven"—a privilege second only in value and effect to the good influences of home itself. Perhaps this little service of charity—dispensed without ostentation and with perfect delicacy, and accepted without humiliation and with the gracious dignity of a saint—may have done something to foster in Isabella's sympathetic nature that delight in the poor themselves and in doing them good, which became one of the marked features of her character, one of the prevailing habits of her life. At any rate, that daily mission of love, attended by the blessings of the saintly old nurse through so many years, could scarcely fail to bear fruit.

Thus early was she trained in the office of the genial and bountiful visitor. So, too, she learned from her mother never to send a charity by a servant, but to convey it in person or in some such way as would grace it with the dignity and character of friendship; the gift no dole, but a token of love from friend to friend. For the same reason, after her mother's example, she always dressed in her best gown when visiting with alms; a practice much appreciated by the poor, who dislike the eccentricity or meanness of apparel affected by some Christian workers. The lady visitor who would show respect to the poor, and be respected by them, must cultivate a wise self-respect, and shun all appearance of vainglory and shabbiness. Those who would worthily serve the Lord should eschew all guises and disguises; shams and shows are alien to the spirit of Christ; the very genius of Christianity is sanctified common sense. There may be as much pride in an ugly bonnet as in a jewelled head-dress! there is no more piety in the one than in the other. In such things as these the golden medium is Christian wisdom.

Two prominent features of her character, even in girlhood, were concientiousness and generosity. With a quick apprehension of what was right and dutiful, she would be often putting others right, or keeping them from going wrong; and this she did with such gentleness and tact as not to awaken prejudice or wound pride. When her sisters were disinclined to attend the prayer meeting in church, she would insist upon their going; when argument failed she would take their wraps to them, and put them on their arms or shoulders; so in the end she invariably prevailed. From a child she was noted also for her generous ways. She kept nothing—could keep nothing; not only sharing her own with others, but giving all away. She was thoughtful and wise beyond her years; but it was doubtless her kind-heartedness, a certain greatness of soul, that made her a power even then, not only among her fellows but her seniors also. She loved much, and so was much loved.

Her standing in school and class was always in the front rank. Her teachers, with unvarying testimony, affirmed that she was easily first. In religious knowledge, her minister declared, she had no equal. It was well-known among her compeers that in certain branches of learning she gave undoubted promise of attaining a high position, and probably making a name for herself. But just as prize on prize fell to her, and she was catching glimpses of future distinction, another vision dawned upon her, and the entire current of her life was diverted into a new channel.

CHRISTIAN WORK AMONG LEPERS.

INTEREST in the lot of the poor lepers having recently been revived, a little book, by the late Bishop La Trobe, entitled "Work among Lepers by the Moravian Church, in South Africa and Jerusalem," has been published in a revised form, the information being brought down to date. For seventy years Moravian missionaries have been engaged in this ministry of self-denying love; and it is quite remarkable that out of twenty-five Moravians who have consecrated themselves to the service, not one has taken the dreadful disease. Copies of the pamphlet (4d. each) may be had from Rev. B. La Trobe, 29, Ely-place, London, E.C.

In a tractate, by Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey, entitled "Protestant Missionaries and Lepers," special attention is drawn to work carried on under the auspices of the Mission to Lepers in India. Of this well-known agency Mr. Bailey is secretary, his address being 17, Glengyle-terrace, Edinburgh.

In a letter to an English correspondent, Rev. A. R. M. Wilshere, of the Robben Island Leper Settlement, Cape of Good Hope, says: "I have been here now for twelve years. I have escaped any contagion, by using means to prevent it, by washing my hands when I come from visiting the lepers; also putting on an old glove when I have to touch a door-handle of their ward, which they continually handle. My health has been bad; I had an attack of incipient paralysis, and have had to engage an assistant. I am in hopes of rather ending my days here. There are altogether 630 people (patients and others). On Sundays the patients all come to church in the morning, the lepers in the afternoon, and for the rest of the people I have a voluntary service in the evening." The Government are going to turn Robben Island into a leper station entirely, and to remove all the other persons, chronic sick convicts, lunatics, &c., to the mainland.

SEAMEN IN HONG KONG.—Hong Kong is the great port of call for vessels to China and Japan from England on the West, as well as from America on the East, and Australia on the South. Hence its harbour is always well filled with vessels of every class and rig. Over 2870 English steamers alone entered the harbour in 1887. To visit these vessels, hold short services on board out of working hours, and supply the men with suitable literature, is the chaplain's daily work. It is necessary, in order that a great deal of visiting now reluctantly left undone should be accomplished, that a steam launch should be secured for the Mission. A handy launch thoroughly suitable for all weathers can be procured from the Dock Company in Hong Kong for about £1000, and they will undertake to keep her in repair—a very important consideration. An appeal is made to all who have at heart the spiritual interests of our merchant sailors abroad, to help in floating this mission vessel. The chaplain, Rev. Gurney Goldsmith, may be communicated with at 1, St. Michael's-terrace, Stoke, Devonport.

Rev. JOHN R. WOOD,

Baptist Pastor, Upper Holloway.

CLEARLY chosen and called of God to the work of the Christian ministry, the subject of this brief sketch has, for over a quarter of a century, proved the faithfulness of his Divine Master to those who hear and obey. The circumstances of his life have not been such as to attract the seeker after the marvellous, so that he may fairly claim the proverbial blessedness of the nation (or individual) that has no history. All the more, perhaps, has that life, like some well-nourished river, flowed steadily onwards, imparting blessing and fructification on its way, and that in increasing measure.

Born at Wincanton, Somerset, in 1838, John R. Wood had the inestimable privilege of a godly parentage. His mother was a pious and gifted woman, and she is said to have possessed remarkable skill in leading young people to an intelligent and trustful knowledge of the Saviour. Her son John must have been instructed in the things of the kingdom of God from his childhood, as we find him admitted to church membership at the age of twelve and a half. At that time his father, who was by profession a schoolmaster, had become pastor of a little flock in the Wiltshire village of Ridge. On removing thither from Wincanton, Mr. Wood, senior, seeing that the small country community was destitute of the outward means of grace, established a Sunday-school, and afterwards began Sunday services, which led to the building of a chapel, and his appointment to the pastorate. It does not appear that the son was intended for the ministry, humanly speaking, as he was apprenticed to the drapery trade in the adjoining town of Tisbury at the age of sixteen. But he began to preach in the villages, showing that necessity was laid on him to declare the Gospel message to his fellows, and that he had been commissioned from the court of heaven. The turning-point in his career was one occasion when he occupied his father's pulpit at Ridge. His sermon that day resulted in the conversion of his younger brother Frank. That fact came to the knowledge of Frank's pastor in Salisbury. He concluded that the youthful preacher ought to devote his life to the stated ministry, and took steps which resulted in his entering Regent's Park College as a student in 1859. The brother Frank followed his example in due course, and is now a pastor at Ramsgate.

With diligence and thoroughness in study John combined an earnest and continuous exercise of his preaching gifts; with the result that before he could complete his four years' course he had received and accepted the pastorate of the church at Bontport-street, Barnstaple. Here he worked ardently, and with much acceptance, for four and a half years. Under its young and active pastor the congregation flourished; a chapel debt was extinguished, the Bible-classes were singularly successful, and the prayer-meetings are described as "unique" in spiritual power. At Barnstaple Mr. Wood married a wife who was a true helpmeet in his work.

His next sphere of service was the wider one of City-road Chapel, Bristol. He was not yet out of his twenties, and it was feared by some that he was too young for such an important charge. These misgivings soon vanished when Mr. Wood had fully entered on the duties of his sacred office, and there followed a happy, fruitful pastorate of seven years. Bristol affords an ample field for the play of energy and consecrated zeal, and these were not wanting on Mr. Wood's part. The burden of the Lord was upon him; he spoke straight from a heart that knew the needs of humanity, and a head well stored with revealed truth. There were many signs following—crowded congregations, definite conversions, and an increase of spiritual life in the church that showed itself in aggressive work on behalf of the neglected and destitute. A commodious mission-hall was built, and the debt on the church was wiped off.

In view of the prosperity thus indicated, it will easily be understood that the advances made to Mr. Wood by the church worshipping in Holloway-road, London, were by no means welcome to the Bristol friends. The Metropolis, however, asserted its charm, and in 1874 Mr. Wood began a pastorate at Upper Holloway which has now lasted fifteen years. During that time blessing has continued to attend the labours of this devoted man of God. The membership of the church has been more than quadrupled. A debt of £4500 has been removed, and the church has been considerably enlarged. The neighbourhood is one that affords plenty of scope for work among the unchurched masses, and Mr. Wood's flock, under his stimulating ministry, has taken its full share in that work.

The secret of Mr. Wood's ministerial power may well be found in the words of a friend, who knows him intimately, and who has said: "He expounds the Scriptures, proclaims the Gospel, and lives the life he teaches." He is especially strong in exposition, and that of so thorough a kind that one short Epistle served as the theme of his Sunday morning preaching for the space of a whole year. Devotion to pulpit duty does not prevent him from equally assiduous attention to the important work of pastoral visitation, a branch of church work somewhat neglected in London, we fear. Though it would be difficult to find a more intelligent, informing, and practical ministry, we have never heard any whisper of doubt, as to Mr. Wood's fidelity to the orthodox evangelicalism that seems to be going out of fashion in many quarters.

Shortly after coming to London, he lost his wife, and a like bereavement has since fallen to his lot; so that by sorrowful experience at least he is well qualified to minister comfort to those to whom the chances and changes of this mortal life bring burdens hard to be borne.

Not only as a pastor, but also as a mission preacher, Mr. Wood has recently had the joy of seeing fruit of his labour. At two missions held in provincial towns a large number have come forward professing conversion.

Though he has not catered for a wider publicity than the bounds of his special sphere, Mr. Wood's voice is a welcome one on London platforms. He was elected President of the London Baptist Association in 1885, and he also serves his denomination as a member of its missionary committee. But his cast of thought, and his devotional tone of address, fit him peculiarly for the quiet persistent work of the Christian pastorate, in which department, we trust, he has yet a long and increasingly successful part to play.

Letters to the Editor.

"SABBATH BREAKING."

Dear Sir,—I am living in a part of the Continent where Sabbath desecration has assumed terrible dimensions. I am fully persuaded of the absolute necessity of the sanctification of God's day, but no less of the paramount obligation of the preaching of the Divine Gospel. In particular as to travelling of any kind on the Sabbath I am constantly endeavouring to enforce upon myself, upon my fellow-men and fellow-Christians, that the day is "the Lord's" and not our own, and that for pleasure or profit, or even for mere convenience, travelling is not permissible. But it has, on the other hand, thus far been my conviction that, just because the day is the Lord's, the use of any lawful means, and in particular of any means of locomotion, bonâ fide for the work and in the service of God, is quite justifiable, if and so far as the work cannot be otherwise effected with a reasonable degree of comfort. Let "holiness unto the Lord" be written on the "very bells of our horses," and on every railway train. Then shall we not go far astray. The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof.

I protest with all my might against pleasure trains on the Sabbath, and against all unnecessary traffic of any kind; but surely I cannot before God or man be held responsible for the abuse of what in proper limits and under given circumstances is not sinful in itself. Ought we of an evening to shut up our places of worship because the same gas that enables us to serve our Master is probably at the very same hour abusively employed in illuminating a hundred filthy places? Let us not be "righteous overmuch," but rather follow the Apostle's God-given advice, to "ask no questions for conscience' sake." God lets his sun and moon shine on Sundays as well as on week-days, but if, by the aid of that light, men perpetrate dark crimes, God is not therefore the author nor the abettor of sin.

I allow that if we are to run really necessary trains on the Lord's Day—if we are to have light in our churches and chapels, and in our homes, the consequence will be that some officials may be limited in their enjoyment of the day of rest, but the inevitably necessary evil may be alleviated by an easy change of hands; and even should directors of public works or conveyances decline to be considerate or merciful, the fault cannot be laid at the door of the individual Christian. Good medicine may be so used as to poison an individual, but the chemist gave it for healing and not for killing.

What heavy and repulsive labour was required of the priest and Levite even on the Jewish day of rest. Indeed, they "profaned the Sabbath," and yet they are pronounced "blameless," because what they did, they did unto the Lord. And shall not the Christian minister, who works harder on the Sabbath than on any other day, be blameless, if, reluctantly but of necessity, and as unto the Lord, he uses such lawful means as he finds at hand to "go into all the world" preaching the Gospel? I think he would be free of blame, even if he were "under Jewish limitations," which he is not.

A Christian friend of mine, a veterinary surgeon, a lay preacher, will do any amount of travelling or labour on the Sabbath to save the limb or life of ox or horse, and he maintains that this is his bounden duty before God and man; but he will not travel one mile to save an immortal soul or visit a sick brother. Surely this is not Christian logic!

To pull an ox out of a pit would require the hard labour of many men, from which one might well shrink on the Lord's Day; but Christ takes it for granted, approvingly, that on the Jewish Sabbath Day it would be done "straightway." It could not have been very edifying to see the man of Bethesda pool dragging his bed on the Sabbath Day, and, really, after he had waited thirty-eight years, he might, with a word of encouragement, well have been left one single day more. The blind born man, too, might, without any pain or measurable inconvenience, have been told to wait till the Sabbath was over; but such was not the mind of Jesus, and, though the Pharisees grumbled and called Him a Sabbath-breaker, He healed both the one and the other straight off at once. Surely there are lessons here for us to learn.

So then, whilst pleading most earnestly for the sanctity of the Lord's Day, both for all the world and for Christians in particular, I submit that it is not consistent with Christ's practice, nor with the Christian's working orders, nor with the liberty of the Gospel, to attempt to put a yoke on the neck of "T. B.," or any other disciples that are anxious to serve the Lord. Dietenik.

MRS. BOOTH.

Dear Sir,—Many of your readers will like to hear something authentic of this dear servant of God.

I went to Clacton-on-Sea to visit her on Saturday last. She is staying at a house which has been used by the Salvation Army as a Convalescent Home. It is in a very quiet place close to and looking over the sea, and distant from the town.

Mrs. Booth is looking fairly well, considering her long and painful illness. She is moved from room to room, and occasionally into the open air, and this is all she is equal to. If it were wished to remove her to town she evidently would not be able to bear the journey. Her suffering is constant and acute, and is intensified by sleeplessness, rendering narcotics indispensable.

Her daughter, Mrs. Booth-Tuckers is in constant loving attendance upon her, besides a faithful and experienced nurse. Mrs. Booth-Clibborn also has lately arrived from Paris to wait upon her mother.

The disease is making steady and certain progress, and is beyond the reach of human skill. Prayer is going up to God from tens of thousands for his aefflicted servant. Will your readers pray that as her day so may her strength be, and that she may continue to realise in all its fulness the sense of 2 Cor. iv. 16—18 and v. 18?—Yours faithfully, T. A. Denny.

MADAGASCAR.

Sir,—In The Christian of October 25 you take exception to certain items in our memorandum of association—viz., those relating to the cultivation of opium and the liquor traffic. I am authorised to assure you that this syndicate has no intention whatever to attempt to introduce either opium or alcohol into Madagascar.

The memorandum of association was drawn up by our solicitors in a purely business spirit from commercial reports laid before them.

The names of my directors are of themselves a sufficient guarantee that though we are a purely commercial syndicate, yet the true interests of Madagascar will be carefully studied by my board.

Your obedient servant, A. J. G. Anson,
Secretary to the Madagascar Mercantile and Development Syndicate, Limited.

Personalia.

Lord Radstock left London on Friday last for Wiesbaden, en route for India. His lordship's permanent address in England is now Mayfield, Woolston, Southampton.

Rev. E. B. Savage.—We are glad to learn from a telegram from Melbourne, published in the daily papers on Monday, that the report which was recently brought to Thursday Island of the murder of Rev. E. B. Savage, of the London Missionary Society, by the natives in South-eastern New Guinea, has happily proved to be untrue.

Rev. S. A. Selwyn, vicar of St. James's, Hatcham, recently placed himself at the disposal of the Church Missionary Society with a view to temporary work on the West Coast of Africa. Having obtained leave of absence from the Bishop of Rochester, he will sail in December for a five months' mission with a view to quicken and deepen spiritual life in the churches at Sierra Leone and Lagos.

Dr. F. W. Baedeker writes from Moscow, November 1:—Both my interpreter and myself, after repeated attacks of the Kaukasian fever, found it expedient to discontinue, for a time, the sad yet interesting work in the prisons, and to rest awhile. We parted at Rostow-on-Don; he for his home near Krementschug, I for St. Petersburg. If the Lord is pleased to restore strength, I hope yet to go on with the work in parts of the Baltic Provinces and in Poland. Pray for us!

Dr. Pierson is expected to land at Liverpool to-morrow (Saturday), and the same evening a united representative meeting for prayer and Christian greeting will be held in Gordon Hall, Blackburn-place, at seven o'clock. Dr. Pierson will preach twice on Sunday, and on Tuesday will deliver an address at a public missionary meeting in Great George-street Chapel. Next day, he will leave for Edinburgh, where the Central Council have a very full programme awaiting. Earnest prayer is asked for all these engagements.

THE GAELIC SERVICES in London, under the auspices of the Caledonian Christian Club, are meeting with increasing appreciation, and there is evidence of good being effected through their instrumentality. Last Sabbath afternoon, Rev. John McIntosh, Free Church minister of Fort William, N.B., preached in Gaelic, in the Whitfield Presbyterian Church, Drury-lane. The attendance was large. The sermon was based on Ps. xc. 16, 17, and the lessons of the passage were enforced with beautiful simplicity and unaffected eloquence.

PRISONS AND PRISONERS.—On Wednesday, last week, Mr. Charles Cook delivered his very instructive lecture on "The Prisons of the World" in the Metropolitan Tabernacle. Mr. Spurgeon presided, and the spacious building was crowded from floor to ceiling. At the noon prayer-meeting on Monday, at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-steet, Mr. Cook intimated that as a result of his lecture he had received a number of applications from ex-convicts, some of whom he would much like to help into honest courses. One poor fellow, who had been ten times convicted, having left prison with a bad character, was not entitled to any assistance from the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society. In another case the ex-convict could get no help from English societies because his criminal life was spent in France. These two men both pleaded for work, and Mr. Cook asked for prayers on their behalf, as he believed that a hand of pity and aid should be stretched out to them.

rayer-meeting Testimonies.

the central noon prayer-meeting, Alders-tc-street, several very interesting testimonies ve recently been given. On one occasion Mr. HN WILSON, an evangelist labouring amongst e brickmakers at Southall Green, said:—

"I have been engaged for fifty-four years in mperance and religious work. I am the son a drunkard, and of the best of mothers, but pharisee of the strictest sort. She thought eryone must pass through the church porch, they could not be converted. One Sunday orning I left my father's cottage; there was furniture, no bed for my mother to lie on, food. As we sat on the brick floor, the ings all having been sold up on the Saturday, e said: 'John, I can't shed another tear. hey are all dried up. But God lives.'

"A few yards from the door I met an angel mercy. She was a very timid woman, but ad the love of Christ in her heart. She said me, 'John, will you come to the class with e this morning?' I was off to lead twenty oung men to break the Sabbath; they were all aiting at the bottom of the village. But now felt heart-broken. What did it? The oman's pathetic, sympathetic address. I said my heart, 'That woman cares for my soul.' Her lip trembled, and there were tears in her yes. I walked down the street with her, past ny twenty companions, and into the chapel. I ad been under conviction of sin as a lad for ears. Before the meeting began I found eace. I dropped on my knees and prayed, O Lord, if Thou wilt save me, I'll serve Thee s long as I live.' I believe in being 'properly aved'—that is, that a sinner must deal face o face with God. That morning I found eace. My first and deepest anxiety was about ny father and mother. I went home; my first vords were, 'Mother, God has saved my soul.' She knew that I had been to the Primitive Methodist Chapel; she saw me pass by with e lady. She replied, 'My son, I had rather have followed thee to thy grave than for thee to get connected with such a set.'

"My first resolve was to erect a family altar. Mother showed her hostility, father submitted. Father was saved first, and soon afterwards was found dead in bed by my mother's side, and I know he's safe in glory.

"I knew that I was saved to work. I had had no education, except a little gained at the parish school and from some Roman Catholics. When I got converted the priest went to the Earl of Shrewsbury, and asked him to turn me out of the village. The Earl said, 'As long as John Wilson conducts himself well, I shall stand by him.' I felt I must prepare some addresses, and get to work. So I bought a three-penny copy-book, and got some texts, and wrote down some thoughts. One day father found my copy-book and wrote under my first sermon, in pot-hook style, 'My son, fear God and keep his commandments.' I was greatly encouraged by this, and soon after my father got converted. My mother was not saved for some years after. Her last words were, 'God bless thee, my lad.' I had found her a home, and tried to make her comfortable. She did not say then, 'Sorry you've got connected with such a set.' I began preaching a bit. I did not wait for sanction of Conference; I felt I had got something to say, and must say it.

"I felt for that village. How I did feel for those companions of mine. If a man's faithful he will have to pass through the fire. The world will make him smart for it. God put me through the crucible early, and it did me a lot of good. I had just got work in the paper mill for six shillings per week, one shilling a day. When my first fortnight's money was due the men said, 'Thou'lt have to pay thy footing, and stand treat round the mill with thy first money.' 'What dost thou say?' I replied. 'My mother has denied herself, and got into debt, to provide me with food to make me strong for my work. I'll take my first money home to my mother.' 'Then thou'lt smart for it.' They got a pole, and made me ride across it as on horseback; one man took a hand on each side, and as they carried me round the mill the men beat me with sticks. After going twice round they asked me, 'What do you say now?' 'I am of the same mind,' I replied. 'I shall still stick to my mother.' Then they carried me round again twice. What cut me up most was that the foreman of the mill, who was a professing Christian, and by a word might have delivered the lamb out of the paws of the bears, took his hat and coat and walked away to his home. When they stopped again they asked, 'How now?' I answered, 'Of the same mind.' While they were beating me I saw such a sight—I saw Jesus on the cross. There He was, and did not open his mouth. In my heart I said, 'Blessed Jesus! I can die for Thee.'

"They all left me after my reply. God gave me a great victory that day, and a good start in my fifty-four years' mission work. In a few weeks my wages went up to a guinea. Through the Earl of Shrewsbury, the Earl of Lichfield appointed me a messenger in the General Post Office. God has taught me that He delights to honour faithfulness in his servants. Christian women! take up your cross for Jesus. Where should I have been to-day if it had not been for that faithful, timid woman? Don't wait for instruction or authority, or the impression will wear off. The best way to proceed is to get certified on your knees that the way is right, and go ahead."

Another day an evangelist, who had been holding a Gospel mission in a Midland town, narrated the following incident:—At the close of a Sunday afternoon meeting for men only he spoke to a man whom he noticed with several war medals on his breast, and in addition the Victoria Cross. On inquiring as to his spiritual state the young pensioner, every inch a soldier in appearance and manner, replied that he was all wrong. He had been an earnest Christian when up the Nile with Sir Garnet Wolseley, but he had backslidden. That day he was worse than ever; he had just had a quarrel with his wife, and had resolved that he would not go back, but would re-enlist, or do something to get away from home. The difference had arisen concerning his wife's relatives. The evangelist in the course of conversation inquired if he had any children. "Yes," he said, "I have a little baby twelve months old." "You do still love your wife don't you; notwithstanding the quarrel? and your little baby, too?" Brushing away the tears from his eyes, he admitted that he did indeed. Before long, the two were kneeling together in prayer, the soldier completely broken down. On rising, his newly-found friend inquired, "Of course, you are going back home?" "Oh, yes, I must; but it's very hard." Seeing his difficulty, the evangelist asked if he would like him to go with him. On receiving a hearty assent, they started out, and soon reached the cottage. On knocking and entering, they found the poor wife sitting at her lonely cup of tea, with the baby lying on her knee. There was an embarrassing silence until the evangelist advanced to explain, saying, "Your husband has been to our meeting this afternoon. The Lord has blessed him very much, and he has come home to tell you that he has made up his mind to let bygones be bygones." The poor woman, in her sudden revulsion of feeling, gathered up her apron and burst into violent sobbing. The husband's eyes also were full of tears, and so were the peacemaker's. They knelt together at the throne of grace, and on rising a sweet and perfect reconciliation was effected. As the evangelist left the house, his heart was full of praise, his face, notwithstanding, showing signs of the deep emotion in which he had just been a happy sharer.

WORKING GIRLS IN LONDON.

THE annual report of the Homes for Working Girls in London is as inspiring in character as it is truly interesting in contents. Nine in number, the Homes are a successful endeavour to help those who help themselves. Since the first was opened, ten years ago, no fewer than 10,540 young girls who earn their own living in London have thus had the comforts of home provided for them, together with Christian protection and influence. The very foundation of this work is faith in the promises of God, so there is no anxiety as to carrying it forward, although, at times, the managers find themselves in straitened circumstances.

To be a bread-winner at sixteen is a condition hardly comprehended by many; but thousands of girls of that age have practically to earn their own livelihood. It is such that are received into the Homes, which are situate in various parts of the Metropolis. There is accommodation for 502 residents, who may have bed-room accommodation and full board for about 7s. per week. The girls form large family circles, and enjoy a real home. The atmosphere is decidedly Christian, and through the inmates a very wholesome influence is exerted upon the London girl community.

Residents who, through illness or failure of work, are unable to pay their way, are assisted so far as possible. We regret to learn that last year was a bad one as regards the employment of workwomen. It is pleasing to read that the Institution has friends who seem never to forget the toiling inmates. To girls who only get paid for work done, and who have no spare money, bank holidays are not always welcome. Kind and influential supporters of the Home not only remember this fact, but also the temptations of "lazy days," and year by year invite the girls to spend the bank holidays at their mansions and country residences. Other occasional treats were also experienced by many during the year, and while the girls enjoyed themselves, those who interested, instructed, and benefited them, reaped not a little satisfaction. An English and Foreign Women-Servants' Institute meets the need of foreign young women who come to England in search of domestic employment.

There are many ways in which friends may help this good work. Details will be found in the report, copies of which can he had on application to Mr. John Shrimpton, Westminster Chambers, 3, Victoria-street, S.W.

THE JEWISH CONVENTION.—We are glad to hear that over 2600 copies have been ordered of the recent Mildmay Jewish Convention report, about to be published by Messrs. J. F. Shaw & Co. We anticipate much blessing to Israel from the increased interest and prayer likely to be evoked by the perusal of this little volume.

PARIS EXHIBITION.—During the Paris Exhibition the Pure Literature Society made a grant of a hundred thousand "L'Ami de la Maison" and "Rayon de Soleil" to be distributed chiefly to the country people returning to the provinces after visiting the Exhibition. The workers report that the papers were eagerly and gratefully received.

THE CONGO.—In connection with the American Baptist Mission, on May 25 forty-nine converts were baptized at Banza, Manteke, and an additional twenty a fortnight later. At other stations occupied by the American Baptist Union, the good work is progressing. Fifteen new missionaries arrived on the Congo during May. The Missionary Herald of late has testified that the English Baptists also are greatly encouraged by the blessing which is being vouchsafed to their labours.

The Book World.

THE PASTOR'S WIDOW AND HER SON. 6d. Houlston & Sons. A story for the young, translated from the German. The purpose is to show that "all things work together for good" to them that lovingly trust in God. The style is essentially simple.

A new and cheaper edition of Rev. R. H. Lundie's "Memoir" of ALEXANDER BALFOUR is published by Messrs. Nisbet & Co. (2s. 6d.). Business men, young and old, may derive great profit from the perusal of this eminently readable biography of Liverpool's honoured Christian merchant and philanthropist.

THE SLEEPERS AWAKENED. By Alfred E. Knight. 1s. Houlston & Sons. A story of progress from the darkness of infidelity to the light of Gospel knowledge and faith. The life and death of a little boy are shown to have had convincing power upon an irreligious artist and an atheist lecturer. The pages have a pathetic interest from first to last.

THE MASTER'S SMILE, AND OTHER POEMS. By Cecilia Havergal Grant. 1s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. A choice little volume of verse, by a sister of Francis R. Havergal. In Part 1 the pieces are exclusively religious, but a true Christian spirit runs through Parts 2 and 3, entitled, "Flower Smiles" and "Smiles from Childhood." The last piece, "A Maiden's Story," is full of lofty teaching. Mrs. Grant's book is a worthy companion to those that endear "F. R. H." to Christian readers.

"BENEDICITE," AND OTHER POEMS. By R. Wilton, M.A. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co. To amplify in verse a half-inspired poem, such as the ancient Christian Canticle, would, in most versifiers, seem the height of presumption; but Mr. Wilton's past productions justify him in the attempt. He brings to his work a rich imagination, a tuneful ear, a practised pen; above all, a spiritual mind, and a heart fixed, like the Psalmist's, on the King of Glory. Some of the shorter pieces are gems, while many will appreciate the elegant translations of Latin verse by G. Herbert, Cowley, and Spencer.

The second of a series of Manuals descriptive of the London Missionary Society's work in different fields has been issued by Messrs. John Snow & Co. (2s.). It is The Story of the Amoy Mission, and is entitled CHRIST OR CONFUCIUS, WHICH? The writer is Rev. James MacGowan, who has himself had nearly thirty years of experience in China. During this period he has baptized hundreds of native Christians, and we doubt not that his story, which is graphically written and one of surpassing interest, will be the means of inspiring some with the desire to go forth to the holy work of preaching the Gospel to the Chinese, so that great multitudes may be led to put their trust in the Christ, in whom alone they can find that true and lasting peace which Confucius is unable to give.

CHARLES HENRY VON BOGATZKY. By Rev. John Kelly. 5s. Religious Tract Society. The author of "The Golden Treasury" is known to innumerable English as well as German readers. No German classic has had so extensive a circulation, and the current English adaptation still holds its own among books of its class. This account of Bogatzky's life and work is based on his autobiography, and forms a deeply interesting and important chapter in eighteenth century religious history. Bogatzky was a lay evangelist as well as a voluminous writer. In view of the great development of lay evangelism during recent years, these pages, which abound in illustrative quotations from Bogatzky's books, suggest many practical lessons to Christian workers of to-day.

CHARLES STANFORD: Memoirs and Letters. Edited by his wife. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. The only feeling of regret we have in connection with this book is that there is not more of it. As a preacher, and as a man, Dr. Stanford was one of the élite of the élite—a choice spirit thrice refined, and those who knew him in public or in private would have welcomed a detailed story of his life. With the somewhat scanty materials at her disposal, Mrs. Stanford has, however, furnished a charming outline view of her husband, sufficient to enable most readers to fill up the picture. We hope in an early issue to give a portrait and sketch of Dr. Stanford's life, based on this volume, which, in the meantime, we command to all who love to read of noble service for Christ nobly done in the face of physical difficulties that would have quenched the spiritual life of a less heroic soul.

GRACIOUS WORDS AND GLORIOUS WORKS. By Captain Dawson. 6d. and 1s. Shaw & Co., 48, Paternoster-row. A charming little book, and full of "points," as all Captain Dawson's writings are. The beautiful arrangement and Scriptural character of the matter will delight the Christian, and the anecdotes will interest even the careless.

ADDRESSES BY EDWARD THRING. 5s. T. Fisher Unwin. Seven addresses on education, all of an essentially practical character. They embody the counsels and warnings which, by culture and experience, the late Head Master of Uppingham School was eminently fitted to give. It is impossible to exaggerate the importance of some of the principles which are so ably illustrated in these very readable pages. An admirable portrait is prefixed to this second edition.

WHEN MOTHER WAS LITTLE. By S. P. Yorke. 3s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin. Many lessons to the young are here conveyed in a truly forcible manner. The daughter of a curate, who was for a time resident in town, and afterwards in the country, "Mother" made mistakes at times, and also got into trouble in her early childhood days. She here tells the tale for the entertainment and instruction of those who are now "little." Several illustrations adorn the book, in which there is not a dull page.

THE ACHIEVEMENTS OF YOUTH. By Rev. Robert Steel, D.D. T. Nelson & Sons. An admirable book to put into the hands of young people. Having pointed out, in an eloquent introduction, that to a large extent great movements have originated with the young, the author rehearses in detail the achievements of youthful writers, painters, musical composers, statesmen, scientists, linguists, military commanders, and divines. The list is remarkably long and strong, and does not exclude living men. We can hardly conceive a better spur and encouragement to youth than these inspiring pages.

MY LIFE IN BASUTO LAND. By Eugène Casalis. Translated from the French by J. Brierley. 5s. Religious Tract Society. This is a very welcome addition to missionary literature. It describes in picturesque style the planting of Christian Missions among the Basutos fifty years ago, under the auspices of the Paris Missionary Society. The author's early life is invested with much charm, while his pioneering work in South Africa is graphically delineated. Writing as a septuagenarian, M. Casalis recounts how, having entered at the age of twenty on a course of life in which he expected only perils, opposition, and the minimum of success, he found it, on the contrary, to be a path strewn with mercies, deliverances, and at times full of joy. The original, Mes Souvenirs, has already gone through several editions, and we trust this excellent translation will be equally popular and useful.

VOX DEI: The Doctrine of the Spirit as it is set forth in the Scriptures of the Old and Testaments. By R. A. Redford, M.A., LL.B. 6s. James Nisbet & Co. By the doctrine of the Spirit, in this somewhat elaborate work, is meant principally the doctrine of His agency. The aim of the author, by continuous and consecutive induction from the sacred records, is to show that the agency of the Spirit permeates the whole of Revelation, and that this is the ever-present moving power in all gracious experience and inspired testimony. It is also pointed out that the Inspiration due to the Spirit of God has great latitude of meaning—sometimes taking the form of intellectual illumination, skill in handicraft, &c., as well as prophesying and the other gifts and graces directly spiritual. As the result of the survey, the evidence of Scripture, from the earliest times onwards, is conclusively in favour of the personality of the Spirit. The action described is that "of intelligence"—"the action of God." We cannot say that this work betrays any particular marks of originality. The conclusions arrived at may be summed up under the usual headings of the ordinary and extraordinary operations of the Spirit. Nor do we ourselves see very well how it can be otherwise. The work of the Holy Spirit is the sole spring of the religious life of all God's people. And herein we see his ordinary operation. In addition there has been his extraordinary work—i.e., the special inspiration and teaching and authorisation of certain individuals, which, in the present dispensation, takes the form of the baptism of power. While commending this work on the whole, we should have preferred to have seen the sovereignty and elective character of the Holy Spirit's operation more distinctly marked.

MY STRONGHOLD OF LOVE. By Rev. Geo Everard. Religious Tract Society. Words of g cheer to the suffering and sorrowful. The the is trust in God, from a consideration of which derived many truly helpful thoughts for da days.

THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK TO THE UNIVERSI AND COLLEGES OF OXFORD. Henry Frowde. revised edition of a very useful manual. Here just the information an intending student nee the explanations being such as will also have peculiar interest to a wider circle of the communi

BEYOND THE STARS. By Thomas Hamilt D.D. 3s. 6d. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark. This a new edition of an attractive book. In writi on "Heaven: its inhabitants, occupations, a life," the author has come after many who ha tried to give us glimpses of the unseen. Thou he has not followed the extravagant speculations most as to "the better land," he has certainly be tempted occasionally to advance ideas for whi we know of no "Thus saith the Lord."

YOUR COMFORTER: Chapters for the Your on the Work of the Holy Spirit. By Rev. J. Lilley, M.A. The Religious Tract Society. T small work is tenderly and simply written, and well adapted for the end in view. There are few ha words in it, and the few there are have their meani carefully elucidated. Each chapter is a sermonet bringing before the young, in an earnest and devo spirit, some aspect of the work of the Divi Comforter. There is no trace of the banef teaching of "modern thought." Every page intensely evangelical, and characterised by fervo and direct dealing. We hope the sale of this wo may be large, and that many young people may led to read and ponder its choice pages.

LASSERRE'S VERSION OF THE GOSPELS. Duri the past twelve months, M. Henri Lasserre h been waiting at the Vatican, in a vain endeavour induce the Pope to permit him to give his n famous version once more freely to the people France. It is understood that he has receiv many soft words, but infallibility could hardly expected to contradict itself three times in t years. From an advertisement in our columns, may be seen that our enterprising neighbou Messrs. Bagster, have obtained a supply of the e quisitely got-up illustrated edition, which they a selling at a little over half price. All the ag have united in adorning this version of the Gospe —which is perhaps the most richly illustrated ed tion ever published.

AU PAYS DES TÉNÈBRES. Par Madame Saillens. Paris: Librairie Fischbacher, 33, Rue Seine. A truly excellent account of the fir Christian mission to the Congo—the Livingsto Inland Mission, in behalf of which Dr. and M Grattan Guinness have done so much. It is a sto of devotion and sacrifice, and will, we trust, greatly blessed to the Christians of France. Th pages tell of heroic deeds in the name of Chris and an eloquent literary style is supported b twenty well-executed engravings. As the regio over which (now under the auspices of the Amer can Society of Baptist Missions) the work extend is bounded by territory belonging to France, ther is reason to expect a lively interest in this wor across the English Channel. We rejoice to lear that M. de Brazza, Governor of the French Cong is friendly disposed towards Protestant missions.

TEMPERANCE HISTORY. By Dawson Burn D.D. Part i. 2s. National Temperance Publica tion Depôt, 33, Paternoster-row. A consecutiv narrative of the rise, development, and extensio of the Temperance Reform. Four quarterly par will complete the work, which will certainly be classic in the literature of the temperance move ment. After a lucid introductory chapter on th dominion of strong drink and the antiquity o total abstinence, the author sketches the birth o the temperance movement in 1826, and traces i progress down to 1842. The pages are throughou as suggestive of present-day lessons as they are fu of facts, of which the generality of total abstaine have only a vague idea. The reader is ever an anon cheered by detailed records of the deeds o great benefactors of the race in a generation that now past; and while the widespread character o the drink curse is proved by sad evidences of i havoc in many lands, abundant evidence is given o high-souled endeavours on all hands to grapp with the evil in the name of Christ. The succe sive parts will present the subject in phases o ever-increasing interest. We trust the work wi find many readers, and do much to help on th great movement of which it is so admirable chronicle.

EARLY BRITAIN. By A. J. Church. 5s. T. Fisher Unwin. This addition to the "Story of the Nations" series is no dry statement of antiquated facts, but a lucid and entertaining narrative of a very interesting chapter of our national history. Professor Church gives from many sources just what most of us desire to know about Britain when first heard of, and when afterwards overrun in turn by Romans, Saxons, and Danes. The volume presents in a well-digested form the cream of many large works, and there is throughout a careful discrimination between legend and historical fact. The dawn of Christianity in the country is a quite charming section.

THE EXPOSITOR. The November issue of this esteemed monthly contains some articles of sterling value. No one can help being struck, however, with the glaring incongruity subsisting between Dean Chadwick's article utterly discrediting Wellhausen's manipulation of Old Testament history, and Rev. George Adam Smith's contribution in glorification of that essentially destructive method. To those who have been unsettled through reading "advanced" works, we commend Dean Chadwick's very able exposure. Assumptions and inconsistencies are ruthlessly laid bare, and the vaunted "scientific" value of the "higher criticism" shown to be little besides a hollow pretence. Mr. George Adam Smith's article, on the other hand, enlarges with evident sympathy upon the conjectures of men whose attitude gives a distinct denial to the belief that the Old Testament is the work of holy men who "spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." He has nothing but praise for a writer who denies to David all but one of the Psalms! His article is anything but helpful to expositors of the Bible. Not at all backward in finding fault with the Scriptures, scholars of this class show no lack of confidence in themselves. They do not profess to see daylight as yet, however, for Mr. Smith is impelled to exclaim: "How the problems of the Pentateuch increase as you read each new attempt to solve them!" Our prescription is that attempted solutions be laid aside for the present, and that earnest attention be given to the Pentateuch in the light that it has for ages been studied, as indicating the beginning of the ways of God in relation to the human race.

WELLS GARDNER, DARTON AND CO.

The publications of this house include several bright story-books. Younger folk will enjoy BERT, by Janie Brockman, and EVIE, by E. G. Wilcox. ROBIN'S PROMISE, by Emily Grace Harding, is founded on fact, and to a considerable extent taken up with dialogue respecting a drunkard. RIGHT SIDE UP, by Janie Brockman, is vivaciously written, and intended for the entertainment of children. A FLOCK OF FOUR, and QUITE UNEXPECTED, by Ismay Thorn, have heroes in common. JAPANESE JINGLES, another book for children, is written and illustrated by Kathleen Lucas.

CHRISTMAS CARDS, &c.

Messrs. Birn Bros., 27, Finsbury-street, E.C, have brought out cards and books in many designs suited for presentation at this season of the year. Among the books are some excellent monotint works, including, "My Shepherd: I shall not want," with choice verses; and Longfellow's "Psalm of Life," a specially creditable artistic production. "The Path to Glory" is in colours, as also is "Busy Little Bairns," a children's book, exhibiting little ones amusing themselves in a variety of ways in different seasons of the year. The cards comprise some choice specimens. Among the best are a number of choice floral designs, with spaces in which to fill in texts and mottoes.

Messrs. Hildesheimer & Faulkner, 41, Jewin-street, have in some respects eclipsed their former successes in the publication of illustrated books and cards. The Christmas and New-Year cards include models of shoes and hat boxes, kittens and puppies. The less ingenious designs are even more artistic. Many of these are by Ernest Wilson, others by Miss Alice L. West, Mr. Fred. E. Weatherley, Mr. Charles G. Noakes, and Mr. H. H. Couldery. Some of the books are very beautiful. "Happy Childhood," in colours, and "Cradle Songs," in monochrome, will delight the young, as "The Shepherd's Daffodil" will likewise charm maturer folk. "Christ Stilling the Tempest," and "The Calling of Samuel," in monochrome, are interesting booklets on religious subjects.

The latest publications of Mr. J. E. Hawkins, 17, Paternoster-row, are some of them excellent. We would particularise "Alpine Summits," sepia drawings, with charming verses by Rev. Charles Fox; and "Sunlit Days," in varied tints, with poems by various authors. "Echoes of the Bells" is the title of a bell-shaped booklet. Small works include "Sowing" and "Reaping," in colours, and "Silver Linings behind Earth's Clouds." A beautiful little work is "Rest in the Lord," a daily text-book, with verses by Mrs. Pennefather and others.

By arrangement with Rev. John McNeill, Messrs. Nisbet & Co. begin this week to publish weekly, in pamphlet form, at a penny, a sermon by that eminent preacher.

THE "FRIEND OF MISSIONS" ALMANAC for 1890 is a very interesting wall sheet. Its various features show much care in compiling, the illustrations being attractive as well as suitable.

SPURGEON'S ILLUSTRATED ALMANAC. 1d. Passmore & Alabaster. In addition to texts of Scripture selected by Mrs. Spurgeon, this old acquaintance contains several articles by the revered pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, and others.

THE LIFE OF FAITH ALMANAC FOR 1890. Compiled by Rev. Evan H. Hopkins. Besides daily texts, this almanac contains some very suggestive Bible-readings on the name Jehovah and its compounds (Jehovah-Jireh, &c.). (Marshall Brothers.)

THE YEARLY BIBLE TEXT-BOOK FOR CHILDREN. By E. A. Pouget. G. Stoneman, 67, Paternoster-row. The texts are suggested by physical and natural history subjects (birds, mountains, &c.), and in finding them children will become familiar with the letter of Holy Writ.

The New Year Addresses published by the Sunday School Union, 56, Old Bailey, are:—To Sunday scholars, by Mrs. S. Harvey-Jellie; to elder scholars, by Rev. F. B. Meyer; to teachers, by Rev. E. A. Stuart; and to parents, by Rev. H. O. Mackey.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHER'S POCKET-BOOK (2s.) is a well-known yearly publication. It provides in small compass a diary, class register, and almanac, with other useful information.—THE INTERNATIONAL DAILY TEXT BOOK (4d.) is intended to be a daily companion for Sunday-school teachers and others who are studying the International Lesson. It can easily be carried in the vest pocket. (Sunday School Union.)

Among sheet almanacs for 1890 a high place, as an artistic production, must be given to THE CHURCH ALMANAC, published by F. Sherlock, 30 and 31, New Bridge-street, E.C. It gives views of the Cathedrals of England, and portraits of the bishops.—"THE FIRESIDE" ALMANAC, compiled by Rev. Charles Bullock, has been issued in two forms, one of them chastely coloured. 7, Paternoster-square, E.C.—THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ILLUSTRATED ALMANAC is remarkably cheap at a halfpenny. Sunday School Union, 56, Old Bailey.

Among recent small publications from Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling, are: LEAFLETS FOR LETTERS, packet 2, by Eva Travers Evered Poole. 6d. There are several copies of twelve leaflets, illustrating spiritual truths in verse. Some of the little poems are as chaste in style as they are truly beautiful in sentiment. Two booklets which deserve a wide circulation are: WHAT SHALL I DO? and SUNBEAMS FROM THE SHEPHERD PSALM, also from the pen of Mrs. Travers Poole. A second packet of SEA STORIES, by An Old Salt, will surely be welcome to workers among sailors.

MANCHESTER WAIFS. — A correspondent writes to say that, thanks to the devoted labours of Messrs Shaw and Kirlew, Mr. Alsop, Mr. Devine, and others, the Manchester streets are much freer of the boy and girl waifs than they were a few years ago.

CHILDREN'S HALL, WELLINGTON. — On Thursday last week, Dr. Cranage opened the new Children's Hall, at Wellington, Salop, the foundation-stone of which was laid in the summer by the Marchioness of Stafford. The Hall will be used exclusively for children's services, meetings for adults being held in the large "New Hall" adjoining.

THE NEED FOR CHRISTIAN TEACHING is often emphasised in quarters the least expected. Mr. John Kirk, speaking at a Ragged School Conference at Manchester, said that lately a pert little urchin scoffed at an address which was being delivered in a ragged school. On being questioned on the subject, he promptly replied: "Oh, my farver says there ain't no God."

MEETINGS OF MINISTERS.—The meetings of ministers for mutual help in the cultivation of the devout life, which have been held at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street, on the past four Friday afternoons, have been seasons of great spiritual helpfulness. On Friday last Rev. George Turner, of Westgreen, spoke on "The fellowship of Christ's sufferings." The meetings are to be continued week by week on Friday afternoons at three o'clock. The next subject for consideration is John xvii. Ministers of all evangelical denominations are invited.

"FROM EVERY QUARTER."

"They came to Him from every quarter."—MARK i. 45.

FROM every quarter they came to Him then,
Weary women and outcast men,
And maniacs writhing in Satan's thrall,
For virtue went out to heal them all.

From every quarter they come to Him still;
From peaceful valley and rocky hill,
From ice-bound caverns and islands bright,
As his servants hold forth the Gospel light.

From every quarter they'll come in that day,
When his children arise, and hasten away;
At the sound of his voice and the angel shout,
They shall enter his home to go no more out.

ANNIE M. ALLEN.

THE PREVALENCE OF GAMBLING.

LAST Lord's Day evening, Rev. Alfred Rowland, LL.B., preached a special sermon upon this subject at Park Chapel, Crouch End, N. It was based upon Isa. lxv. 11, 12 (R.V.), where a curse is pronounced upon them "that prepare a table for Fortune, and that fill up mingled wine unto Destiny." He referred to the rapid growth of the evil in its many forms, which is affecting all grades of society, and rending hearts and homes all over the country; and said that in the face of this Christians were bound to utter protest and warning. Numbers whom we should not suspect are being ruined through it, and he called upon all, in their places of business and their families, to use their influence against it. Addressing himself particularly to the young men present, he earnestly warned them to abstain from indulging in gambling of even the most seemingly innocent kind, because of the inherent vice of the practice itself. It leads its victim into the way of relying upon chance; it has a fearfully deteriorating effect upon character; it tends to other vices, and leads to all kinds of dishonesty and crime. Moreover, it is directly opposed to the laws that forbid covetousness and theft, and a violation of the command to love the Lord God with all our heart, and our neighbour as ourselves.

AN EAST-END BANQUET.—While the Lord Mayor was entertaining a distinguished company at the Guildhall on Saturday evening, a banquet was also being given to three thousand poor people of East London in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. This was the third ninth of November on which Mr. F. N. Charrington and his helpers have organised a "feast" for the poor simultaneously with the Lord Mayor's banquet for the rich, and Mr. Charrington intends to make it an annual institution. Each man and woman was given a bag containing a meat pie, a 1 lb. cake, and two apples, tea being provided ad libitum. Toward the cost the new Lord Mayor (Sir H. A. Isaacs) and Mr. Sheriff Knill each contributed five guineas. Brief addresses were delivered by Mr. Charrington, Captain Hamilton, and Mr. George Nokes, after which Professor Malden gave a lecture, illustrated by dissolving views, on "Our Colonies."

MISS SARAH ROBINSON, the soldiers' friend at Portsmouth, is making a very substantial addition to her machinery in the erection of a large Coffee Palace and Gospel Hall. She expects to have it opened in the end of March next. To help in raising the needed funds, Miss Robinson bravely undertook a tour of "A Thousand Miles in an Invalid Coach." The trip lay through some of the southern and central parts of England, and the story of the tour, in diary form, has been published by the tourist writer in a neat and singularly interesting pamphlet. Miss Robinson not only tells of her trials, reverses, and successes from the mission point of view, but throws in graphic and informing touches about many of the places visited. We have not seen a more entertaining pennyworth of reading for many a day. Copies of the little book can be procured from the Manager, Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth.

THE ROMAN CATHOLICS AND POOR CHILDREN.

By Dr. T. J. BARNARDO.

IT is a fact beyond question and dispute that numbers of miserable children, the offspring of parents one or both of whom have been at some time Roman Catholics, are to be found in the common lodging-houses, in brothels, in the casual wards, or pacing the weary streets of London night by night. Now, if it be asked, What are the Roman Catholics as a body doing for their rescue and deliverance? or, Is there one single rescue agent at work on behalf of the Roman Catholic party in London, to search out and to deliver them? the nature of my reply to the first question will presently appear to my readers; and in response to the latter, I know whereof I affirm, and I say, fearless of contradiction,

THERE IS NOT ONE.

Moreover, there never has been one. But only let me take steps to save these worse than orphan children from destruction of soul and body alike; let my nine or ten agents be out night and day, in all weathers, in the vilest company, encountering perhaps grave personal dangers; let me grope in the mire of the London gutters for the precious jewel of the young child's life, for the waifs and wastrels that have no friend or home; and I do so at my peril! For awhile the Roman Catholic party looks on apparently unmoved, but if I enclose in my rescue nets one single little one who in the remotest degree may have once been under the influence of the Roman Catholic Church, then all the powers of their hierarchy are brought to bear upon me, with the object of paralysing the hands outstretched to aid. All this, be it remembered, on the part of a Church which does not put forth so much as its own little finger in the only fashion that is really effective among the waifs of London, namely, to help and save by personal searches in the slums.

Owing to certain correspondence that I had some two years ago with Cardinal Manning, the Roman Catholics have been spurred on by very shame to open a Home for the reception of some of their own destitute waifs, and there is no doubt that if such cases actually apply at their door they are sometimes received. But no search agency is at work to seek them out and to rescue them. I have said that such cases applying at their doors are sometimes received; not always, for I know of several cases perfectly destitute, which were absolutely refused admission on the score of physical defects. But to make sure of immediate reception, the candidate has only now to say, "Oh, then I will go to Dr. Barnardo," and at once the door is opened and the entrance certain.

Yet this same Roman Catholic Church, which acts only when goaded on by sectarian jealousy, moves heaven and earth to nullify the work done by others in the great harvest field, and does not hesitate to resort to methods which, in the ordinary intercourse of life, would be stigmatised as underhand and dishonourable. My institutions, for example, have been surrounded with spies; my boys have been stopped in the street and questioned; some of them have been bribed with sweets or pence to visit certain houses in the Commercial-road and in the streets adjoining, where Roman Catholic agents, occasionally priests, endeavoured to draw from them all the information which was likely to further their ends. Acting upon the half-hints and imperfect evidence thus obtained with regard to the antecedents of certain children in the Homes, they then began to trace out the whereabouts of the relatives of boys and girls whom they had previously utterly neglected; and having established communication with such relatives, they endeavoured, by working upon their religious fears, to induce them to apply to me for the return of the children. Let me give two

EXAMPLES OF THESE TACTICS.

An unhappy woman, one of an abandoned class, whose little daughter I had rescued from a dreadful den fifteen months ago, called on me recently. Her dress, demeanour, and general appearance only too clearly betrayed the degradation of her daily life. I found that her present abode was a common lodging-house. There, in the course of conversation, she had happened to mention to a fellow lodger, an Irishwoman, that one of her children was with me. The next day that Irishwoman brought the poor creature a message from Father P——, on the Commercial-road, to the effect that he wished to see her. Accordingly, the woman, in the company of her Irish guide, visited the priest, who straightway inquired of her, in a stern and even menacing tone, if a child of hers was now in one of Barnardo's Homes. She replied, "Yes"; that when she and her child were starving, and none others would help them, I had taken in her little girl from the low house she then lived in, which house was at the time occupied solely by women of evil life; that the child had been with me for more than twelve months; that she had herself once since seen her girl, when she "looked like a lady," and was very, very happy. The priest sharply responded, "No matter for that. You must have her out." She remonstrated, but the priest angrily threatened her as to what would happen if her child was not immediately removed, and he concluded by authoritatively commanding her to communicate with me without delay, even telling her the form of words she was to employ when making demand for the return of her daughter. His vehement tones frightened her, and she returned to the wretched den in which she lived, unsettled in mind as to what she should do. There, however, she met another woman, whose boy I had also taken in, and who said she "didn't care a farthing for all the priests in the world"; so, after talking the matter over, the two women decided to resist the dictation of the priest, and to take the consequences. The poor abandoned mother thereupon herself came to me with the foregoing story, which she wound up with the words: "And I shan't never ask ye for the girl, and don't you never give her up to nobody!"

Two intelligent lads, one sixteen and the other nearly seventeen years of age, who had been inmates of our Institution for some time, were stopped in the street by Father B——, who accosted them with the words, "You are Catholics, are you not?" One of the lads said he didn't know, and the other said that he was not a Catholic, but he had heard that his mother was. "Oh, well, that is all the same!" said their interlocutor; "come along with me, I must speak with you." He entered a house hard by, followed by the lads. The latter were first supplied with eatables, and were then gently drawn into conversation about themselves. Having succeeded in thoroughly interesting the boys, Father B—— led them on into confidences bearing on the life of the Homes. Did they know, in particular, whether there were other Catholic boys in the Home? And then they were told what steps to take in order to find out what boys were Catholics. One of the lads was promised sixpence each for every name supplied to Father B——. And only after this little arrangement were the boys suffered to depart.

It so happened that both of these lads had work to do the next day which brought them into contact with myself. One of them was guilty of a fault for which, under ordinary circumstances, he might have expected to be punished. I merely, however, pointed out gravely and earnestly to the boy how wrongly he had acted, and how much his conduct grieved me. An hour afterwards his companion came and said that they both wished to speak to me, and then they told me the story which I have just narrated. The boys felt that I had been kind to them, and their consciences had been touched by a sense of their ingratitude in having consented to act as spies on the Institutions. So that plot came to naught.

What can be said of those who resort to such contemptible means as these two incidents furnish for the purpose of furthering what they profess to regard as a religious crusade?

A DEEPER DEPTH.

But, lower even than such pitiful methods, there is a deeper depth, which, I am sorry to say, can only be truthfully described as fraudulent, the nature of which experience has only too painfully taught me. A priest, backed up by a society, generally the "Catholic Truth Society," possessing plenty of money, which has been drawn from the wealthy Catholics of England for proselytising purposes, is resolved, say, on getting some child out of the Homes under my care, or out of some similar Institution. According to the law of Engla children born in wedlock are considered to be and are to be brought up in, the same religion their father, although a judge has recently ruled a case of mine that, if the father shall have d without appointing another guardian, the moth remains the guardian of the children, and in virtue her quality as guardian can bring them up in religion she chooses, provided of course that it c not be shown that the father desired the child be brought up as a Protestant, or took steps to th end during his lifetime. A great deal, from t legal point of view, may in such a case depe upon whether there is any proof of the child's ba tism by a Roman Catholic priest. If there is pr of such a ceremony, then the presumption is that was performed with the knowledge and consent the father, then living. But that such a presum tion is generally fallacious the following facts w show.

In the greater number of these cases the ch dren are the offspring of mixed marriages, t father being more frequently a Protestant, and t mother a Roman Catholic. In a very few instan the father is a sturdy hater of Romanism and its ways, but usually he is simply indifferent to t claims of personal religion, although he may hav smouldering distrust of Rome. The mother, the fore, knows right well that she dares not even m to the father the baptism of the child by a Rom Catholic priest. Accordingly she seeks counsel her priest—resorts to subterfuge, and bides h time. Then when the father is at work or out the way, she seizes the opportunity to carry t child off to some Roman Catholic chapel, where is forthwith baptized, and an entry duly made the register. The woman, of course, does not t her husband. Except the priest, nobody knows it, until by and by, in the event of the husban death, the child is found to have been forma entered as belonging to the Roman Catholic Chur Perhaps the child is admitted to the workhou There he is received as a baptized Romanist, a turned over to the Roman Catholic chaplain religious instruction. I know for a fact that great bulk of Rome's increase in these lands of rec years has issued from the workhouse doors in you and maidens who have been carefully instructed many years by the priest, and who, but for original deception, would have been BROUGHT UP PROTESTANTS.

If a child with such a history has been admitt to a Home like mine upon the plea of destituti the priest, as soon as he hears of it, takes acti measures to regain it for "the Church." T Roman Catholic newspapers begin in concert shriek out, "Our children are losing their faith articles appear in their monthlies; the Cardi Archbishop makes the matter the subject of pastoral directed against "Protestant prose tisers," the burden of which is, "Our Church is poor that without money we cannot hope to save our children their precious faith, or snatch them fr the hands of the proselytising Protestant wolves. ask for the gifts of the faithful!" Lady Clari J——, the latest pervert, and the Right Honou able Lord Fitz-Gibbon F——, whose family h been Roman Catholic for centuries, with ma others of the élite of the faith, hear or read t Cardinal's pastoral, and forthwith money begins flow. And now, with everything in readiness, active system of espionage, persecution, and pro cution is begun and maintained, the whole proce ings being cunningly entangled, for the edificati of the public, with that most delicate of all qu tions in an Englishman's mind—THE RIGHTS PARENTS; till under its disguise nearly all, exce the inner few who have traced the windings of t whole system, fail to recognise the stealthy steps a crafty, unscrupulous, and usurping ecclesiasti tyranny.

I have referred to the dishonest methods which a certificate of the baptism of a child the Roman Catholic Church may have been o tained, but I might use the word fraud in ever wider sense, to indicate the absolute recklessn of that Church as to whether moral or immoral, in order to accompli its ends. Lest my readers should judge me to haritable in preferring this indictment, let me their consideration of the following:—

ome few years ago I admitted, from the neighrhood of Bow Common, two little girls rescued n the custody of a mother of evil life. I had viously allowed an elder sister to be received our Servants' Registry. She did well in her place, until her wretched mother again naged to get hold of her, when she soon fell the deep slough of immorality. At the time n the application I am going to refer to was de, that sister was living, with her mother, an nly abandoned and shameful life. Early this r, formal application was made by the mother the return of her two younger children, who been in the Home at Ilford for two or three rs. I made a fresh investigation into the racter and life of the woman, and found it to as bad as before. Thereupon I steadfastly used compliance. The usual course was taken. writ of habeas corpus was issued; application s made by Roman Catholic counsel and solicitors behalf of this deeply-injured woman, whose hts, as a mother, had been so basely trampled on by me, and the case was brought before a dge in chambers. I put in affidavits to prove t this woman was not only living an immoral e, but that her conduct towards her children, t prior to their rescue by me, had been infamous! me of these revealed facts were of a terrible ture—so loathsome that I dare not dwell upon em here.

Spite of this evidence the Judge was not appantly much influenced by my affidavits, and the it was adjourned for a few days to give the other le time to reply. On the resumption of the hear, several ladies came forward, as did also the iest of the district in which this unhappy woman ed, to declare on oath that she was a person of formed character, and was now perfectly moral d respectable!! I, on the other hand, met this eposterous contention by producing fresh evince to show that within a few days prior to her pearing in Court she had been guilty of the same cious conduct. Even then I might not have succeded, had I not moved the Court of Chancery nder the Infants' Guardianship Act of 1886, which ves special powers for the removal of such women this from their positions as natural guardians of ildren and for the substitution of another as ther guardian or co-guardian. The latter motion as successful. The case was so scandalous that othing really could be urged against my application. The Judge forthwith granted it, and I have he two little girls still safe in my possession.

But the special point to which I desire to draw ttention is this: that there appeared in Court in upport of this woman's application several priests nd two religious sisters, with the mother herself, ho was newly dressed from head to foot in clothes rovided, of course, to enable her to act the part f the decent, demure but deeply-injured mother. Tet up to a few days of the Court sitting that oman had been living in the grossest immorality, nd this fact must have been known to all the rofessedly religious people who took her part, and ome of whom lived close to her! The priests of he neighbourhood, who of course know nothing, and ho, as everbody is aware, always go through their districts with their eyes quite shut, and who never et at the secrets of any life in the confessional, ifted up their hands in well-feigned horror at the nnouncement made in Court, and heard by them pparently for the first time, as to the real haracter of their curious client!

COMMENT IS NEEDLESS.

As much misunderstanding is evidently abroad as to my own action in cases where a relative, the legal guardian, has turned up and applied to me for the restoration of some child, I desire to say, once and for all, that I never absolutely refused to return such to the custody of really respectable poor people, even although I may have thought that the demands for such restoration were unreasonable, and in some cases not for the child's advantage. On such occasions I have, perhaps, temporised, in the interest of the little one. I have not unfrequently sought to influence the relatives in the direction of what I conceived to be the best interests of the child committed to my care. But if these relatives were respectable and decent (no matter how poor they were), and if they held firmly to the view they had adopted of disregarding the agreement made with me when the child was admitted, and of resuming its care, I have invariably yielded. No question of religion has ever prevented me from responding to the natural rights of a parent who was of respectable life and decent habits, and apparently animated by right feelings towards his or her offspring.

But whenever the demand has been to restore a child on any grounds, I care not what, to the custody of relatives who were criminal or immoral, or likely to exercise a corrupt or degrading influence over it, I have said, No. I am sure my readers would support me in this attitude if they could but realise the unutterably vile environments from which some of those children have been snatched, as from the very pit of corruption. Ah! if only they could but see for themselves the horrible scenes out of which some of the little children in question have been rescued, they could never forget the sight; it would be so burnt into their brain and memory that they could never afterwards look upon innocent children without there coming back upon them, with irresistible force, the memory of those noxious surroundings of the hapless little ones of the streets, from whose fate the curtain had been drawn aside, just for a moment's glimpse.

NO REAL CLAIM.

On the general question, however, it may also be asked me: "Yet if these children were really Roman Catholics before they came to you, have they not some claim for consideration on this score?" My reply is "Undoubtedly"; and any such claim, properly brought forward, would always be carefully attended to. But what are the real facts? In the great majority of these cases the mother or father, although perhaps nominally a Catholic—that is to say, at birth registered as a Roman Catholic—has not for years been under any kind of religious influence. The children were brought up in the same practically heathen state, without any religion whatever, the parent living either an immoral or criminal, certainly an utterly Godless and irreligious life. When I rescue a destitute child from such surroundings as these, it is generally after years of neglect. No one else had previously moved a step in the matter: all were apparently content that the child should grow up, like its surroundings, vile and degraded. I ask what moral claim can the priests of the Roman Catholic Church advance for the possession of such a child? They, like the priest and Levite in the Gospel story, have passed by on the other side all these years. They have not rescued it; they have taken no interest in it; in their supineness they have suffered it to live under the influence of the most degrading conditions; they have never sought to supply its wants, physical or moral, or to save it from continued suffering; they have never even tried to gather it under religious influences; while its relatives are probably still living the same corrupt life, unreached and untouched by any reforming agency. At this crisis in its history I have stepped in to rescue the child, and have effected that end as the result of, it may be, much anxiety and trouble, and not a little expense. I have done all this, not with a view to proselytise, for when a destitute waif applies to me, or when I seek such a child out in the lodging-houses, and follow it up, I know nothing whatever of its religion. Destitution is the sole precedent condition and raison d'être of my efforts. It is not until afterwards that perhaps it turns out that its mother or father may have been baptized a Roman Catholic. Yet I am asked in the name, alike of morality and of law, to surrender that child on the score of religion, when I know that the parent does not care one fig about religion; that the application against me has only been made in response to severe pressure put upon him or her by the priests; and when I know, moreover, that if I did return the child to its relative, it would be again subjected to the old dangers of corruption and misery. I ask any Christian reader of these pages, if, under these circumstances, I would be justified in tamely yielding compliance with such iniquitous demands?

I now ask the prayerful sympathy, co-operation, and support of all those whose hearts are loyal and true to our King. I await with composure the next steps, and may God defend the right!

THE SABBATH IN SWITZERLAND.—A Christian friend in Zurich, writing to Mr. Charles Hill, secretary of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association, gives a very doleful description of Sabbath desecration in hat canton. He says: "From morning till night—except during the hour of public worship—drums, gongs, trumpets resound in the streets; the steamers, the railway cars often cannot carry all those who go to them, and hundreds of coffee, beer, and wine shops resound with songs, laughter, and often quarrelling of their numerous visitors."

Evangelistic Notes.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has conducted a special mission at Bedford-street Chapel, Stroud. The services were largely attended and greatly blessed.

Mr. G. R. Cairns has held an eight days' mission at Mr. Crossley's Hall, Openshaw, Manchester. A large number of persons have professed conversion. Mr. Cairns asks prayer on behalf of a coming mission in another part of Manchester.

Mr. G. D. Shipley, assisted by his daughter, Miss Shipley, has been conducting evangelistic services in connection with the Paulerspury Congregational Church, which have been helpful to the church and instrumental in bringing many to spiritual decision.

Mr. O. L. Heatley, Wesleyan evangelist, has concluded successful missions at Adsborough, Hedging, Bathpool, and Guildford. Many have professed decision for Christ, and a goodly number of pledges were taken at Adsborough. Mr. Heatley is now conducting a mission at Rotherhithe.

Mr. Oscar Owers has concluded a ten days' mission at Burgh Heath, Banstead, which has been accompanied by much blessing, Christians having been greatly helped by his clear, faithful exposition of the Word, and sinners saved, by the power which accompanied his preaching of the Gospel.

Mr. J. B. Wookey is holding a ten days' mission at the People's Mission Church, "Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse. There were manifest tokens of Divine blessing at the first meeting on Sunday last. At the evening service hundreds remained to the second meeting, and at a comparatively late hour still seemed in no haste to leave.

St. Giles's Mission, Drury-lane.—During Messrs. Middleton and Hogben's mission here some 240 persons of all sorts have sought the Saviour, including over fifty returned convicts, and about forty lost women. The workers ask their fellow-Christians to rejoice with them over the most blessed outpouring every known during the thirty years existence of St. Giles's Christian Mission.

Mr. Joseph Clarke has completed a five weeks' mission at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end, receiving an almost unprecedented blessing on his labours. The inquiry-room after every meeting was well filled with anxious ones, many of whom found peace, and there were some very remarkable conversions. Not least in result was the professed conversion of all the young girls in Mr. Charrington's Rescue Home, where Mr. Clarke held a little service every morning during his stay.

Upper Holloway.—A very successful series of evangelistic services, conducted by Rev. R. Balgarnie, late of Scarborough, and Rev. John R. Wood, at Upper Holloway Baptist Chapel, was brought to a close on November 1. An earnest band of workers visited from house to house in the vicinity of the chapel with cards of invitation to the services during the week previous, and the large Lecture Hall was filled every evening. Over 130 publicly avowed their faith in Jesus Christ, and accepted Him as their Saviour and Lord, a large number being from the senior classes in the Sunday-school.

Bournemouth.—Rev. Thomas Cook has conducted a ten days' mission at the Punshon (Wesleyan) Memorial Church, Richmond Hill. As the days went by the interest increased, and a large number of people went into the inquiry-room. Justification by faith was clearly set forth, and the sectarian spirit studiously excluded. A meeting for the promotion of holiness was largely attended by members of the various churches of the town. The mission closed with a social gathering, which became an occasion for praise and prayer. Many testimonies were given as to benefits received, beyond those which had come under the immediate notice of the workers.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes.—Rev. Morley Wright, of the Congregational Church, Lewisham High-road, bears witness in a contemporary, to the value of the services of Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes as a mission preacher. He speaks of the pointed, spiritual, wholesome, and intensely practical character of Mr. Hallowes' preaching; of the real quickening of a large church thereby, and of great blessing among the families of his congregation. "Our mission," he observes, "has been an unmitigated good." We believe Mr. Hallowes was first inspired to this work by what is known as the Hastings Conference, and we pray that that fulness of the Holy Spirit, in which Mr. Morley Wright says he lives and labours, may abide upon him.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. George Warburton Weldon, M.A., vicar of St. George's, Bickley, has passed away. For many years he was editor of The Rock and incumbent of St. Saviour's, Chelsea, and one of the most pungent writers of the Evangelical party.

The Church Missionary Society have received offers of service from Mr. Charles F. Harford-Battersby, B.A., M.R.C.S., of St. Thomas's Hospital, who will go out as a medical missionary at his own charges, and Rev. Arthur H. Dibben, curate of St. John's, Chelsea.

The Dean of Gloucester (Dr. Spence) preached a powerful sermon at the Temple Church on Sunday morning. Taking for his text, "Behold the Lamb of God," he spoke with no uncertain sound upon the value and necessity of the atonement of Christ. He declared this to be his own sure trust, and exhorted his hearers to build their spiritual hopes upon the same foundation.

In the course of a discussion in the Liverpool Diocesan Conference on the subject of "How to bring the masses to Church," Rev. R. Hobson, vicar of St. Nathaniel's, West Derby, said the use of secular methods, including all kinds of amusements, was more than a mistake. Another mistake was the suggested attempt to introduce the monastic brotherhood in order to reach the masses. He was convinced the people would resent such an attempt as a covert effort to Romanise them. If the masses were to be really reached, it was absolutely essential to have a great revival of vital godliness and missionary zeal among all grades of the clergy, for nothing could compensate for the want of spiritual power.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Uxbridge has been recently favoured with the presence of Alfred Wright, of Leeds, who has rendered some very acceptable service there, much spiritual good being the outcome.

BAPTIST.

Rev. G. T. Gillingham, late of Barking, has accepted the pastorate of the Tabernacle at Winslow, Bucks.

Mr. A. Day, of the Pastors' College, has undertaken the pastorate of the English congregation meeting at Havelock Chapel, Agra, India.

At the Metropolitan Tabernacle, on Sunday morning, Mr. Spurgeon, in giving out the week's announcements, made allusion to his approaching departure for the South of France. Next Lord's Day, Mr. Spurgeon will deliver special sermons, morning and evening, in connection with a week's mission to be opened the following day at the Tabernacle by Messrs. Fullerton and Smith. On Monday, Mr. Spurgeon will leave for Mentone, where he has sojourned for the benefit of his health during a portion of several winters past.

CONGREGATIONAL.

It has been decided to convene an International Congregational Council, to be held in London, in July, 1891.

Rev. J. Stevens, late of Bungay, has been recognised as pastor at Lancaster-road, Notting Hill, W., in succession to Rev. J. S. Russell, D.D.

Rev. A. J. Bamford was recognised a few days ago as pastor of Pickford-street Church, Royton. Mr. Bamford formerly held the pastorates of the Union Churches at Calcutta and Shanghai.

The twentieth anniversary of Victoria-park Tabernacle, E., was celebrated a few days ago. The pastor, Rev. G. Snashall, stated that during the year a Young People's Christian Band, for both sexes, has been in operation, and a Young Men's Guild has been commenced.

Rev. James White, vicar of Holy Trinity, Oakengates, recently took the chair at a missionary meeting held in the Congregational Church, at which Rev. T. Smith, of Belgaum, India, a deputation from the London Missionary Society, delivered an address on Indian Missions.

A gratifying spiritual movement is reported from Dunstable Church (Rev. J. K. Baker, pastor). Irrespective of a remarkable work amongst the Sunday-school children, a number of persons have professed conversion to Christ, twelve of whom are members of the pastor's Young Men's Bible-class.

Rev. Robert Mackay, secretary of the Self-Help Emigration Society, who for ten years was the secretary and superintendent of the North-East Coast Mission, and missionary agent in Canada of the Congregational Churches of Scotland, has accepted the pastorate of Sion Chapel, Whitechapel-road, E., which was opened by the Countess of Huntingdon in 1790.

Rev. R. Mobbs gave the first of a series of popular lectures, on Sunday week, at Hounslow Church; the subject was "Christian Union." In the course of his address he remarked that the exaggerated importance given to denominationalism had been a fruitful cause of disunion and isolation in the past, but this was yielding more and more to the pressure of the needs of the times. They should all hail this as a healthy sign. Time was when in councils, and congresses, and union meetings, the subjects discussed were mainly of a denominational character. Now they were beginning to awake to their responsibilities as churches, they were coming to realise that they existed not to build out the world, and to build in themselves, but to save the world.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. George Hunter recently resigned the pastorate of Ivy-place United Presbyterian Church, Stranraer, N. B., to join the China Inland Mission. He is shortly leaving for China to engage in missionary work.

Rev. J. B. Meharry, of Crouch-hill, in his Monthly Notes, has a reference to non-churchgoing, which is very prevalent among all classes. "The day is past," he writes, "for classifying men as Churchmen and Dissenters. We are compelled to speak of them now as Churchmen and absenters." Mr. Meharry is endeavouring to bring people to his week-night services by having cards, announcing the subject of his addresses, left at the houses in the locality.

Professor Bruce delivered the opening address at the commencement of the winter session of the Free Church College, Glasgow, last week. Taking as his subject, "Modern Thought in respect to Christianity," he remarked that the attitude of the world to-day towards Christianity, so far from being one of indifference, was that of intensely eager inquiry. The subject of Christ had an all-absorbing attraction for the world, every fresh fact with reference to his life and teachings being earnestly sought after. It was possible, he remarked in closing, to be a good Christian without knowing anything of criticism and its results. He advised the students to revert to the Gospels and learn Christianity from the Lord Jesus Christ.

METHODIST.

A memoir of the late Rev. Thomas Truscott, missionary of the United Methodist Free Churches in West Africa, has been written by Rev. Joseph Kirsop, of Chesterfield, and will shortly be published.

Rev. W. D. Walters, the recently appointed secretary of the London Wesleyan Mission, has begun his work with great energy and enthusiasm; he has already arranged a series of large conventions at important provincial centres, to be addressed by Revs. Hugh Price Hughes, Peter Thompson, J. H. Hopkins, and other leaders of the Forward Movement.

Mr. Albert Charles Matthews, who has been studying at Richmond College, and is designated for pioneer work in the West African interior, was ordained at Kew-road Wesleyan Chapel lately. Mr. Matthews' station will be at Oyo, a town in the Yoruba country, 200 miles from the coast, with 100,000 inhabitants. The station is provided with a chapel and mission-house, which were built by the natives. Rev. J. F. T. Halligey will accompany Mr. Matthews, who is the first white missionary appointed to Oyo, and will introduce him to his new charge. Mr. Halligey is aiming to achieve the complete opening of the Western Soudan to the preaching of the Gospel, and it is probable that other interior stations will before long be occupied by white men.

The committee appointed at the last Primitive Methodist Conference to consider the best means of extending work in London, have decided to hold a great public meeting about the end of this month to inaugurate the new movement. It is intended to employ a number of specially qualified agents to carry on evangelistic services, house-to-house visitation, temperance meetings, and other forms of aggressive enterprise, in order to reach the neglected masses of the population. Some of the present buildings possessed by the Connexion in London will be used where there is a suitable sphere and prospect of successful work, while the committee will endeavour to open new centres of earnest Christian work in dense populations, or in some of the new neighbourhoods of the Metropolis.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Wesleyan Soldiers' Home at the Curragh camp has been reopened, after having been closed for improvements.

Rev. G. A. Bennetts, of Wood Green, London, has been addressing meetings in Dublin for the Methodist Temperance Association.

Very successful Gospel meetings have been held in Cork by Mrs. Caldwell, of America, and similar meetings were held last week in Castlecaulfield, by Rev. Alex. Fullerton, of Dungannon.

The family of the Presbyterian Orphan Society, which was already a very large one, was increased last week by the addition of 144 children to its roll of membership, while nearly as many more had to be deferred for want of funds.

With the view of stirring up and encouraging their people to take a deeper interest in foreign mission work, the Banbridge Presbytery has resolved to hold a number of conferences on the subject in suitable centres at the beginning of the new year.

During the past month the agents of the Belfast Town Mission, which is doing a good work among the poor and the degraded in the city, have had many instances of encouragement in their evangelistic meetings and visitations from house to house.

Rev. John Elliott and Geo. Poolton, evangelist, have entered upon a Forward Movement in co. Tyrone. They have had large congegations, both in Stewartstown Methodist Church and Sherrygroom Hall. These services are to continue for months all round the districts of this part of co. Tyrone.

Thomas ichardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of hom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, repared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our eaders will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," nd take its Monthly Notes.

SUNDAY, NOV. 17.—1 Kings XIV.

The sickness of Abijah (1—6) was coincident with is father's sins (xiii. 33). When sorrow or death nvades our homes, we do well to see if the Lord nay not have a controversy with us (Hos. v. 14, &c.). Trouble will often remind us of our real friends and of God's servants. Jeroboam could do well enough without Ahijah in his prosperity; but in trial he passes by the priests he had made, and goes to the man of God, to whom he owed so much (xi. 31). How strange was the conception which expected that the prophet could look into the future, but could not look behind the disguise which his wife assumed! Hypocrites are stript of their garb in the sight of God, and receive their doom: "heavy tidings." "God is not mocked."

The prediction of coming disaster (7—20).—The king had thrown away marvellous opportunities. He had not only not followed in David's steps, but had misled the people by setting up the calves. This was intended as a clever artifice to establish his government, but it was the cause of its ruin. Vaunting ambition often overreaches itself. To do right is the surest way to establishment (2 Chron. xvi. 9). In the worst of families there is one of God's children. Such are sometimes taken away from the evil to come. But it is a terrible thing for a home when God removes its salt and light. What a striking similitude is "the shaken reed" (15).

Rehoboam's reign and death (21—23). — His mother was "Naamah," a beauty, but she was an Ammonitess. Twice we are told that (21, 31), as if to emphasise the disastrous influence she wielded over her son. What an awful and rapid descent from the purity and glory of the first days of Solomon. Wherefore "God gave them up" to Shishak. Sin ever weakens us, and causes God to withdraw his environing presence. The fine gold dims to brass.

MONDAY, NOV. 18.—1 Kings XV.

Abijam, king of Judah (1—8).—We have a fuller account of this reign in 2 Chron. xiii. He was not whole-hearted with God, but he was maintained in his kingdom for David's sake (Ps. cxxxii. 10). Our God will bless after generations for the sake of some pious and devoted ancestor. How much we may be inheriting from the prayers and tears of the deceased! What a sigh of regret there is in the recollection of "the matter of Uriah"! God forgives sin, and yet it grieves Him to the heart. Oh that there might be no need for God to make such an exception in the case of any of us. Let us not turn aside from anything commanded us, all the days of our life (John xiv. 23).

Asa's good reign (9—24).—It was not only good, but long (Ps. xci. 16). He began, where we must all begin the work of reformation, by putting away evil. He first struck at immorality, then at idolatry. There must be a slaying of the members on the earth, before we put on the new nature (Col. iii. 5, &c.). His grandmother, for such Maachah evidently was (comp. 2, 10) was not tolerated, because she persisted in idolatry. He removed her from the court (Deut. xxxiii. 9). He brought into God's house the appointed portion from the spoils of the Ethiopians (2 Chron. xiv. 13). But he surely made a great mistake in seeking the help of a heathen monarch. How subtle is unbelief! How prone we are to depart from the living God!

Nadab and Baasha in Israel (25—34).—The term of Asa's reign saw six or seven different monarchs in the northern kingdom. Anarchy and misrule rode rough-shod through the land. Already the description of Isaiah's first chapter could be applied to that unhappy realm. It was a shaken reed, indeed (xiv. 15). Men execute God's judgments on each other, as they follow their own wild will, and fall into the sins which they are used to punish. But God's plan moves on.

TUESDAY, NOV. 19.—1 Kings XVI.

Baasha was a soldier, strong, active, daring, He waded to his throne through blood (xv. 29), and reigned for twenty-four years. Of Jehu we know little. His father was a prophet (2 Chron. xvi. 7), and he continued in his office for at least forty years (2 Chron. xix. 2, xx. 34). But he shone as a star amid the darkness of the times. Baasha died in peace, and was buried in state. Men do not in this life receive the just recompense of their deeds; and herein is a strong argument for another life (Ps. xvii. 14).

Elah and the remainder of the royal house were cut off by Zimri (9). We are told explicitly that the extermination was so complete that none of his avengers were left (11 mar.). In this, God's word was literally vindicated and fulfilled; but Zimri trod in his master's footsteps, unwarned by his master's fate, and was similarly dealt with (2 Kings ix. 31). The fact that men's actions happen to carry out the purposes of God does not excuse the violence and murder which fill their hearts. They do as they do, with no reference to the cause or glory of God, but at the dictates of their own passions, and for these they are justly punished (Acts ii. 23).

Omri (16) treated Zimri as he had treated Elah, and afterwards rid himself of Tibni, and reigned alone. He built Samaria as the metropolis of his kingdom; and seems to have embodied his idolatrous statutes in a code (Micah vi. 16).

Ahab succeeded him (29—34). He not only set aside the second commandment, but the first; and thus realised the terrible statements of vv. 30 and 33. His wife led him on, the beautiful, captivating, young idolatress, who was taught by the wily priesthood to use all her influence to bring in the idolatries of her home in Sidon. The calf-worship at Bethel had a bad effect on its inhabitants, one of whom dared to defy the curse which Joshua had pronounced five hundred years before, and he suffered the terrible penalty of his presumption.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 20.—1 Kings XVII.

A failing brook (1—7).—God rears and trains his noblest servants in unexpected places. Gilead was far from Court and Temple. But what do they need of human help or education who bear a name like this: "My strength is Jehovah.' Elijah's nature was cast in a strong mould, suited to his great work, able to stand unabashed before an Ahab, because he was ever standing in the presence of a greater than he. We learn that the staying of dew and rain was in answer to his prayer (Jas. v. 17). He probably thought that nothing else would bring the nation to learn their true position in God's sight. God's purpose had taken possession of his heart (Jer. xiv. 22 and Rev. xi. 6). How often does God bid his servants hide themselves! There are lessons learnt in seclusion which elude us in the crowd. And, whilst we are in hiding, God will supply all our need by most unexpected means (Job. xxxviii. 41; Ps. cxlvii. 9). But even then we must not be without trial, and it is hard to sit by a dwindling brook.

An exhausted cruse (8—16).—Not to Jordan, but to Zarephath (Luke iv. 25, 26). God uses the weak and foolish things of the world, and those which are despised, as outside the visible Church. Yet there were noble qualities in this woman. She did not complain; she went at once to get some water, without so much as mentioning its scarceness; she was very hospitable and generous, she was willing to hear mention of Jehovah's name without resentment, and she believed unfalteringly in the Divine promise of the replenishment of her stores. "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth." We get by giving.

A dying child (17—24).—Sorrow never proves that we are off the path of duty. Indeed, the way of obedience is paved with flints, so Elijah found it. But none of these things shook the heroic fortitude and courage of that noble spirit, who took each new trial as an opportunity for deriving additional grace and strength from his Almighty Friend.

THURSDAY, NOV. 21.—1 Kings XVIII.

Obadiah (1—16) was a good man, and did what he could to shield the prophets, and to keep the true light from utter extinguishment (2 Chron. xi. 13, 14). But surely it is strange to find him so closely associated with Ahab. Was it not rather inconsistent to be seeking grass instead of summoning king and people to repentance and confession? Would he have retained his position if he had been outspoken against Ahab's sins? Ought he not to have been to Elijah what Elisha afterwards became? It is difficult to say. We must abide in the position in which God has called us; but never at the expense of our testimony (1 Cor. vii. 21).

Ahab (17—20).—How blind we are to our true position! What a flash of light is thrown on us, when we come into contact with God's truth!

The conflict with the priests (21—29).—Baal was the sun-god; they could not resist the challenge to rely only on him. The people wavered, as they do still; but a man cannot walk firmly with one foot on the kerb and the other in the gutter. They fluttered as a bird between two sprays.

The answer by fire (30—39).—The repaired altar was emblem of the united people; the water of those influences which were prejudicial to the interests of vital godliness; the fire of the descending Spirit. Oh, to be known as God's servant, only obeying Him! (1 Thess. ii. 4). Elijah had learnt to reckon on God, and he could not be disappointed.

The prayer for rain (40—46).—The prophets must be slain ere the rain can come. Our lives must be free from evil, before we can expect the showers. What a contrast between the employments of the king and the prophet. This prayer was humble, earnest, persevering. Six times the boy came back to say there was nothing. The little cloud is often descried by the servant of God from his mountain oratory before the clouds fill the heavens.

FRIDAY, NOV. 22.—1 Kings XIX.

Elijah's flight (1—4).—Many causes lay at the root of his hurried departure. At this critical moment he was urgently needed to guide the movement which had so auspiciously commenced, but he failed; perhaps from a natural physical reaction after the long strain, or disappointment that Jezebel should dare to interpose. Great faith is not always strong; nor can it be, when it looks away from God to circumstances. "When he saw that, he arose" (Matt. xiv. 30).

The Divine provision (5—8).—God might have allowed him to suffer the results of his terrible lapse. But He knows our frame. On the desert sand the repast was lovingly spread, as afterwards on the shores of the lake (John xxi.). How often do the angels spread similar meals in unlikely places for tired workers. God's surprise visits! He does not scold, but refreshes.

The lesson of Horeb (9—14).—Very beautiful to see his one passionate desire for the glory of God. He had, however, thought that God's work could only be done vehemently, suddenly, and ostensibly. He was taught that God loves also to work in the still, small voice, heard only by the individual heart; and, lo, 7000 were the result of these gentle influences stealing abroad among men. For every servant of God we know there may be thousands of secret disciples.

Return to duty (15—18).—This summons to anoint three successors is a little ominous. It would seem that others were to be called in to the work the prophet had left. Still there was comfort in being bidden to return. Backsliders may be encouraged by the words, "Go, return."

The call of Elisha (19—21).—We may expect to hear the Divine call when we are patiently plodding along the furrow of daily duty. Elisha evidently resolved to give his life to the Master's service. He burnt his bridges behind him by sacrificing his cattle. Having put his hand to the plough, he would not look back. He left all to follow, but he got more than he renounced (2 Kings v. vi. &c.; Mark x. 30).

SATURDAY, NOV. 23.—1 Kings XX.

Ben-hadad besieges Samaria (1—11).—The demand was very insolent, and the making of it proves how low Israel had sunk. We could hardly expect such a man as Ahab to speak so wisely (11). We always fall, when we are self-confident, and our only safeguard is implicit faith in the promises and protection of God.

Ben-hadad's defeat (12—30).—As in the case of Belshazzar, so here, drunkenness was precursor of defeat. God sent a prophet, or Ahab had never called for one. How graciously our heavenly Father interweaves instruction with all the incidents of our lives. And God always chooses the weakest and most unlikely tools, as these servants were; that the excellency of the power may be of Him, and that no flesh may glory in his presence. It seems as if God sometimes interposes, not so much for our sake, as for his holy name, which had been blasphemed among the heathen (28; Ezekiel xxxvi. 32).

Ben-hadad's deliverance (31—43).—What a lesson is here for sinners to appeal to the mercy of God! Let them go to Him as suppliant beggars, and cast themselves on his pity. We may all question whether, in being busy about many petty details, we may not be missing divinely-given opportunities (40). Sometimes in deciding the cases of others, we are pronouncing sentence on ourselves. May we watch each day for our Master's will, redeeming the time, because the days are few and evil.

SOLOMON'S WISE CHOICE.—1 KINGS iii. 5—15.

GOLDEN TEXT: PROV. viii. 11.

SOLOMON was the son of David and Bathsheba. During the whole of his life he had seen in his father that example of subdued piety which succeeded upon his previous sin. At the commencement of his reign he is supposed to have been from eighteen to twenty years old. In his own judgment (7), and in his father's (1 Chron. xxix. 1), he was very young to be entrusted with so great a work. Under David, the enemies of the kingdom had been subdued, and its extent greatly increased. Solomon had, therefore, the opportunity of developing its resources, and enhancing its splendour. This incident began very early in his reign, probably immediately after he had carried out David's instructions, by the removal of those who would have endangered the peace and prosperity of the nation.

At this time the ark was at Jerusalem; but the banishment of Abiathar, who had officiated there as priest, rendered that place not available for Solomon's purpose. Accordingly, the leaders of the nation were summoned to Gibeon, where the Tabernacle still stood, and the brazen altar made by Bezaleel (2 Chron. i. 2—5). His reign was thus inaugurated by sacrifices to God, in which he sought to get his people to unite with him in recognising their relationship to God.

Ver. 5.—God's message to Solomon was given in a dream (15). See also Job xxxiii. 15—17. Such methods of communication were necessary then when the Word of God was not complete. The message may be regarded as God's answer to Solomon's worship. True communion with God implies God speaking with us as well as we with Him. Give Him the opportunity to answer. What a privilege He offered to Solomon! "Ask what I shall give thee." It would not be safe nor wise to do this with every man. Only the man whose heart delights in God (Ps. xxxvii. 4), in whom the word of God abides (John xv. 7), can receive such a privilege. But on these conditions the same offer is made to all. God puts all that He has at the disposal of every fully surrendered, obedient, and trustful soul.

Ver. 6—9.—Solomon wisely deliberated before he replied. He who, without due consideration, converts every wish into a prayer, will have many prayers unanswered. Before giving his answer, Solomon remembered God's mercy to his father (6), and connected together his father's upright character and prosperous reign. He knew that similar integrity was his great need as king. He remembered, also, that God had given him this position (7, 8). This had not altered his own estimate of himself—he was still "a child." And the work, for such a child, was far too great. The consciously weak distrust themselves and apply for Divine help and wisdom. Hence God's revelations are "hid from the wise and prudent, and revealed unto babes" (Matt. xi. 25). The request of Solomon was for wisdom (9). He showed more concern to glorify God, in the responsible position God had given, than merely to advance his own fame, or to increase his own wealth. Such a request was the best possible evidence of his character. If the scholars could have "just what they like," what would they choose? The answer will reveal their character—their idea of life, and of how it should be used. To the selfish, and to any who seek only the things of this world, it would be a calamity for God to give them what they choose. The fable tells of a man who desired that everything he touched might be gold; and, getting his request, he perished in his splendid misery. Only when "ye are Christ's," can Paul declare that "all things are yours" (1 Cor. iii. 22, 23).

Ver. 10—15.—"The speech pleased the Lord" (10). A human speech can please Him (Mark vii. 29). A speech that expresses unselfishness, concern for God's glory, desire to do his will, humble dependence upon Him, and large faith in his willingness to bless—such a speech he gladly hears. God gave Solomon his desire (11—12). The evidence of his wisdom soon appeared (16—28), the fame of it reached other countries, and the exhibition of it took all spirit out of the Queen of Sheba (x). But God added what Solomon had not asked (13). The riches and honour which he had surrendered became his in a more wonderful measure than he could have desired. To give up for God is the way to obtain from God (Matt. vi. 33). The evidence of his possession of riches and honour appears in chap. iv. His experience in answer to his prayer enabled him to write as he did concerning the excellency of wisdom (Prov. viii.). Yet the blessing promised did not relieve Solomon from the necessity of being watchful and obedient (14). His life would be lengthened or shortened, according as he was faithful or unfaithful to God. The warning was as necessary for his own life and character as the wisdom for the right government of the nation.

At Jerusalem, Solomon expressed his thankfulness to God for the reply (15). Is not this a part of communion we often forget?

LESSONS.

Note: (1) Solomon began his reign in the spirit of devotion to God. A good start determines what the life is to be. There is no way of beginning well except God is put into his right place.

(2) Solomon was more concerned about living rightly than about his own advancement. To do God's will, to fulfil the duties of his high position, was more to him than riches and honour. Be less concerned to get on than to do right.

(3) God gave all he asked and more. He was willing to forego riches and honour for God, but he found them in seeking to do God's will. Mere ambition has no promise of blessing. The meek, the dependent, the surrendered, to these God gives more than they ask.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

PUBLIC WORSHIP.

DEAR SIR,—The wife of a Christian working man, and myself one of the Lord's bought ones, I have a strong desire to serve the Lord uprightly. About eighteen months ago we got into financial difficulties in a small way, and since then I have absented myself from public worship and other means of grace. Have I been doing right or wrong?—Yours, &c., H.

ANSWER.

Public worship is a privilege which should not have been bartered away on such a ground; it is a duty which should be attended to in the fear of God. Public worship affords occasions which we can ill spare for communion with our Father in heaven. Probably the cause of abstention was the fear of man, not the fear of God. The case may well excite sympathy. We should, however, rise above outward and momentary difficulties, and beware of "forsaking the assembling of ourselves together."

SEEING GOD'S FACE.

DEAR SIR,—In Exod. xxxiii. 11 we read, "The Lord spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend." In ver. 20 it is stated: "Thou canst not see my face; for there shall no man see my face and live." An explanation of this difficulty will oblige. A. PYNE.

Bath.

ANSWER.

In the former passage, the words "face to face" are properly explained by the clause which follows: "As a man speaketh unto his friend." The expression "face to face" implies familiarity, and does not contradict the statement that no son of Adam can see God. Andrew Fuller well says: "The difference seems to arise from the phrase 'face to face.' In the one case it is expressive of great familiarity, compared with former visions and manifestations of the Divine glory; in the other, to the fulness of knowledge of this glory, which is incompatible with our mortal state, if not with our capacity as creatures." Verse 23, it has been remarked, shows that while a lower degree of disclosures might be made, a higher degree could not be.

ST. JAMES'S GOSPEL MISSION.—This Mission, situated in Royal-road, Kennington Park, lately celebrated its tenth anniversary. At a preliminary tea provided by Mr. and Mrs. Zierenberg, the secretary gave an account of the work since it was started ten years ago. The chairman, Dr. Armitage, congratulated the Mission on having such a bright and spacious hall; and he was glad to know that so many had lately been brought into the light (fifty during the past month). He commended the Gospel temperance work, and said he could testify that a grand work was being done in the hall and in the St. James's Home for Female Inebriates close by.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

ROMANISM IN GERMANY.—A paper has been started at Eisenach to combat the encroachments of Rome. Protestants are waking up to the gravity of the situation, and, though late, it is hoped they will not testify in vain. The German bishops of the Papal Church have met and issued a pastoral which amounts to a declaration of war against the movement.

SUNDAY IN AUSTRALIA.—In the city of Melbourne the law decrees that no newspaper shall be published on the Sabbath, and no vehicle must drive past a place of worship during the hours of Divine service at a faster pace than a walk. Numberless attempts have been made to start Sunday newspapers in Melbourne, but the law has invariably extinguished them at the second or third number.

SCHOOLS ON WHEELS.—In Western Turkestan, where there are no schools, the Russian Government has fitted up some railway carriages, to which teachers have been appointed. These carriages make brief stoppages at various stations. The children are gathered and given lessons in reading, writing, and Russian grammar, after which school and teachers are conveyed to the next station.

THE SABBATH IN FRANCE.—The popular union for Sunday rest in France will not replace, but rather help, the older organisations having the same end in view. Constituted on a broad basis, the union will, it is hoped, do much for the good of the people, and greatly help religious endeavour. M. Jules Simon is honorary president, M. Léon Say chairman, and there are many influential names on the committee.

FRANCE.—M. Jules Simon, writing in La Paix Sociale, remarks upon the great decline of fanatical freethought in France. A few years ago, candidates for public suffrages had little chance unless they made a declaration of opposition or indifference to everything religious. Now, no such protestation is thought of. By degrees it is being seen that clericalism, as affecting Romish arrogance and assumptions, is distinct from religious principles and convictions.

HOLLAND.—The hairdressers and barbers of Amsterdam have considered the Sabbath question, and adopted a resolution declaring it desirable that they should have a weekly rest as well as persons following other industries. With the New Year the majority of the members of the craft will close their shops by one o'clock at the latest on the Sabbath. It is hoped that in due course they may assert their right to the entire day, and thus be in a position properly to observe the Lord's Day.

BUDDHISM IN EUROPE.—The Buddhist idea of Nirvana, or man's ultimate return to nothing, seems to have been well received of late by many European savants. Those who reject Jesus Christ, the Light of the world, are thus returning to the darkness of paganism. Is it not to the Christianity of to-day that the Apostle addresses the appeal, "Awake, thou that sleepest, and Christ shall give thee light"? Yes, let us awake, and idolaters will soon desist from sending missionaries to Christendom.—Christlicher Volksfreund.

TEMPERANCE WORK IN SWITZERLAND.—A correspondent of L'Evangéliste says that great blessing continues to follow temperance effort in Canton Vaud. Twenty years ago the male portion of the community was largely inaccessible to the Gospel, mainly through the prevalence of intemperance among the vinedressers and the other labourers about the vineyards. To-day reclaimed drunkards are apostles of sobriety and faithful evangelists. A high standard of Christian life is kept in view, and God has greatly blessed the testimony for holiness.

BELGIUM.—Sunday-schools are proving a means of great good in this country. True, they are not numerous, but where they exist several cases have been reported of parents being enlightened through accompanying their children to Gospel meetings. The story is told of one home in which the crucifix and images were hidden away from the parlour to the basement, but those upstairs were allowed to remain. "Mother," said a little Sunday scholar, "downstairs we are Protestants, but upstairs Catholics!" The remark decided the hesitating parents to take their stand for Gospel truth in its purity.

SWITZERLAND.—The Sunday-school Society of Canton Vaud has abandoned the "International" order of lessons, and, like the schools of France, adopted a four year's course. In details, however, the two Continental arrangements are independent and dissimilar. Members of various Christian churches recently assembled for conference at Gingius and Trelex, on the Lake of Geneva. The subjects upon which meditation turned had Christ for their centre and circumference: as the sin bearer, the glory of the Church, and the expectation of believers. Le Réveil states that while gentlemen set forth the teaching, ladies supported it by personal testimony. Many voices mingled in prayer, and a spirit of consecration to God prevailed.

FRENCH PRIESTS COMING TO THE LIGHT.—Le Signal has published two long articles on work among Romish priests. Quite a number who have been brought up in the Papal communion have declared themselves Protestants at heart, and expressed grief at finding themselves the slaves of circumstances. Some hesitate through fear of persecution, which their friends would have to share with them; others dread poverty, which might involve starvation to themselves and aged or helpless dependents. In concluding the sad recital, which is lightened by several pleasing evidences of confidence in the Reformed Church, M. Réveillaud says: "Many a prisoner sighs for a deliverance which he would enjoy to-morrow if we were only in a position to obtain the price of his ransom—a place, however humble, enabling him to live in the society of men."

Second Edition. Demy 8vo., cloth, price 7s. 6d.

THE DIVINE PROGRAMME of the WORLD'S HISTORY.

"We do not hesitate to pronounce this to be, in our opinion, the best of Mr. Guinness's books. Mr. and Mrs. Guinness have this advantage over Newton and Keith, who so admirably use the same weapon, in that modern discovery in ethnology and archæology has furnished the former with immensely increased confirmations of Scripture which were not available till our time. This work indicates a thorough mastery of these."—Rock.

THE SECOND PART OF

JOHN G. PATON, Missionary to the New Hebrides. An Autobiography. Edited by his Brother, the Rev. JAMES PATON, B.A.

"There can be little doubt that the second part of Mr. Paton's autobiography will prove as popular as the first instalment."—Scotsman.

"The second part has all the attractions of the first and something additional, as it contains a long chapter of letters from the graphic, glowing pen of Mrs. Paton, giving a striking description of the normal state of society on Aniwa, both heathen and Christian. . . . Mr. Paton has made his mark beyond the dreams of any literary ambition. It is the fascination and attraction of the writer's own pen that has gained him his success."—Christian Leader.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The arrests in Great Britain for drunkenness during the past ten years is said to have reached nearly two millions.

An Amending Licensing Bill introduced into the South Australian Legislature provides for a limited local option and also for compensation to publicans. The latter proposal has excited strong objection.

In France there is an agitation for the suppression of the right of free distillation granted to farmers and fruit growers in 1875. It is alleged that it has led to great frauds on the revenue, and the extensive use of a deleterious alcohol extracted from vegetables of various kinds.

Appeals.

East London Women's Christian Temperance Union.—The majority of the members of this Union are of the poorest, so that the subscriptions are very small, and quite inadequate to the necessary expenditure. Contributions will be gratefullyacknowledged by Mrs. PADDON, hon. sec., 43, Tredegar-square, Bow London, E.

The Chelsea Preventive and Rescue Home is greatly in need of funds, owing to the large number of the better class of fallen women who have recently passed through the rescue branch. The expenses incurred by the mothers and babies are just now exceptionally heavy. Donations will be gratefully received by Rev. J. LAWSON FORSTER, 12, Carlyle-square, Chelsea, London, S.W.

Slade Hall, Plumstead-common.—This hall, which was opened in 1880 in a very poor neighbourhood, has recently undergone repairs and extension at a cost of about £110. Towards this sum £60 has been given or promised by friends and workers. The work is the outcome of open-air services and cottage meetings among brickmakers and others. With the blessing of God, it has steadily increased. Contributions may be sent to Mr. ROBERT CAMPBELL, Herbert-road, Plumstead.

Notices.

IN answer to "A Correspondent," the lines asked for are by Frances Ridley Havergal, from her "Moonlight Sonata," page 28 in "Under the Surface." The following is the correct quotation:—

"What though to-day
Thou canst not trace at all the hidden reason
In his strange dealings through the trial season,—
Trust and obey:
And, like the child whose story follows here,
In after life and light all shall be plain and clear."

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most desirable that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Evens have visited Pemberton Free Church with gratifying results. Many have professed to be born again. The church gave a unanimous invitation for a return visit next year.

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT
TO MONDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1889.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and full the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

To Lonely Missionary Workers.—DEAR SIR,—I beg leave to ask, through your excellent paper, for a little missionary information, which perhaps some of your readers in the East may be able to give me, if they will kindly do so. (1) Are any of the lighthouses on the coast of India, the Straits Settlements, or China, under the charge of Englishmen; if so, which? (2) Are any Englishmen resident—as minor officials, traders, &c.,—on either of the undermentioned islands or groups:—Rodriguez, Amirante, Chagos (dependencies of Mauritius); or the Laccadive, Maldive, Andaman, Nicobar, or Keeling Islands? To any of our countrymen placed in isolated positions as above, and possibly out of reach of religious associations from the outside, I should be glad to post now and then small packets of publications, such as those issued by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, the Religious Tract Society, and Messrs. Passmore & Alabaster, if names and addresses were sent to me. It may be that some in those solitary places will be glad of them.

Yours very truly, J. GREEN.

CLARKE'S "PYRAMID" NURSERY LAMP FOOD WARMERS.

With New Registered Pannikin.

BY their peculiar construction—the glass chimney conducting and concentrating heat to the bottom of the water vessel—they give a larger amount of light and heat than can be obtained in any other lamp of the same class. Without smoke or smell.

Clarke's New Registered Pannikin.

By this invention any liquid food can be poured out or drunk without scum or grease passing through the spout, and prevents spilling when poured into a feeding bottle, so unavoidable with all other Pannikins. The Pannikins will fit all the old "Pyramid" Nursery Lamps, and can be purchased separately.

Clarke's "Pyramid" Night Lights and "Fairy Pyramid" Night Lights

Are the best in the world, and the only suitable ones for burning in the above, and for lighting passages, lobbies, &c. Sold everywhere.

Price of Lamps, 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 5s., and 6s. each. If any difficulty in obtaining them, write to CLARKE'S "PYRAMID" AND "FAIRY" LIGHT COMPANY, LIMITED, Cricklewood, London, N.W., for nearest Agent's address.

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

LETTER from an OLD PATIENT at STOKE-ON-TRENT.

This lady (MRS. LEONARD WOOD) whose remarkable case is reported in my book (Case No. 107), and who has continued fairly well since her recovery under my treatment nine years ago,—writing me in July, says "I had a cough come on a little time back, and your medicine (of which I always like to keep a little in the house) has cured it.

"Ever since leaving off your treatment, which so marvellously healed my lungs, I have been stronger in health, and am better now than ever in my life. I wish it could be more extensively known, even than it is; so as to be adopted by all suffering with the chest. Praying that you still may be made a means of blessing I am, &c."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

Nobody, old or young, should ever be without them.

HELP WANTED FOR THE ANNUAL SALE

ON BEHALF OF

"DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES FOR DESTITUTE CHILDREN,"

NOW SHELTERING, EDUCATING, AND TRAINING OVER 3,000 POOR WAIFS AND STRAYS.

Will all who are preparing gifts for the ANNUAL SALE on behalf of these Homes

KINDLY SEND THEM IN AT ONCE?

Will those whose busy fingers are at work for the Sale remember that crochet shawls, really fine underclothing for ladies and children, shirts for boys and men, suits for little boys, aprons and pinafores for girls, and sets of baby clothing, are particularly valuable additions, being much asked for and readily sold? Well-made woollen shawls are frequently asked for, and, indeed, women's garments of all kinds would be especially useful. Of course, besides these, jewellery, old coins, old china, curios, musical instruments, and fancy work, trinkets, articles of vertu, books, drawings, bric-a-brac, and other examples of the thousand-and-one tasteful ornaments which are sought for by purchasers, will be very gratefully received and acknowledged. Valuable help would be afforded if donors of gifts of old china, foreign goods, articles of vertu, &c., would kindly mark on them their value, or indicate the price which is likely to be obtained. The SALE will this year be of the SAME CHARACTER as for the LAST FEW YEARS; that is to say, instead of holding a Public Bazaar at the West End of London during the month of December, as formerly, all the goods received will be made up into

£5 and £10 Boxes. These Boxes will each contain a very excellent selection, of at least the value of £6 and £12 respectively, and will be sent to any part of the country on receipt of P.O. Order or Cheque made payable to Mr. J. T. Page.

Ladies willing to order these Boxes confer a great benefit on the "Homes"; for by this easy method all the articles received may be disposed of without any loss in the way of such expenses as are usually incurred by holding a Bazaar at the West End. Many kind-hearted sympathisers have repeatedly expressed warm approval of this plan, and have promised to purchase Boxes, with the contents of which they propose to hold in their own houses, towhich their personal friends can be invited during the winter season. If there be many articles left over unsold, they can be disposed of in the last week of January (D.V.), in the Large Gymnasium of the Boys' Home in Stepney, E. DR. BARNARDO earnestly invites all who love poor children to co-operate with him in this effective plan to increase the funds of the "Homes," by which, too, all the wearying, disappointing, and expensive drawbacks of a public Bazaar may be avoided. The Boxes, carefully lined and packed ready for transmission, can be despatched on receipt of remittance to any railway station in the Kingdom. Applications (PREPAID), with full instructions as to conveyance, &c., should be sent in as soon as possible, addressed to

THE SECRETARY, 18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

To all who have already in any degree helped by Contributions of Useful or Fancy Articles, Dr. Barnardo desires to offer the expression of his very grateful acknowledgments and hearty thanks.

18 TO 26, STEPNEY CAUSEWAY, LONDON, E., November, 1889.

The Spezia Mission
FOR
Italy and the Levant.

THE remarkable growth of this Mission in the face of difficulties so formidable, has inspired its united Friends to give greater publicity to its efforts to permanently benefit the Italian people. The great thankfulness of many in Italy for the blessings received is felt to be an encouragement to the Friends of the Mission to unite in earnest prayer for a large measure of the Holy Spirit to be imparted to those who superintend the Mission; to its varied and numerous agents; as also to those who contribute of their substance for its support and growth; that their willingness and ability may be equal to the Mission's needs.

Real compassion and tenderness of soul for the perishing has always, and will always, open the heart and hand.

"Italy for Christ" should be the aspiration of thoughtful, earnest Christians. It is proposed, from November 24 until December 1, inclusive, to hold Thanksgiving Services for the blessings already granted the Mission, and to bring its needs before God in prayer, that He will graciously so assist in every respect as to make it a perennial and vastly increasing blessing in the land so long benighted and oppressed.

The Christian Portrait Gallery.

Forming a Beautiful Gift-Book.

Consisting of OVER ONE HUNDRED well-executed Portraits of well-known Christian Men and Women of the present day. Each Portrait is accompanied by a well-written Biographic Sketch.

Over 400 pages of Letterpress, Demy Quarto, Attractively Bound, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 10s. 6d.

As a Christmas or New Year's Present.

"This is certainly a splendid volume. The Portraits are beautifully executed; and in all the instances in which we can speak from personal knowledge, are life-like in their accuracy. To each Portrait a written Biographical Notice is appended. Paper, printing, and binding are superb. This is a volume which would ornament any drawing-room table. What an elegant Christmas or New Year present it will make!"
Christian Age, Oct. 25, 1889.

"The Portraits and Biographies of over one hundred noteworthy Christian men and women are here collected into a handsomely-bound quarto volume, such as would make a splendid present for Christmas."—Methodist Times, Nov. 7, 1889.

For the Drawing-room Table.

"One hundred portraits and biographies gathered into a substantial volume. Many churches; several of the more prominent religious movements of the day; and lands widely separated—are here represented. The statement on the title-page that the portraits are "life-like illustrations" is no empty boast. Of the kind, there are few which more nearly fulfil the requirements of popular taste, or, indeed, of artistic criticism. The letterpress, also, is admirable. As a worthy record of noble lives, it deserves a place on every Christian drawing-room table."—Methodist Recorder, Oct. 17, 1889.

As a Volume for the Library.

"Next to the study of God's Word, there is scarcely anything so edifying and stimulating as the careful reading of faithful biography. A work like the present has, therefore, a distinct aim in stimulating spiritual life by the presentation of striking examples; and we hope this useful mission may be largely fulfilled. The binding of the volume renders it an ornament to the table, while its contents make it a valuable addition to the library."
Footsteps of Truth, Nov., 1889.

"The book is one that should find a place in many libraries."—Literary World, Oct. 25, 1889.

As a Stimulus to Christian Service and Christian Effort.

"Messrs. Morgan & Scott have rendered the religious public a more than ordinary service in the publication of these Portraits and Sketches. To Christian families no more welcome or appropriate volume can be introduced than this handsome Portrait Gallery of Noteworthy Christian Men and Women, whose devoted lives have been spent in service for the Master, and for the temporal and spiritual good of their fellows. The reading of this interesting volume cannot but refresh and stimulate to more active endeavour to religious and philanthropic work. We, therefore, most heartily commend it to the notice of our readers."
Primitive Methodist, Oct. 31, 1889.

For Sending to Friends Abroad.

"The features and history of workers whose names have become familiar in connection with many noble causes possess an especial interest in many distant lands as well as at home; and on this ground, as well as on its intrinsic merits, THE CHRISTIAN PORTRAIT GALLERY should command a ready sale. It contains over one hundred Portraits and Biographic Sketches of men and women of our own times, who have laboured long, and in many cases have laboured to the end, for the welfare of their fellows."
The Literary World, October 25, 1889.

For Giving to Friends at Home.

"A handsome book. A collection of about one hundred fine Portraits of leading Christian men, about two-thirds of whom are living. A biographic sketch is given of each. A good book for a Present to a friend."
The Freeman, October 25, 1889.

As a Present to a Minister, Sunday-school Superintendent, or Teacher.

"Rev. Frederick Brown, who recently resigned his pastorate of twenty-four years at M—— . . . . received from the children of the Sunday-school richly-bound copy of THE CHRISTIAN PORTRAIT GALLERY."—British Weekly, November 1, 1889.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.; And may be ordered of any Bookseller in Great Britain or the Colonies.

The Cry of the Children.

The Committee of the RAGGED SCHOOL UNION plead the cause of FIFTY THOUSAND of the Poorest Children of London, and quite as many Adults, who are weekly reached by the RAGGED SCHOOL MISSIONS affiliated to the Union.

Here is a sample of these Children—as they are found; and we try to turn them out well taught, and trained for useful, industrious, and godly lives.

"AS WE FIND THEM."

In the 200 Missions and Ragged Schools the Gospel is put first and foremost as the power of God unto salvation; but this done, our 4,000 Voluntary Workers seek in every possible way to help, befriend, and raise the neglected and ignorant. Hence, among many other operations, we—

Gave more than HALF-A-MILLION Cocoa Breakfasts, Penny Dinners, and Soup Suppers last winter.

Distributed several thousand Garments during the inclement weather.

Sent nearly 3,000 Poor Children to the country and seaside this year.

Promote Emigration, Shoeblack Brigades, Sewing, Cooking, Carpentering, and other Industrial Classes.

Assist Institutes, Lending Libraries, Gymnasiums, &c., for Elder Boys and Girls.

Have varied agencies for the promotion of Thrift, Temperance, True Religion, and Purity.

Help urgently needed for the Coming Winter.

Thousands of Destitute Families Relieved.

Thousands of Children Reclaimed and Taught.

MARYLEBONE MEDICAL MISSION

12, Bell Street, Edgware Road.

OBJECT:—

Preaching the Gospel and Healing the Sick Poor.

350 Patients are prescribed for weekly. Seven Gospel Services weekly.

Visitors are invited to call at the Mission any Monday, Wednesday, or Friday at 12.30 a.m.

The work has greatly increased during the past year.

CONTRIBUTIONS thankfully received by Dr. R. CHAMBERS, at the Mission; or by the Treasurer, Dr. E. PARKER YOUNG, L.C.C., 30, Westbourne Square, W.; also by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.

HOMES OF HOPE,

4, 5, & 6, REGENT SQUARE, GRAY'S INN ROAD, W.C.

The Committee are obliged to make an URGENT APPEAL FOR IMMEDIATE HELP.

1. For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.
2. For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five Shillings would pay for a child for a week.
3. For Law Expenses: in every case where it be possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The Homes are very full, and the Committee have also a large number of young women to look after, who have passed through, and are doing well in situations, but who are not quite able to pay the full amount, five shillings a week, to the nurses for their children.

The applications are so distressing and urgent, that every shilling has been spent.

FATHERLESS.

315 ORPHANS of both sexes are now in the ASYLUM FOR FATHERLESS CHILDREN at Reedham, Purley, Surrey, and the Board of Managers most earnestly appeal for help to maintain and educate them. These children have been admitted to the Asylum at ages varying from 6 months to 11 years, and will all be retained and cared for until they are 15 years of age. This Charity is entirely unsectarian, and has no endowment; it is therefore dependent upon public benevolence for support.

The necessary expenditure averages £8,000 per annum, but the only reliable income—that from Annual Subscriptions—does not provide one-third of that amount, hence the necessity for this appeal.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS AND DONATIONS will be most thankfully received.

H. L. HASTINGS' NEW OFFER.

A few weeks ago, I offered to give 50,000 Copies of the INSPIRATION OF THE BIBLE as a Christmas Present to Major Poole for English Soldiers, provided the Christian public would give him 100,000 Copies before January 1, 1890.

That still holds good. The value of my own conditional gift, at wholesale, would be £125, representing One Million Six Hundred Thousand Pages of well-illustrated reading matter. That is, a Ton and a Quarter Weight of superfine, plate finished, delicately tinted paper, which would make a PRINTED PAPER PARTI-COLORED RIBBON five inches wide, and OVER 183 MILES LONG, reaching from London to Manchester. Sample Copies of the same may now be ordered by anyone at 1d., or 6s. per 100, from Messrs. MARSHALL.

I regret, however, that the responses to Major Poole's appeal and to my offer are coming in but slowly. Perhaps some are discouraged at the magnitude of the work proposed. I beg you not to forget that, if each does what he can, it is as easy to do this special work for God, BY THE TON, as by the pennyworth. My heart is touched by a letter from two mothers, of soldier boys, enclosing two shillings, for Major Poole's Fund, and saying that it is all that they can do, but that they are praying God to bless every pamphlet their tiny gift sends out to the soldiers. God grant that their own boys may receive a share of that blessing!

Here is my NEW OFFER! Up to January 1, 1890, Messrs. Marshall Brothers, 10, Paternoster-row, WILL FILL A SHILLING ORDER for "Inspiration," to be sent either to Major Poole or to Miss Weston, at the same rate as an order for a thousand copies. But please order more if you can, as this gives us ten times as much labour as the large orders.

For every two shillings sent in to us, I will give another Shillingsworth, reckoned at the same low thousand rate. I will most gladly do my part if you will do yours. Meanwhile, are there not at least two or three of the Lord's stewards ready to take up this offer, on a scale similar to that on which it is made?

One gentleman does say, that for every thousand ordered as above, he will give to Major Poole, an extra 100 copies, or 10,000 altogether.

Address:—H. L. HASTINGS, care of Marshall Brothers, 10, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. Dr. William Tyler, Congregational minister, Mile End, E.

It is known to many of our readers that the American Board of Foreign Missions in its late meeting at New York was sorely divided on questions which had their root in theological differences. We have read the comments on these disturbing relations between some of the churches and the Board which appear in twelve of the United States' journals. Many of them justify the compromise arrived at through the statesmanlike course of the president, Dr. Storrs. The minority who call themselves "Liberals" object to the application of orthodox theological tests in the sending forth of missionaries. The matter, however, in relation to the future of the heathen is one on which a missionary Board ought to exercise great caution. Why should missionary societies send out men who meddle with that of which they know nothing, and tell the contemporaneous heathen that there is hope for their ancestors who died idolaters? And if a missionary holds that there is another "day of salvation" after this, he will inevitably fail in the fidelity, earnestness, and entreaties of one who takes the language of Paul as his guide, and declares that this is the accepted time of deliverance.

It is proposed to found in London a hospital to be conducted on antivivisectional principles, under the name of the Shaftesbury Hospital. The object is not to disparage the many institutions which have long been doing a really good work, but to provide a hospital to which the generous may subscribe without fear of promoting vivisection, and to which the poor may go without dread of being used as material for experiment. The proposed Hospital will be of a general character, for the medical and surgical treatment of the sick of both sexes, without regard to any distinction of creed. The prospectus states:—

> Thoroughly qualified physicians and surgeons will be appointed, and, as it has been over and over again proved that the best results can be attained by methods not in any way dependent on vivisection, it is confidently anticipated that the Hospital, in addition to curing a larger proportion of patients in a shorter time than usual, will afford irrefutable evidence of the usefulness of that practice.

The proposed Hospital will also afford facilities for treating hydrophobic patients, after the hot vapour baths method practised with great success by Dr. Binsson and others. A start will be made in a private house, with a few beds, when the sum of £3000 shall have been collected. Persons in sympathy with the movement are requested to communicate with Mr. F. E. Pirkis, Nutfield, Surrey.

It is satisfactory to learn from the recently published Report of the Local Government Board that during the last twenty years pauperism has maintained a steady decrease, having diminished by one-half: it appears also that whereas twenty-seven years ago, out of a population of more than twenty millions, upwards of one million were in receipt of relief, last year, though the population has increased by nine millions, the number of paupers was under 750,000. The reports from the various district inspectors furnish valuable information with respect to the administration of the Poor Law in various parts of England, from which it appears that though much improvement has taken place, yet the great social problem of how to deal with the poor without hardship to the industrious and independent among them, and at the same time without encouraging the idle and worthless, is not yet solved. It may also be noted that the excellent Report of Miss Mason, the lady-inspector of boarded-out children, illustrates alike the excellencies of the system, and the abuses to which it is liable when not supervised by a practical, working local committee.

The auditor of the Theological Society, Trinity College, Dublin, at the opening meeting of the fifty-second session the other evening, read an admirable paper on the "Crisis in Foreign Missions" to an influential gathering. Mr. Northridge, in the course of his paper, urged that in the gradual loss of vitality and the increasing corruption of truth which characterised the Church of the middle ages, we see only the natural consequences of her neglect of her primary function and her forgetfulness of her high calling. So in regard to the churches of the Reformation, God did not deal differently with them:—

> They won life and liberty at enormous cost, but were slow to disseminate to others the blessings thus obtained. Hence followed the disappointment of high hopes, rationalism, deism, and worldliness, making havoc of churches once full of promise.

Mr. Northridge based upon his arguments an eloquent appeal in favour of a wide development of the missionary spirit in Ireland.

Dr. A. T. Pierson received a cordial welcome and God-speed from the Liverpool friends on Saturday last, on his arrival from America to commence his new missionary crusade in Great Britain. He preached in two Liverpool pulpits on Sunday, and on Tuesday evening a great public meeting was held, to give the Doctor a hearty "send off" to Scotland, where he begins his systematic advocacy of the great cause of foreign missions. Our readers will doubtless follow him with their earnest prayers, and also give their co-operation as far as that is possible.

The revolution in Brazil, by which that vast Empire is transformed into a collection of "United States," is one more proof of the instability of earthly thrones. It is satisfactory to know that the ex-Emperor, Dom Pedro, who has in many respects deserved well of his subjects, leaves his high position with the goodwill of the nation. One of the newspaper correspondents asserts that the present upheaval is the recoil of the people from priestly intrigue and domination. If that explanation be correct, we cannot but rejoice at another symptom of the rising tide of revolt against the tyrannical and unscrupulous hierarchy that is headed up in the occupant of the Papal Chair.

We are sorry to hear from Dr. Barnardo of the present great dearth of funds for the institutions under his care, and which contain to-day 3195 waif and orphan children. This is the more to be regretted, as we understand he enters this week upon a fresh phase of the struggle which the Romanists are waging to take from him little children rescued from vile associations. Our friend should not, we think, be left without a very hearty expression of Christian sympathy in this time of great need. In resisting Papal encroachments in any direction he is really fighting a larger battle than at first sight appears. To do so while weighted with the cares of all his institutions would be no easy task at any time, but when the treasury is empty and a daily deficit is steadily accumulating, the sense of discouragement is more than ordinarily grave.

Professor Watts, of Belfast, has written a drastic and pungent pamphlet (Edinburgh: J. Gemmell, 19, George IV. Bridge) in answer to Dr. Marcus Dods's recent sermon, preached in St. Giles Cathedral, Edinburgh, on the essentials of Christianity. The "new Scottish homiletic" is shown to be a truly miserable substitute for the definite faith once for all delivered to the saints. Dr. Dods, referring to two views of the atonement, one of them recognising propitiation and the other ignoring it, said: "Both theories produce good Christians." Professor Watts easily shows that such an attitude as this implies on the part of Gospel teachers is quite inconsistent with the entire drift of Holy Writ. In some powerful concluding words he says:—

> Paul's homiletics present a wonderful contrast to the St. Giles sermon. They assume the wrath as well as the love of God; they provide an atonement for human guilt; they lay a basis in Christ's righteousness for the justification of God in the justification of men under both Testaments. Of all these there is not one word in Dr. Dods's alternative theory.

To talk of salvation while ignoring justification is simply to speculate; for Revelation clearly explains saving truth by informing us how God's love has graciously met the demands of his justice. To our mind, Professor Watts does not exaggerate when, in view of these facts he says, Dr. Dods's sermon might be entitled, "The Essentials of Christianity, with the Essentials left out."

We direct the attention of our London readers to the special evangelistic missions that are in progress this week in different parts of the Metropolis. Our Wesleyan friends, with Mr. Price Hughes at their head, are attacking the cultured and careless West. Mr. Smith, of Dufftown, is holding aloft the Gospel banner at Aldersgate-street among City young men. At the Metropolitan Tabernacle, Messrs. Fullerton and Smith are busy inviting the sinners of that crowded locality to Christ. Rev. F. D. Sanford, from America, is conducting a mission at Wellington-road Hall, Stoke Newington. A mission is being held simultaneously in four Episcopal churches in Holloway; while our friend Major Whittle is throwing himself zealously into the work at Woolwich. West, Central, North, and South London are thus having the claims of God pressed upon them by earnest ambassadors. We invite all of our readers who can, so to pray and work that those parts of our city may indeed know the day of their visitation.

We have frequently alluded to the desire which is taking form in the hearts, and finding expression in the words and actions, of many good men, for an abatement of sectarian bitterness, for a union of evangelical churches upon the essential points of Christian doctrine, and for joint efforts against the forces of evil. It is, therefore, encouraging and interesting to note, as recorded in a recent book, that in the rapidly progressive country of Japan all denominations work together in the name of their Lord, and that out of two hundred evangelical churches, one hundred and thirty are uniting into one body, under the name of "The Church of Christ in Japan," a new constitution having been drawn up, based upon the principle of unity in essentials and liberty in non-essentials. But, alas! in our own country their can be neither fusion nor federation, if it is to involve reconciliation with Rome and the acknowledgment of the primacy of the Pope—objects which are confessedly aimed at by the accredited leaders of the "Home Re-Union Society." As yet there is too great a disposition to insist upon non-essentials, and the sacerdotal assumptions and unscriptural teachings which are so fatally leavening the Church of England constitute a very formidable barrier to real union.

These are days of intellectual activity, and there is a strong tendency on the part of cultivated minds to look with scorn or suspicion upon any movement or method of which the cause, process, and effect cannot be discovered by earthly and human faculties. It is well, therefore, that the hollowness and the fallacy of the Agnostic assertion that Christianity is an effete or dying creed, unsuited to modern requirements, should be exposed. This has been done in a recent book, entitled, "Religious Teaching and Modern Thought" (H. Frowde), which will well repay perusal. In it Dr. Leebody treats (inter alia) of the three different forms in which Christianity, which he defines as the religion of the New Testament, is currently presented, viz., the Ritualistic, the Rationalist, and the Evangelical; the conclusion at which he arrives is that while Ritualism may enthral a few intellects of the mystical type, while Broad Churchism tends to "reduce Christianity to a code of moral maxims," the Evangelical is the only true and effectual method of presenting Christian truth. He says:—

> Where broad human sympathy is required, where the large and the kindly hand is to be employed for masses as well as units, we find that a process of natural selection assigns the work to Christian people of the evangelical school....The evangelical is the only type of Christian teaching which has any real influence with the lapsed masses in our great cities, and it is the type found most effective in dealing with the heathen.

Apropos of this last sentence it may be noted that if cumulative evidence and ample illustration be desired of the wonderful and exact adaptation of the provisions of the Christian religion to the varied moral and spiritual needs and cravings of the human heart, whatever be the clime, colour, race, or temperament, such evidence and illustration may be found in S. R. Pattison's "Gospel Ethnology" (R.T.S.). From his pages it will be seen how "the great Christian sacrifice draws all men to it," from the untutored Fijian to the cultured Briton.

It is due that we should not omit a notice of Bishop Ryle's address to the Liverpool Diocesan Conference lately held. The Bishop speaks of growing years; but there is no sign of these in the vigour, shrewdness, and directness of his words. He prefers bringing forward the "laity" to conferring "holy orders" on inferior men. He has no hope of deliverance for the times from the establishment of semi-monastic brotherhoods. He recommends suspension for contumacious Ritualistic clergymen rather than allow them to pose as martyrs by imprisonment. He has little to say for a Liverpool Cathedral, which will cost half a million of money; objects to long liturgical services, and to the idea that pompous cathedrals meet the wants of the people. He advocates, however, mission-rooms, about which we quote his brave words:—

> The value of these rooms could not easily be overrated. They enable a clergyman to give short, elementary, non-liturgical services, such as the Apostles used to hold. They enable him to obtain the help of gifted and qualified laymen to hold such services, when he could not hold them himself. Above all, they meet the wants of a large body of the working classes, who now go nowhere at all, and certainly would seldom begin their religious life by going to a long liturgical service which they could not understand. The objection sometimes made that mission-room services do not lead people to church, and only increase Dissent, he did not admit to be valid. Even if it were, he would much rather see people going to mission-rooms than going nowhere at all. The plain truth was, that a miserable cast-iron want of elasticity had long been the bane of the Establishment.

In the Liverpool diocese there are no fewer than 198 mission-rooms.

A writer in The Nonconformist quotes the following from El Norte, a Liberal daily paper, published in Bilbao, an important centre of Jesuit influence. Commenting upon the weakness and almost childishness of the Pontiff, the article says:—

> The Pope's words and acts are not the result of his own free will. They have never been so. Since 1847 the Church has been ruled by the General of the Company (of the Jesuits), and by the Council of the Order....To-day, as yesterday, and now more than ever, the universal government of the Catholic Church is in the hands of the General and the Council, though the faithful believe that Leo XIII. is the helmsman of Peter's barque.

As we recently stated, an Association or Guild has been formed among the Wesleyans which is intended to encourage and assist in the study of the Greek New Testament. Mr. Moulton, of the Leys School, Cambridge, is the provisional secretary. Dr. R. N. Young and Professors Agar Beet and Marshall Randles assist. Such a movement, aided by heads of theological colleges, is very hopeful. And when we read in religious journals of an eminent Congregational minister in Glasgow proclaiming that for eighteen years he had preached the non-substitutionary death of Christ, it is of the first importance that ministers and people of Nonconformist churches should bind themselves together for the confirmation of New Testament theology. Let the new doctrines be thus tested. There need be no fear as to the result.

God has promised to supply all our needs; but are not too many of us apt to mistake our fancied wants and whims, too often bounded by the tiny circle of earth, for real needs? What is the great need of the day, alike in the churches, in the individual, and in the nation? The following earnest and eloquent words by Canon Fleming indicate the source of many a failure:—

> There may be every form of godliness, sacraments, ordinances, a ritual; but, if Christ be hid, the Church is Christless! Then, when men ask for bread, they are offered a stone. We want an honest, straightforward ministry that preaches Christ to the people. The heart of humanity is yearning after something higher than itself. This yearning finds expression in restlessness, in vanity, in dissatisfaction with religion, in a dalliance with something new. There is but one remedy for all this—more of Christ. Let us not utter aimless cries, nor raise loud the shouts of angry controversy, but point men to Christ, saying, "Behold the Lamb of God." This is what the masses want. ...Preacher and people, we need more of Christ. More of Christ would make that sad home bright, that wavering soul steadfast, that breaking heart happy, that mourning spirit glad, that burdened conscience light, that selfish nature generous, and make those who are parted in enmity stand with clasped and forgiving hands. More of Christ would smite down sectarian walls, and win outcasts to the fold. More of Christ is what we all want in our hearts and homes, in our business and politics, in our schools and universities, in our churches and pulpits.

LIVERPOOL SHELTERING HOMES.

A HANDSOME addition to the public buildings of Liverpool has been made by the erection of the Sheltering Home for Destitute Children, in Myrtle-street. For seventeen years Mrs. Birt has been engaged in rescuing little ones from lives of degradation, the work having originally been undertaken mainly through the instrumentality of the late Mr. Alexander Balfour, to whom Liverpool owes so much in Christian and philanthropic endeavour. From small beginnings the Home has grown to unexpected dimensions, and on Saturday last the new and spacious premises were formally opened in the presence of an influential company. The Mayor, Mr. Thomas Hughes, presided over the meeting, and eulogised the work. Mrs. Balfour, in declaring the building open, expressed an earnest hope that the children gathered within its walls would receive lasting good, and that Mrs. Birt and her helpers might be cheered in their devoted efforts. The dedicatory prayer was offered by Bishop Ryle.

Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., in a hearty address, said that no fewer than 2000 poor children, nearly all of whom are now doing well, have been sent from the Home to Canada. He maintained that of all the ways of caring for poor and neglected children, wisely-conducted emigration is the best and most economical. He had, he said, seen many cities of the world, but he had never seen one in which there are such child neglect and child misery as in in Liverpool. Of the causes of this, before all others, stood the detestable drink traffic. The one trade which above all others flourished was that of the gin palace, and one result was the large amount of child misery which prevailed. The Sheltering Home could only save a little of the wreckage, but he sincerely trusted that large success would attend its beneficent operations.

Several other friends also spoke. Mrs. Birt acknowledged the kindness of many helpers in the decoration of the building. By speedy gifts from the many friends of helpless and unfortunate little ones, it is hoped soon to have the Home in good working order, and so furnished as to be in every sense a desirable institution for the training of children in the art of life.

United Special Missions.*

By Rev. W. CROSBIE, Brighton.

The question of special missions is one of the questions of the hour, which is so far a hopeful sign, a sign of dissatisfaction, a sign of reviving life. It is admitted that Christianity is making but little progress, that it is not the force it ought to be in the world, that the churches are not fulfilling the purpose for which they were instituted. Many of the churches have hard work to maintain their position; not a few are on the decline. They are the exception that are vigorous, soul-saving, aggressive agencies, reclaiming the moral wastes, and winning many of the lost to God.

Special missions are not the highest things. They may be a necessity in the present low condition of the Church; and, undoubtedly, they are frequently a means of good; for, there are missions and missions, but they are not the highest things, and I cannot say that I always look upon them with unmixed satisfaction and approval. They are a little abnormal; and, in not a few instances, act only as a sort of spiritual galvanism. Were the Church alive with the life of God—filled with the Holy Ghost—special missions would not be required. The Church would then be a Missionary Society, not for ten, or twelve, or fourteen days, but for all the days, and for all the year.

And so the first thing, and the great thing, to be aimed at is genuine spiritual revival within the Church, a better state of things in the Church, a holier Church, a more Christ-like Church, the Church filled with God. The conviction grows in intensity that that is the special want of the age. Out of a purged, transformed, thoroughly God-possessed Church, would flow, as a matter of course, salvation for the world. Speaking for myself, I have no hope of any permanent improvement and progress until we have a diviner Church, until the spiritual level is considerably raised within the Church. God's plan is to save the world through the Church. But He cannot save the world through the Church as the Church is now. The thing is impossible. There must be a great casting out from the Church first, a deep radical reformation; and there must be the assimilation of the Church to God; and there must be a new infusion and mighty baptism of the Holy Ghost.

The best sign of the times would be the Church prostrate in the dust before God, confessing her shortcomings and sins, lamenting her worldliness, and apathy, and coldness, and seeking, with a great seeking, spiritual renewal and healing, closer conformity to God, and the promised and pledged endowments of God's Spirit. From these exercises, and from that position, she would rise to achieve glorious victories, to re-enact the wonders of the ancient times, to widen and extend vastly the bounds of the empire of Jesus.

We meet to-night to consider how, as Congregational Churches, we can co-operate in special mission work. Can we co-operate in the requisite preparation for special mission work? I press that question; for, it seems to me, to be all-important. I have no fear of the mission work, if we can only get prepared for it. The mission work will be the outcome—and then it will be normal—the outcome of the preparation, and will be conditioned by the preparation.

I understand there is to be a united Church mission in Brighton at the beginning of February. Our friend, Mr. Figgis, is going to have a mission at the same time. And why should not we join, as far as practicable, in the movement? Of course, there can be no organic union. It is a grievous pity there cannot be. It is a shame and a disgrace that there cannot be! Oh that we could forget our differences, and combine on the simple basis of primitive and spiritual Christianity for the evangelisation of Brighton and the neighbourhood! Would it not be a spectacle over which heaven would rejoice, and at which hell would tremble and be dismayed? Upon the united spiritual forces of Brighton marching to the battle, there would come a blessing that would make the war one of the most successful ever waged against the powers of darkness. But it is too much to be hoped for just yet. Still, we may have association with the movement. We ought, I think, to have association with the movement, to the extent that it is possible to us. There should be some kind of Congregational organisation; and if the other Free Churches will join us, so much the better. There is time to consider and mature our plans; and I think our Episcopalian friends should in some way be informed that, with good will, and earnestly desiring God's glory and the salvation of our fellow townspeople, it is our purpose to place ourselves in sympathetic and harmonious relation with the enterprise.

Meanwhile, there should be much prayer, much waiting upon God. At the throne of grace light will come to us, and guidance, and power; and, taking God with us into the effort, it will succeed; and a new era will be inaugurated in the history of our churches, and in the history of Christianity in Brighton.*

Let me close this brief address by quoting some words descriptive of a mission that is going forward just now in my native country. The mission seems to be a fulfilment of the ideal. Says the writer:—

> The Lord has, of a truth, made bare his arm in Airdrie. Like as it was when Philip the Evangelist was in Samaria, there is great joy in this city, for the Lord hath done great things in the salvation of sinners. By common consent, there has never been so wide and deep a work of grace in this town and neighbourhood before. It is not difficult to account for it. The mission was arranged four months ago. The committee consisted of all the ministers in the place, with two exceptions, besides representatives from every church, and they had the co-operation of the excellent and active local Evangelistic Association. For months past prayer has been made to God for the success of the effort. As was to be expected, from the very first meeting the presence of the Lord and the power of the Holy Ghost have been manifest....Nearly four hundred have made an open confession of Christ.†

Let there be union in prayer among us also; and let the prayer be prayer indeed—holy wrestling, a taking hold upon God, and a not letting Him go; let the concerted action be so conditioned, and the results cannot but be glorious.

The opportunity is great. The circumstances are specially favourable. And a strong, devoted, admirably qualified agent and evangelist is ready to our hand, provided, it seems to me, by God. Shall we not, then, heed and obey the call, and make this hour memorable and blessed by consecrating ourselves afresh, and unreservedly, to God, and to his service? We occupy the position of leadership in connection with the churches we represent. And it is the special function of leaders to lead. What answer do we give to Him who speaks, and who has such claims upon us? What reply do we make to the cry of the souls that are perishing all around us? Oh that we could get a new view of the cross—a right view of the cross—and come under its influence, and be penetrated by its spirit, as never before! Oh that the Holy Ghost would anoint us with his special anointing, for the service and work to which we are putting our hand!

EVANGELISATION IN JAPAN.

No country is more ready than Japan to receive the Gospel, and there is at present no hindrance put in the way of the people to prevent them from listening to it. While the door is thus wide open, there is a strong desire on the part of many to enter and spread abroad the Saviour's name. With this upon her heart, Miss Dawbarn, self-supporting missionary, Tokyo, writes to us:—

"A lady evangelist, who has laboured here for nearly twenty years, is desirous of retiring from the post of Principal of a large boarding school for girls, and devoting herself entirely to Gospel work. For this she is eminently qualified by the great command she has of the language of the people, and their eagerness at all times to hear her. The time she has hitherto been able to give to this work has been the leisure from school duties. At such times she has never been sparing of exertion, while between school terms she has taken tours, accompanied by some Bible-women under her instruction. When not engaged in conducting meetings, she is dealing with inquirers. In fact, invitations come to her from all parts of the country, and the expenses of her travels are largely met from her own resources.

"It is proposed to build, at the cost of £200, a room in which this devoted lady can hold her meetings, while continuing to teach and train her Bible-women, and to assist the many who are always seeking her counsel and aid. This is an extension of work among people who must be taught what the Gospel is before they care to pay for it."

Miss Dawbarn is well known among Christian workers in Japan, and highly esteemed by friends of missions in England and America. Mrs. Sharland, self-supporting missionary, Yokohama, who also has the project very near her heart, writes: "I believe that, if God should enable Miss Dawbarn to carry out the plan of extension, much blessing to Gospel work in this land would be the result."

A SALUTATION FROM BRAZIL.—Dear Sir,—Someone is sending me your most valuable publication, The Christian, and I desire to thank him from the depths of my heart for his brotherly kindness. Such deeds, from a stranger in the flesh, are appreciated by the foreign missionary; for he knows that the donor feels an interest in mission work, and prays for it, and such prayers are answered. It also makes him rejoice in the glorious fact that our Father's children are all one in spirit, though they be of different nationalities, separated by the rolling deep, and unknown to each other. Mrs. Daniel and I came to this province from Rio de Janeiro last February, and began work in this city. We have met with much obstinate resistance and severe persecution, but the Lord has nevertheless blessed us. One man who was a fierce persecutor is now meekly sitting at Jesus' feet, clothed and in his right mind. Our address is no longer Rio de Janeiro but Juiz de Fora, Minas Géraes, Brazil.—Yours in the Gospel,

C. D. Daniel.

The First Epistle of Peter.

X.—GOD'S NEW-BORN BABES AND THEIR FOOD.

1 PETER ii. 1—3.

THIS paragraph is closely connected with the preceding one. In that we learnt how we had been born again, and entered by the new birth into the family of God. Here the same thought is resumed. We are addressed as the babes of the Divine family, and bidden to cultivate the temper and seek the nourishment suitable to a relationship at once so blessed and hallowed.

I. OUR CONDITION AS GOD'S LITTLE ONES.—"New-born babes." The metaphor is a very touching one. This world is but the nursery in which the heirs of God are spending the first lisping years of their existence, preparatory to the opening of life to full maturity yonder in the light of God. The most advanced among us, in knowledge and attainment, are, in comparison with what they shall be, only as babes. The furthest stretch of vision, the most perfect conceptions of the intellect, the fittest expressions of truth, are but as the untutored thoughts and babblings of babyhood, compared with what is to be in the mature life which beckons us yonder.

The same idea is expressed by the Apostle Paul in his exquisite idyll on Christian love. He is endeavouring to show that this fairest of the whole band of Christian graces is eternal in its nature, budding here, defying the frosts of death, and blooming in heaven's everlasting summer. And, to make his conception more emphatic, he contrasts love with knowledge, affirming that our profoundest knowledge must vanish away, because in this life we are but children. "When I was a child I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childish things." And, similarly, in the next life, while we retain the love which we have had in this, we shall put away the knowledge as partial and immature, because from being children we shall have become men in Christ. We need not concern ourselves now with all the majestic conceptions which cluster around those words; it is enough to notice the thought, that the Apostle Paul considered himself a little child, compared with the coming maturity of eternity.

This word should teach us Humility. "Our best pace and strongest walking in obedience here is but as the stepping of children when they begin to go by hold, in comparison with the perfect obedience of glory, when we shall follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth. All our knowledge here is but as the ignorance of infants, and all our expressions of God and of his praises but as the first stammerings of children, in comparison with the knowledge we shall have of Him hereafter, when we shall know as we are known, and with the praises we shall offer to Him, when that new song shall be taught us." It becomes us, therefore, not to exercise ourselves in great matters, or in things too high for us, but to quiet ourselves as a child that is weaned of its mother, so that our souls may be even as a weaned child. Not surprised, if unnoticed or unknown; not angry, if treated with small respect; not discouraged, if face to face with incomprehensible mysteries. Our intellect is only in its dawn, our powers undeveloped, our mental grasp limited. Far be from us the haughty heart, the proud look, the conceited opinion, the sweeping assertion of self-satisfaction. Ours is the lisp of infancy: "Abba."

This word should also teach us Hope. There is no young thing so helpless as a babe, or for so long dependent on its parents' care. But He who has appointed the long months of babyhood has also provided the love and patience with which mother and father welcome and tend the strange wee thing which has come into their home. It is not often that a woman can forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on her son. Through ailments and sicknesses, days of anxiety and nights of watching, with love which never considers cost, or pain, or self-denial, two fond guardian angels care for the babe. Its least cry will compel the service of a man dreaded by all his comrades, and noted for the strength and independence of his character. And shall God have put into others qualities in which He is Himself deficient? Shall He have provided so carefully for us in our first birth, and have provided nought in our second? Is not the very love of the human parent a parable of that of the Divine? Is He not Mother and Father both?

It must be so. Since He has begotten us into his family, He must have to us the love of a parent to a babe, and we must have a claim on Him, as the babe on its parent. The more utterly helpless, and ignorant, and dependent the babe is, the stronger is its claim. Yes, and the more puny and sickly it is, the more urgent are its demands for tender solicitude and attention, till the spark of life, shaded by loving hands from the least unkindly breath, grows strong within the tiny lanthorn. Who is angry with a child because it is weakly, sick, and dull of brain? Who does not find in these things the reason for greater tenderness, so that mothers are said to love most the children who have cost them most? And is it not so with God? Your weakness, and ailments, and nervous dread, and besetting sins, and hereditary taint of evil habit, and dulness of vision, will not drive God from you, but will bring Him nearer. These things will draw down his choicest love to your poor-cradled being. He will sit beside you as a nurse. He will watch your every change. He will care for you with unslumbering thoughtfulness. He will supply your every need. He will make you know things hidden from the wise and prudent, but revealed to babes, in words which even they can understand. He will never leave you until you are reared to the perfect beauty of maturity in Christ.

This word should also teach us our true attitude towards God. Throw yourself on Him with the abandonment of a babe. Roll on Him the responsibility of choosing for you—directing, protecting, and delivering you. If you cannot understand his will, expect Him to make it plain. If you cannot feel as you would, believe that his feeling towards you is unalterable as a father's. If you are overcome by sin, be sure that it cannot alienate his love, any more than can the small-pox, which has marred some dear tiny face, prevent the mother from kissing the little parched lips. Oh! strong men and women, never get so strong as to cease to remember that you are the babes of God, and that you may carry out this winsome similitude to the full. Listen to his boast: "I have nourished and brought up children."

II. OUR FOOD.—"Long for the spiritual milk which is without guile" (R.V.). At the close of the previous chapter the word of God was compared with seed, here with milk. But it is the same principle under different aspects. The new life is nourished by that through which it was first imparted. There are deep analogies between the worlds of nature and of grace, attesting the unity of design which pervades the universe, making the seen and the unseen one great whole.

There is nothing which so proves the inspiration of the Scriptures as their suitableness to the nurture of the new life in the soul. As long as that life is absent, there is no special charm in the sacred Word: it lies unnoticed on the shelf. But directly it has been implanted, and whilst yet in its earliest stages, it seeks after the Word of God as a babe after its mother's milk; and instantly it begins to grow. This affinity between the Divine life in the soul and the sacred Scriptures establishes their emanation from the same source as gave it birth. Human life in infancy is most naturally nourished by the products of the life from which it originated; and since the Divine life in man is nourished by the words of the Bible, surely it also is proved to be Divine in its origin, supernatural in its qualities, heavenly in its temper, as far removed from the earthly and human as is the life to which it ministers.

Oh, well would it be if we were to minister to the regenerated spirits around us more of the pure and unadulterated Word of God! It is this which they really need. They may be attracted and pleased for a time by flowers of rhetoric and the dazzling glow of eloquence, but they will not be satisfied by these things. Underneath all there will be a great hunger for the sincere milk of the Word. And when that word is presented in all its fulness and simplicity, eager appetites will gather around, as bees attracted by the flower-gardens, or the fragrant breath of the heather. "Before conversion, wit or eloquence may draw a man to the Word, and, possibly prove a happy bait to catch him; but when once he is born again then it is the milk itself that he desires for itself."

And here surely we are taught the reason why so many Christians around us are so puny and stunted in their growth. They are always needing attention, nursing, wheeling about in perambulators, because their teachers have not provided them with the nutriment which they really need. As unsuitable food, however abundant, will soon tell its own tale on the pinched face of a babe, so the sickly condition of so many Christians sets forth a lamentable complaint of the food with which they are supplied. To say nothing of strong meat, they do not even get milk. Hence the Church of God too much resembles the wards of a children's hospital.

III. HOW TO CREATE AN APPETITE FOR THE WORD.—"Desire." One of the most dangerous symptoms is the loss of appetite. It is the danger-signal warning that evil lurks unseen within. And there is no surer indication of religious declension and ill-health than the cessation of desire for the Word of God. How can that appetite be created where lacking, and stimulated where declining? The answer is given in the context.

(1) Put off the evil that clings to you.—The word translated "putting away" is the same as in Col. iii. 8. The idea is the change of dress which is often used as a Scriptural figure for the change of the habit of the soul. The habiliments which we must doff are enumerated, and a terrible catalogue it is. Alas that it should ever have been necessary, or that it should still be, to urge Christians to surrender such obvious evils as these!

Malice, which is anger cooled down into "double-distilled malignity," rejoicing in the misfortunes which come to others. Guile, which savours of trick and craft. Hypocrisy, the Judas-act of concealing treachery beneath the garb of friendship. Envy, which repines at another's good. Both malice and envy vent themselves in evil speaking. These things spoil the appetite for God's Word, as surely as sweetmeats clog the physical appetite and taste. Many cannot enjoy the Word of God, because their minds are so occupied with these poisoned dainties, or with the sugar-coated sweetmeats of exciting or questionable literature, of worldly amusements, and of evil imaginings. These things must be at once and for ever put away. You must elect the cross. There must be a casting aside of the shameful works of darkness, so only can the appetite for God's Word become vigorous and eager. Fling away the rubbish, and the spring will burst up naturally from the ground.

(2) Remember that your growth depends on your feeding on the Word.—Who is there amongst us that is not anxious to grow, to become more Christlike, and holy, and devoted, to increase in knowledge and in grace? But we appear often to imagine that we shall grow by attending meetings or doing Christian work. It is a disastrous mistake. And until we come to see that growth is proportionate to Bible-study, it will be impossible to rise up to the perfect beauty of the stature of Christ. We shall always be children, carried away by every wind of doctrine.

Do not always read your Bible because you like to do so, or desire it, but because it is right to do it, and as a matter of simple duty to your own life. Study the Word under the light of the Holy Spirit, as the ancient saint, when blindness was setting in, was wont to carry his Bible to the window, and place the open page in the full beams of the western sun. And slowly the appetite will re-assert itself, and you will come to esteem the Word of God more than your necessary food.

(3) Stimulate your desire by the memory of past enjoyment.—"If so be that ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious." We seek food, not only because our body requires it, but because we remember the past sweetness of it to our taste. We often take more than is necessary to appease hunger, because the food s toothsome.

Ah, how sweet to the taste is the precious Lord! None among the sons and daughters of men can be compared to Him. His love has sometimes filled our souls with inexpressible delight and bliss—grapes of Eshcol, prelibations of the river of life, branches laden with fruit reaching over the wall. And those who have once tasted of that love have contracted a passion which grows in being fed. Because they have tasted they must come again and again to stay an appetite which, though always being met, is always on the increase.

Do you not remember days like these, of feasting and song, when you were led into his banqueting-house, or sat under his shadow with great delight? If so, surely the memory of them will sharpen the jaded desire, until it cries with the spouse: "Stay me with flagons, comfort me with apples; for I am sick of love." Ah, how vapid and insipid do the joys of the world appear when once the soul has tasted that the Lord is gracious. "Taste and see that the Lord is good: blessed is the man that trusteth in Him."

Some Scottish Missions.—VI.

SOLDIERS' HOME, PIERSHILL.

A BRIEF tram ride from the General Post Office, Edinburgh, passing on the way the grim and stately gaol, and, further on, the picturesque Castle of Holyrood, brings us to the Piershill Barracks, a glimpse at which is sufficient to assure the visitor of the importance and need of some effective agency on behalf of the soldiers quartered there. Beyond these again we come to a pretty unpretentious little villa lying back from the road, with a neat grass-plot in front, and a healthy creeper over the door. This is the Soldiers' Home, superintended by Miss Edwina Lloyd, who, with the aid of her sister and a soldiers' missionary, watches over the spiritual interests of those quartered at the Barracks up the road.

The Home was founded thirty years ago by the late Miss Haig, by whose exertions it was built, carried on, and left, free of debt, to the managers who now conduct its affairs. These are Lady Grant, Major-General Wahab, Lieut.-Colonel A. J. Colquhoun, Capt. J. E. Christie, and Mr. D. Scott-Moncrieff, W.S.

Miss Lloyd laboured for many years in Dublin, in district visitation, under the late Dean of Cork. Upon his death she removed to Mildmay, taking part in the mission work of the deaconesses. A subsequent experience with Miss Daniel, at the Soldiers' Home, Aldershot, and two years amongst soldiers in Dublin, sufficed to qualify her for the position she now occupies, which was entered upon in 1882. There is attaching to the work, in the Home being situated about a quarter of a mile beyond the Barracks, along an unlighted road, which in winter is often well-nigh impassable. No wonder, then, that attention was directed to an excellent plot of ground immediately opposite the gate of the Barracks, which, being recently for sale, has now been secured for the erection of a new Home and Institute.

The greatest, and yet at times the most painful, interest attaches to this work among the soldiers. Many very striking conversions, and others of more ordinary type (but none the less real), have been recorded; but these are often secured after weeks of anxious watching over the lives of the men; and occasionally the workers are saddened by hearing that one has gone back to drink, or to a life of sin. But the happiest feature of the work is that many who have been the most notorious for fast and wicked lives have, by the grace of God, become the most earnest lovers of the Lord, and workers in his cause among their fellows.

One man, who was a terrible drinker and gambler, and scarcely ever sober, when (as a rare occurrence) his comrades succeeded in bringing him to a meeting at the Home, was induced to sign the pledge by Miss Lloyd, who, as is her invariable rule with the men, engaged in prayer with him. A week elapsed, and he had not paid another visit; but one night he came to her greatly agitated, exclaiming, "Oh, Miss, you don't know what you made me do!

IT'S BEEN AN AWFUL WEEK

for me; the fight has been terrible!" He was urged to give himself to God as the only sure means of safety, with the result that he has since been used in bringing others to the same Saviour.

Another man, also noted in his regiment for his sinful life, was brought to Christ in a somewhat similar manner. He is now quartered at Canterbury, and is one of the most earnest workers there, and has been the means of blessing to many. Indeed, it was mainly through him that the Soldiers' Home at Canterbury was instituted, for he wrote to the Archbishop, pleading with him to use his influence to get one established for that large garrison; and his appeal was successful.

One of the most fruitful means by which an influence is gained over the men is the hospital. The workers visit those who are sick, and by kindness win their confidence and esteem, with the result that when the patients recover, an acquaintance has been formed, which often ripens into the closest friendship. It was in this manner that the present missionary of the Home was brought to Christ; and on leaving the service he returned to the Home, and now gives his whole time to labouring for the spiritual welfare of the men, whose temptations, dispositions, and needs he understands so well. Such a man is invaluable to a work like this. His affection for the Home is a sure proof of its worth; and letters are constantly received from men in all parts of the world, who look back with joy and thankfulness upon the days when they were brought to Christ at Piershill. It is just in this respect that the work is so important, inasmuch as it raises up soldier missionaries, who, instead of exercising an evil influence abroad, not only work for the salvation of their comrades, but also spread the Gospel in the various lands to which they are sent.

YOUNG GENTLEMEN PRIVATES.

Among the privates are to be found many young men of gentle birth and superior education. Some have run away from home; others have, by force of circumstances, been led to seek such a living as a soldier's life affords. One of the best cases of conversion that Miss Lloyd has known in her work was that of a young man in this position. He accepted "the gift of God" after attending the Bible-class for some time, abandoned his wild and reckless life, and by diligence and good conduct succeeded in obtaining the commission he now holds as an officer, serving in India.

Another important step taken by Miss Lloyd was to commence work among the civilian population in the vicinity of the Barracks, believing that if a Christian community were established around them, the men would find it easier to abandon their careless and often degrading lives. Considerable success has attended this effort, and many men and women, of the neighbourhood, have been reclaimed. One of these is now a church member and a worker in the Carrubbers' Close Mission. To a large railway factory close by Miss Lloyd has also gained an entrance, resulting in the conversion of some of the men engaged in the works.

The present premises of the Home are comfortable, but, as regards location, inconvenient, and, as regards accommodation, inadequate; while therefore the very most is made of them—and they are utilised to the fullest extent—it is felt essential to secure a more advantageous building, which is to be erected upon the site opposite the Barracks, at a cost (including hall for meetings, which is an absolute necessity, and gymnasium), of £3000, of which about half has been guaranteed. The principal agencies carried on are evangelistic and temperance meetings, band of hope, Sabbath-school, boys' brigade, mothers' meetings, separate Bible-classes for men and women, work society, and savings' bank. The "Shirt Association" is also a useful institution, giving employment to the women, as well as providing a source of remuneration.

It will be seen from these jottings that, though the Home itself is small, its influence is great; and that, though its immediate field of operation is limited, the results accruing are far-reaching, even to the ends of the earth. If any desire further particulars, they may communicate with Miss Lloyd, or with the treasurer, Mr. D. Scott Moncrieff, 17, Duke-street, Edinburgh.

God's Free Gift.

IT is the crowning glory of the Gospel of Jesus Christ that it is for all men, without money and without price. It is to the credit of the Christian Churches of to-day that they are sending living messengers all over the world to tell out fully and freely the good news. The same principle has not been so fully recognised in spreading abroad the printed message. And yet the latter is by far the easier task of the two. Bibles, Gospels, portions can be sent or given where no human agent can either go or stay. This free sowing beside all waters must be much more extensively done, if the heathen nations are ever to have a chance of learning the glad tidings of great joy which are for all people. Where this sowing is done in faith, and in the spirit of love, the results are abundantly encouraging. Let us make haste to scatter with unstinted hand the leaves of the tree of life, that are truly for the healing of the nations. Some extracts from letters received by Mrs. Robertson, of the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures (Chesils, Christchurch-road, Hampstead, N.W.), will be found of great interest by our readers :—

Dr. A. Althausen, of Wilna, Russia, writes :—"The distribution of the Scriptures, obtained through your gift, took place among the free Jews, especially among the Talmud pupils, who are found in thousands in Wilna; also among the military people and prisoners. It was most touching to see the hunger with which the poor people seized the bread of life. The overseer of a Talmud high school visited me, and said he wished that his pupils should read and believe in the New Testament, as he was convinced that only through faith in Christ could the Jews find blessed freedom."

Miss Colville, of Constantine, North Africa, writes in April :—"We met a Kabyle last month, who had received a Gospel from a missionary six years ago. This man had learnt to read, and knew the Gospel well. My companion and I were the first he had met who understood Arabic, and he was delighted to meet us, as he treasured his Gospel, and wished for another, which I gave him."

From a correspondent in Paris :—"An English shoemaker and his wife, to whom I gave a Bible, have not only been reading it, as they promised they would do (I never give a copy without extracting a promise), but have been led to feel themselves lost sinners, and to accept Christ as the Saviour. Another case is that of a woman too poor to buy a Bible; she has been reading it, and says she would not take a hundred francs for it."

From a lady in Florence :—"We are very thankful indeed for the grant. There are so many villages around Florence where there is nothing known of the Gospel, and we are so wishing to go to them...Many of the people are so poor they cannot buy it. Yet they are intelligent, and they do seem hungry and thirsty for the knowledge of Christ."

Mr. Liley, of the province of Oran, Algeria, says :—"An Arab who had often asked me for a Bible came for it. As I gave it to him, his face beamed with joy: 'Now I shall take it home and read it candidly. As I read, I shall ask God to show me the truth, and who is right—Mohammed, or Jesus Christ.'"

Mr. G. C. Dutt writes from Khoolna, Bengal :—"A young Hindu belonging to a very respectable family is struggling hard to embrace our holy religion. He is reading the Word of God attentively. I had given him a copy out of your grant. In the beginning of the year I baptized a young man at Paringhat, who received a copy of the Oriya Bible from me."

A worker among Jews in East London writes :—"Lately I was greatly cheered by the testimony of a young Jew who came to me, and said, 'Do you see this Bible? You gave it to me four years ago. I was then living among the Jews, and tore out the title-page, because it had on it "The Old and New Testament." I am now rejoicing in God my Saviour, and would not like to part with this blessed Book for anything.'"

Mr. J. S. Anderson, writing from Florence, tells of many needy and dark villages where copies have been sent, and adds :—"I gave a Bible to a young Italian of sixteen, who has just been converted. His conversion was due to the reading of the Scriptures, which are his daily delight, and which are making him a young Timothy."

LONDON SAMARITAN SOCIETY.

THIS well-known agency for the help of the London poor now publishes a Quarterly Record, designed to give more full and frequent accounts of its work than could be furnished in an annual report. The current issue contains many gratifying particulars of the Convalescent Homes, which are a leading feature of the Mission. The Beach Rocks Home, at Sandgate, which has helped many hundreds of ailing toilers back to health and strength, has of recent years proved much too small for the demands upon it. The old building is now giving place to a handsome and well-appointed structure, which, in its completed form, is represented by the accompanying engraving. At present the half of the new building is in process of erection. This first moiety of the reconstructed Beach Rocks will cost between £5000 and £6000, and we trust the many friends of the good work will come forward to its help in this fresh and large development of the benefits it confers. This Sandgate Sanatorium stand very high in the list of such institutions; with the increased and improved accommodation it cannot but prove a still greater boon to those of our industrial population who require its friendly aid.

The coming winter will soon bring into prominence the need of the general relief work carried on by the Society. On this branch we may quote the following from the Quarterly Record :—

"Under genial summer skies, clothing and shelter are matters of less account, and even the food question is not such a clamant one. November fogs and frosts very quickly reveal the weak places in the constitution, and the life of the great army of London's poor becomes one unceasing struggle with hunger and nakedness. In this important branch of our work, we act as almoner and distributor of help; leaving its actual individual application, to a large extent, to those who are locally acquainted with the sad and sorrowful facts that come to the knowledge of every sympathetic worker among those who have been termed 'the under crust' of society. The workers who apply for a share of the Society's bounty are as varied as possible. Many Christian workers of different denominations apply to us for help in the shape of relief tickets, and afterwards write to tell of the unalloyed pleasure with which they distribute these eagerly coveted tokens. The expressions of thankfulness on the part of the recipients are often of a most pathetic kind, and might well stir the Christian heart to sympathy. Those who have never felt the gnawing of the pangs of hunger besides the exposure to biting cold that finds its way through 'looped and windowed raggedness,' cannot have any real conception of the boon that is wrapped up in a nourishing meal coupled with the gift of a warm garment. Much excellent relief work is carried on by kind masters and mistresses among the children attending Board schools. It is a delight to be able, in some degree, to second the humane and truly Christian efforts of these teachers. If donors could see for themselves the beneficial results on the children, and could read the many grateful acknowledgements that come from the teachers, they would be more than repaid."

GOD'S THOUGHTS ABOUT SIN.

I.—ITS NATURE.

"Sin is the transgression of the law" (1 John iii. 4).

"All unrighteousness is sin" (1 John v. 17).

"The thought of foolishness is sin" (Prov. xxiv. 9).

"To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin" (James iv. 17).

"Whatsoever is not of faith is sin" (Rom. xiv. 23).

II.—ITS CHARACTERISTICS.

"A reproach" (Prov. xiv. 34).

"An abomination unto the Lord" (Prov. xv. 9, Isa. lxvi. 3, Ezek. xvi. 50).

"Filthiness" (Prov. xxx. 12, Job xv. 16, Rev. xxii. 11).

"Deceitful" (Heb. iii. 13).

"Hardening" (Heb iii. 13).

"The sting of death" (1 Cor. xv. 56).

III.—ITS UNIVERSALITY.

"All have sinned" (Rom. iii. 23).

"There is none righteous" (Rom. iii. 10).

"They are all gone aside, they are all become filthy" (Ps. xiv. 3).

"The heart is...desperately wicked" (Jer. xvii. 9).

IV.—ITS END AND ITS CONSEQUENCES.

"The unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God" (1 Cor. vi. 9).

"Tribulation and anguish, upon every soul that doeth evil" (Rom. ii. 9).

"Cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience" (Eph. v. 6).

"Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death" (James i. 15).

"Upon the wicked He shall rain snares, fire and brimstone, and an horrible tempest" (Ps. xi. 6).

"The wicked shall be turned into hell" (Ps. ix. 17).

"The wages of sin is death" (Rom. vi. 23).

V.—SIN PUT AWAY.

By whom? "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world" (John i. 29).

How? "He... put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself" (Heb. ix. 26).

Where? "Who...bare our sins...on the tree" (1 Pet. ii. 24).

When? "Once ..at the end (or consummation—see margin) of the ages" (Heb. ix. 26, R.V.).

For whom? "The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all" (Isa. liii. 6).

VI.—THE OUTCOME.

"Through this man is preached...the forgiveness of sins; and by Him all that believe are justified" (Acts xiii. 38, 39).

"You hath He quickened [made alive], who were dead" (Eph. ii. 1).

"We also should walk in newness of life" (Rom. vi. 4).

REMINISCENCES OF

The Late Mr. H. F. Bowker.

Many were privileged to enjoy a closer intimacy than myself with this honoured servant of God, especially during the last ten years, but few can have known him longer. Certainly none could possibly have greater reason to revere and love his memory. Deeper than words can describe is my sorrow that I shall see his face no more on earth. With many others—his sons in the Gospel—I can only cry, "My father, my father," and pray that in that rich measure in which he manifested the mind of Christ, and watched for the souls of men, a double portion of his spirit may rest upon us who remain.

Though it is fully thirty years ago, it seems but yesterday, that as a boy fresh from a country home, and cast upon the great and troubled sea of London life, I found my way in the mercy of God to the Sunday afternoon Bible-class of the West Branch of the Y.M.C.A., held in Savile-row, Regent-street. Mr. Bowker, at that time a master of Christ's Hospital, was its conductor. He appeared even then in my boyish eyes a venerable man. Indeed to the last, even as late as a few months back when I saw and heard him at the Portman Rooms, his face seemed to me but little changed from what it was when I first looked upon it, and caught the light of his kindly eye. It wore the same calm, grave look as of old. His voice too had scarcely altered, and I could even fancy myself a lad again, listening spell-bound, as, in those well-known tones of tender earnestness, he spake of the things of God and eternity.

But to return to my narrative. I have no recollection of the particular portion of Scripture under consideration on that never-to-be-forgotten Sunday afternoon. I only remember that Mr. Bowker closed the Bible-class with an earnest and affectionate appeal to decision for Christ, which riveted me to my seat, and filled me with mingled wonder and concern. It was all so new to me. At the conclusion of his remarks he left his desk and made his way to where I was sitting. Gently placing his hand on my shoulder (I think I feel its pressure even at this moment) he looked me full in the face, and in tones of piercing tenderness said, "Dear boy, you have been in my thoughts all the time I have been speaking. Let me tell you what I have been thinking. If you were to give your heart to Christ now, what a useful life yours might be."

I remember nothing else but that I burst into tears, and soon found myself, with a broken heart, seeking the face of that Saviour the riches of whose grace it has been my happy privilege to preach for now nearly thirty years; and blessed years they have been, despite the failure and sorrow which have marked them. Unspeakably blessed, for in them God has given me to see not a few precious souls won to Himself, and many a weary-footed pilgrim safely homed. Yet in the sovereignty of Divine grace, but for the faithful loving ministry of this dear man they had never been. In those days, a youth making open confession of Christ had for the most part to stand alone, and endure an amount of ridicule and direct persecution scarcely possible in the present time. It was Mr. Bowker's custom to devote every Friday evening to conversation and prayer with inquirers and young converts, when he would bring to bear the weight of his matured Christian experience and extensive Bible knowledge, to counsel and encourage such in their peculiar difficulties and temptations. The remembrance of these occasions is very sweet to me to this hour.

A few years later I served a brief apprenticeship in Christian word and work under Mr. Bowker's wise and gentle leadership, at 48, Great Marlborough-street, whither the Bible-class had at that time removed from Savile-row. There I found a goodly band of like-minded men whose faces I can more easily recall than their names. I can never forget dear Charles Humphrey, to whom I owe so much, or James Pearce, the present secretary (then Mr. Bowker's faithful lieutenant), or Dr. Moore, or Mr. J. White, or Dr. Smith (father of the Mr. Stanley Smith now in China) Mr. Underwood, and many others.

It was about this time that Mr. Brownlow North and beloved Reginald Radcliffe commenced their abundant labours in the west and north-west of London. The latter was greatly used of God in some Sunday afternoon addresses at Great Marlborough-street, during the secretaryship of Mr. Bowker, by whom he was warmly welcomed and aided. Those were glad days indeed. "So are these," many will say. They are, from some points of view, I admit; and yet I find myself lingering upon the memory of these old scenes of Gospel triumph from 1857 to 1861 at Marlborough-street and Stafford Rooms, and wondering if in the sphere of the Y.M.C.A. workings there is the same Christian simplicity and singleness of aim in the direct work of winning the souls of young men, and having for its motto, "This one thing we do."

But I hardly like raising the question, lest I should seem to reflect on the fidelity and evangelistic ardour of present-day workers in that noble field of Christian service. Rather would I express the hope that we shall yet see greater outpourings of Divine grace and power upon our young men and others. Let us cry mightily to God for this, and pray that the garnering of our beloved friend, like a shock of corn well ripened, may stir us one and all to seek what to the very last he so ardently aimed to exhibit —A FULL CONSECRATION OF HEART AND LIFE TO THE SERVICE OF CHRIST AND THE SALVATION OF MEN.

EVANGELISATION IN SICILY.

Messrs. Varnier and Scuderi have been evangelising in and around Messina since 1879. They were formerly priests of the Church of Rome. Varnier was brought to Christ in 1860, and was afterwards the means of Scuderi's conversion. The Hon. Secretary, 120, Queen's-gate, London, S.W., can give further information. In a letter dated, Mandanici, Sicily, October 31, Signor Varnier writes:—

"The Lord has indeed wrought wonderful things. Whilst I am writing to you, Signor Scuderi is evangelising a crowd of poor sick men and women, young and old, come to be treated medically by the doctor, whom the Lord has raised up to be indeed a great instrument for the furtherance of the Gospel, and a great help to us. The influence acquired by our Mission here and throughout this district is very great indeed. The Lord has granted to us the privilege of seeing the Gospel triumph where, in the beginning of our evangelistic labours, poor Mr. Scuderi was not allowed even to lodge in the town, and where we were looked upon as accursed heretics, wicked Protestants, agents of Satan, and enemies of God and of his Church, doomed to hell fire! Now all, without distinction, look upon us as the true messengers of Christ.

"What I should like to impress upon the minds of our friends is not the number of actual converts, but the widespread influence that the Gospel is acquiring among the people of this land. It is the sowing of the seed which in due time will yield its abundant harvest."

CREWE.—A correspondent writes expressing regret that, among the many special missions held or arranged for, the midland town of Crewe appears to be left out in the cold. Its importance as a railway centre gives it a strong claim on the interest of the travelling public. Perhaps our friends of the Railway Mission may arrange for some extended evangelistic effort there.

DARK NOVEMBER.

In the dark November of human life,
When its summer days are dead,
With the chilling frost on the stiffening limb,
And the snow on the drooping head,
A voice comes back from a wasted life,
'Tis the old and the sad refrain
To the dirge of the years that return no more—
"I have lived, but lived in vain!"

Our beautiful castles of gems and gold,
High hopes of the earth and heaven,
Neglected, to follow some gay mirage,
The tempests of time have riven!
As moans of the dead, in these ruined halls,
The ghosts of our years complain,
For the glory which should and which could have been—
"I have lived, but lived in vain!"

But grace, like the angels at Jesus' tomb,
Sits yet on the heart's grave-stone.
And announces a life of eternal bliss;
Let us make that gift our own!
And the time of the singing of birds shall come,
And the flowers shall bloom again,
And we'll shout, in eternity's summer song—
"I have lived, but not in vain."

THE LATE LADY PLUNKET.

The death of this Christian lady, well known in Irish circles, was recorded in our last issue. Her funeral was the occasion for a very widespread expression of sympathy with her husband, the Archbishop of Dublin, and of deep sorrow at the loss to the Christian community caused by her death. From a brief but interesting address by Canon Wynne at the funeral, we extract some details of her ladyship's life:—

"Very early in her life, from the education of a godly father and a sainted mother, she imbibed deep religious impressions; and as her life grew from childhood to womanhood, those impressions deepened into very earnest personal decision, a personal decision of heart and soul for God and for righteousness. She learned that her life was given to her as a sacred trust, for usefulness and for service. She used to go from time to time to walk with her father through the Liberties of Dublin, and as she saw the numbers of poor women and children living there so uncared for, she made an earnest determination in her heart that she would strive to help to alleviate their difficulties. Perhaps it might not be known to many there that the first mothers' meeting ever held in Dublin was held by her when she was a girl of eighteen or nineteen. She gathered together into a room in one of the poorest parishes in Dublin a little company of poor women, only five or six at the beginning, and with great nervousness she conducted this first mothers' meeting. From that little beginning there had arisen the great machinery that they now called the Association for Woman's Work—an association which had a network of beautiful and holy influences for women's alleviation and for women's help in their city. Another great woman's work in which Lady Plunket was deeply interested, and which she helped forward by her generosity and her efforts, was the Clergy Daughters' School. The very last act she performed whilst dying was to endorse with trembling hands some cheques which she had received in aid of that institution, so that they might be sent to help forward a work in which her heart was so deeply interested."

CHRISTIAN LADS' SOCIETY.—Mr. G. H. Snell's work among North London lads continues to be blessed. On Lord's Day week the services were held in the new home of the Society, 20, Bedford-terrace, Durham-road, N. A number of the lads professed conversion, and the day ended quite joyously. The Society has in view the temporal help and encouragement of the lads, as well as their spiritual enlightenment.

THE BIBLE SOCIETY AND ITS WORK.

THE eighty-fifth annual roport of the British and Foreign Bible Society is a bulky volume, full of matter of absorbing interest. The subject is the world-wide dissemination of God's Word, and from every page we learn something as to how that glorious work is progressing. Neither in point of issues nor finance does the year show an advance upon the previous twelve months. Nevertheless, the statistics impressively show the immense extent of the Society's operations.

The reports from various centres not only tell of much work done by the many agents of the Society, but afford evidence of the varied endeavours of other societies and labourers. M. Monod, writing with regard to colportage in France, narrates some interesting incidents. Rome still opposes the dissemination of the light of life, yet it is not an unfrequent thing for people to purchase copies of the Scriptures in spite of the opposition of the priests. A young girl, looking at a New Testament, said to her friend: "That is the sort of book I had, but my parents burnt it because it is a dangerous book." Such people will read, without the least scruple of conscience, immoral novels, but they burn the Word of God. "I have a firm conviction," says M. Monod, "that they would more easily obtain absolution for having read Zola's books than for having read the Bible." Mr. Kirkpatrick's annual letter as to the work in Belgium contains one sentence in which there is welcome hope: "The people are beginning to disbelieve in disbelief." The Christians of Holland and Switzerland are taking the work of Bible circulation into their own hands; in Germany, also, societies native to the soil are more actively than ever looking after the needs of the population. In Austria-Hungary the influence of the priests is increasing, and the hostile efforts are more pronounced than ever. Nevertheless, Mrs. Millard writes: "Efforts made by pastors and other Christian friends to further Christ's cause—and, thank God, we could point out a great many—have been abundantly blessed. Everywhere we see that the Word of God is bearing fruit—that souls are gained for Christ, and a longing desire is awakened in the hearts of many for the precious Word of God. In Galicia, while a Jew was examining a copy of Luke's Gospel in Judeo-German, his wife requested him not to have anything to do with such

DANGEROUS MISSIONARY BOOKS.

His prompt reply was: "My dear wife, I must read this book. I should like to know whether the Messiah loved the Jews." One of the colporteurs in Austria-Hungary tells of a place in which sixty people have been led to the knowledge of the truth. This is the result of a Bible sold ten years ago to one family.

Italy continues to be a field of great importance. No fewer than three of the largest and most popular of the publishing houses in the peninsula have, as it were, become the auxiliaries of the Society—two of them, by issuing large editions of the Holy Scriptures, and the third, by bringing out a "Life of Jesus," which is almost completely a rehearsal of the Gospel story. These enterprises are in the hands of men whose business it is to supply the reading wants of the people of Italy. Clearly a true instinct discerns that they want to know more of Jesus. The condition of Spain suggests problems which cannot but excite the sympathy of evangelical Protestants on its behalf. Thanks to the omnipotent sway of Rome during long centuries, the entire tendency of the national character is strongly opposed to the exercise of thought in any form. This ignorance and disinclination to read is an enemy of the Bible in Spain, as also is the fierce denunciation of the clergy of the Church of Rome. There is also a very extended opposition to Christianity in any shape, and of course to the Christian Book. Against all these forces, the Society has not only held its ground, but made encouraging advance. In other countries of Europe much has been done which is cheering in the recital. In Russia, operations are on a very large scale; also in Turkey, whence Dr. Thomson reports a year of "quiet success." From various centres in Africa the Word has gone forth. Hopeful signs have been seen in Egypt, and though Mohammedans generally regard the New Testament as fitted for Copts and infidels rather than for themselves, in some cases the goodness of Jesus, as set forth in the Gospels, has had its attraction with followers of Mohammed.

The reports from India are generally favourable; the higher education is steadily preparing the way of the Lord. In Northern China there has been a considerable advance, while in the central region a decline is recorded. Australia and New Zealand are spheres in which much is also done. What with the production of new versions, and the publication of the Word in many forms to suit the needs of various peoples, the Society's work continues to merit the warm interest and active support of all who desire to share in the sending forth of God's light and truth into regions where ignorance and darkness reign.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.

EACH successive annual meeting in connection with the Strangers' Rest for Sailors, 163, St. George's-street, Ratcliff-highway, E., adds to the evidences of the great importance of the work. As the true value of the good work becomes more widely known, so also will the interest of Christian people in the Institution increase. Nevertheless, the interest to-day is, we rejoice to know, both deep and wide. From the first a number of earnest souls have made the varied objects of the Rest their peculiar concern. This was made clear on Friday evening last, when Lord Kinnaird presided over an assembly of friends who were greatly cheered by learning that much blessing continues to attend the efforts put forth.

Mr. J. THEODORE ISAAC, hon. secretary, told a remarkably interesting story of many-sided endeavour. The past year, he said, was one of marked blessing; although, of course, there have been difficulties and disappointments. Describing the various departments, among seamen of many nationalities, Mr. Isaac was delighted to report progress in regard to the Bible-classes. It is of the highest importance to get sailors round the Word of God. Referring to outside exertions, he told of the distribution of Gospel books at the dock gates, the thousands of men receiving them with eagerness. On Sundays the lodging-houses are visited, and not in vain is testimony for Christ borne in their kitchens. A singularly interesting department of work is that of correspondence with sailors while in distant parts of the world. Thus Christian sailors not only receive "letters from home," but also words of comfort and encouragement in their life-witnessing for Christ. Having mentioned the fact that the labourers at the Rest have not to deal week by week with a lot of Gospel-hardened sinners, but largely with virgin soil, the message of the Gospel coming with real novelty to many sailors, Mr. Isaac pointed out what truly effective missionaries of the cross our sailors may become. The workers of the Rest are all voluntary, so that about £400 a year meets the material needs. In conclusion, the speaker intimated that he would be glad to hear from other helpers to deal with men speaking various tongues; he also asked for articles in aid of the approaching Christmas festivities, and appealed for help in founding a Rest at Zanzibar, where the need is very pressing indeed.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson, in a few words, rejoiced at the unity of spirit with which the work has been carried on. Mr. GEORGE HOLLAND, in a hearty address, alluding to the recent str said an observant Socialist had assured hir his conviction that the peaceable characte the struggle was one result of the earnest n sion work which has of late years been going in the East-end. Such a contest fifty, or e thirty, years ago, must have been terrible ind in its consequences. But the Lord has b working, and his people have been shedd abroad a healthful influence. Something l 50,000 children have passed through the ha of the workers in George-yard, Whitechap and many of them are now arrived at manho A number of the strikers were total abstaine and many of them Christian men. Speak specifically of the Strangers' Rest, Mr. Holla rightly eulogised its work. The Lads' Institu at No. 186, St. George's-street, which Mr. Isa always has at heart, would, he hoped, be charge upon the sympathies of many who c help to carry it on and teach the rough bo He told how, in Whitechapel, which the police quite failed to break up, h been effectually dispersed through the conv sion of a member of one of them. That c Christian boy was used of God in bringi several out of each gang to leave their acc tomed evil courses, and follow Christ. M Holland's closing appeal may be summed up the words, "Work while it is day."

THREE GANGS OF WICKED YOUTHS,

Dr. ZIEMANN recalled the fact that he w one of the earliest workers in connection wi the Rest. He still looked back with joy to t periodical workers' meetings, so cheerful a fruitful. On one occasion a German past accompanied him to one of those gathering and through misapprehension, though mo truly, denominated them the "working mee ings." The prayer-meeting is indeed t working meeting, it is there that the lasti work is really done. The Christian graces th have been shown and the power that has be displayed have been the outcome of the praye meetings. Speaking of his experience recent years in Germany, Dr. Ziemann sa that though there is in that country, as well in England, much infidelity and enmity to th cross, there are likewise many evidences th God is working mightily both among th highest and the lowest of the people. No few than 1400 Christians lately met in a qui country place, at a conference similar to tho held at Mildmay.

Dr. BARNARDO followed with an earne address to workers. Mr. ROBERT PATON havi spoken of the work of the Rest as second none in London in interest, three converts we heard on their experiences. We have seldo listened to testimony so beautifully coheren and to professions so obviously from the hear In subdued tones, sailors Carroll, Phillips, ar Ellis told of the awakening of conscience, th vision of the Saviour, and the quickening unt eternal life. Doubtless the men had been unde excellent instruction in Divine things; but w felt that only the Holy Spirit could mak manifest to them, as they truly saw it, th condition of man by nature, and the attitud of the redeemed soul in Christ. "The Spir searcheth all things, yea, the deep things o God." The meeting was truly inspiring, an concluded with a remembrance of the Lord death, "until He come."

MARYLEBONE MEDICAL MISSION.—Sinc entering our new and commodious premises ther has been a large increase in the numbers of poo who attend the Gospel services. We have also women's Bible-class, with an average attendance o one hundred. The large hall is well filled o Sunday evenings, and we have been much en couraged at the number of men who attend. W have begun a Bible-class for men on Sunday after noons. Very many attend the services, and sho by their lives that they are truly converted. Ex tension of the work means, of course, increase outlay in carrying it on among the sick and suffe ing poor. R. CHAMBERS.

Dr. Pentecost at Coatbridge.

This mission was arranged for some months ago, and great things were expected and hoped. We have very much to be thankful for; at the same time we have much to regret; for disappointment is mingled with our abundant thanksgiving. What God has done for us makes us the more regret that a larger multitude have not shared the blessing.

Coatbridge is one of the new cities of Scotland. Its industry is the manufacture of iron and steel in some or all its branches, from the smelting of the ore to the turning out of the very finest work. Its population is about 30,000, of which one third, at least, are Roman Catholics; another third are more or less migratory workmen and their families; the remaining third make up the population from which the mission had to draw its congregations. But this is a time of unusual activity in trade. All the furnaces, foundries, and works are being driven day and night to their utmost capacity, and men are working from sixteen to eighteen hours a day. Alas, what time have they to attend to their souls, when their bodies are thus driven? Of the thousand, or twelve hundred, men who, on every Sunday night during the mission, have filled either one or other of the churches, perhaps one half have left the meeting at a little after nine o'clock for their homes. Having snatched an hour or two of sleep, they went off to work with the first hour of the Monday morning. Of the other half of the audience, perhaps 50 per cent. had worked far into the Sabbath morning. No time for missions! No time for Bible reading! No time for prayer-meetings! No time even to think of anything but work! work! work! The high wages and the abundant opportunity for making over pay induce the men to make the most of the harvest.

Of course, the female population is more or less bound by the necessities and habits of the men. It makes the heart sick to witness the terrible spiritual deadness which all this produces. The excessive physical strain tempts to the public-house for stimulus. Of public-houses there are about 150 in the place, besides licensed grocers. At the lowest estimate, between £3000 and £4000 of the working men's wages are left in the pockets of the publicans every week, not a few of these and regular communicants at the Lord's table.

When a man is asked if he will not come to one of the meetings, and his reply is, "No time for religion now, when wages are from ten to twenty shillings a day, with six hours overtime," what can we expect? Dr. Pentecost well said one day that "this is a city of iron, and nothing but trip hammers and blast furnaces will suffice to work it." It is to be feared that the churches are not so well equipped with spiritual dynamics and heavenly fire as the iron works are with blast furnaces, and steam hammers, the glare and noise of which are seen and heard day and night all the week round. Nevertheless, there are faithful ministers, and godly men and women not a few, who are holding on mightily to God, and labouring most earnestly in the Gospel; and not without results.

Except on Sundays the meetings were rather small, perhaps not exceeding six or seven hundred, though on the Sabbath days the congregations were large. In the afternoons of the Sabbath the meetings were for women only, and at night for men only; on the four Sabbath nights of the mission the men occupied all the seats available. It was difficult to maintain a prayer-meeting of any size, owing to the facts stated; yet there were always a faithful few who spent half an hour before the preaching service in prayer. The Bible-readings were very small, there being no leisure class of residents.

Dr. Pentecost's methods, though exceedingly simple, are to Scotch notions somewhat severe. He asks all those who have believed during the preaching to leave their seats and come forward to the front form, and kneel before God in confession of sin, and subsequently to make an open confession of faith, if they have indeed received Christ as their Saviour. He defends this practice on Scriptural grounds—averring that in some open way faith must declare itself. "A faith," he says, "that is ashamed to confess Christ publicly, is not a faith that will stand the trial and test of the world." He urges, further, that this course adds strength to the young Christian by the definite stand involved in it. Certainly the clear and manifest character of the conversions in connection with this mission seems to justify the method.

Some of the ministers have opposed it, as being inconsistent with the training and characteristics of the Scottish people, whose natural tendency, they say, is towards reticence. Dr. Pentecost's answer to this has been that this "shyness" and "reticence" are not seen in connection with the life of worldliness and sin lived by these therefore, if conversion is real, Christ ought to be as publicly confessed and his cause as openly espoused. He holds steadily, though kindly, to this; taking no account of those conversions that are not thus manifested; though, of course, he does not sit in judgment on any who do not openly confess Christ. I have heard of many who, instead of openly confessing Christ in the meetings, have gone to their own ministers and intimated their new-found faith. There have also been many marked conversions and open confessions. It must be said that these open confessions have greatly moved the audiences, especially as one or another well-known man has boldly gone forward and testified to his acceptance of Christ.

The meetings have been pervaded by deep and solemn silence, and the presence of God has been so manifest at times that, as one minister said: "One could almost hear the quiet rushing of the mighty wind, and feel the breath of the still small voice." Dr. Pentecost is not an emotional preacher; he directs his address to the will and conscience, and works for conviction and intelligent apprehension of Christ. Some constantly recurring expressions may be cited; they vary in language, but the substance is the same:—

Conviction is not feeling, but knowledge of the truth, recognised and admitted.

Repentance is not "feeling sorry," or "feeling badly," or feeling anything, but an intelligent change of mind and purpose based on God's Word.

Conversion is not "feeling happy," but an intelligent, deliberate, and out-and-out surrender of the whole man, spirit, soul, and body, to Jesus Christ, the Son of God, while heartily accepting Him as Saviour and Lord.

Repentance is believing what God says about you as a sinner, and accepting the verdict and sentence of sin and death because of transgression.

Faith is the glad and hearty belief of the witness that God has given of his Son Jesus Christ, and the acceptance of eternal life as God's gift to the sinner in Him.

It is not what you feel, or what you do, or what you say, that saves you; but Christ alone, who died for your sins, and was raised again for your justification.

His finished work is the ground of our salvation; the oath-bound word of God is the warrant of it, and a holy life is the proof of it.

Look to Jesus and believe the Word of God, and not to yourself, your doing, and feeling.

You are not even to take the testimony of your own conscience for your sinful estate, but God's Word for that also; for it is not your apprehension of sin which works conviction, but God's exhaustive knowledge of it, which He has recorded in the Word. Sin is deeper and more deadly than any man's apprehension of it by feeling alone.

Regeneration is not an evolution of character, but a new creation.

SOME INCIDENTS OF THE MISSION.

One of the first persons who came out for Jesus Christ was a middle-aged woman who had come from Airdrie. When asked how she happened to be here, she replied: "Well, I had two grown sons converted in the meetings at Airdrie, and, though I was very anxious about my own soul, I would not give in; but I felt all the time that I was denying Christ, and so I just came down here to get converted myself, and openly to confess Christ."

A young man who came out at one of the men's meetings said: "I have thought of these things for a long time, though I have been a great sinner. Still, I could never feel that they were real.

GOD DID NOT SEEM REAL TO ME;

all the things that Dr. Pentecost speaks about, such as forgiveness and the new birth, have not seemed real. When I got up from the back part of the church and walked up, and before a thousand men knelt down before God, confessing myself to be a sinner and Jesus Christ as my Saviour, then it seemed very real. Why, this is the realest thing I ever did in my life. I do not see how anyone can doubt it."

One night, before Dr. Pentecost could fairly give the invitation to those who were ready to confess Jesus Christ, a well-known man in the community, who once occupied and held a responsible position, but who had lost it years ago through drink, sprang to his feet, and said: "I am a great sinner and want to be saved. I accept Jesus Christ as my Saviour." He came forward at once, and no one who has seen him for the last two weeks, clothed and in his right mind, sitting by the side of his Christian wife, can doubt the wonderful change that has come over him. He has several times since testified to the gladness and strength he has received in Christ.

AN OLD IRISHMAN, A ROMAN CATHOLIC, who has been a great drinker, and a determined opposer of his Protestant wife in her religious life, by abuse, and by more than once burning her Bible, came forward and told Dr. Pentecost that he was a sinner, and wanted to be saved. This is the story, as the Doctor related it afterwards: "Well, my good man, and are you a Christian?" "Oh, your riverence, I have always been a Christian; but I am a great sinner. You see, your riverence, I'm a Catholic, and was never in a meeting like this before in my life until three nights ago. I've been ever since, and I like what I've been hearing fine, and I want to get my soul saved; for it's the drink, your riverence, that's been a great curse to me, and I want to get salvation, as you call it; for though, as I'm telling you, I've always been a Christian, I've never been saved." After talking for some time the Doctor knelt down and prayed with him, and then asked him to pray for himself. And this was his prayer. Some of us were near by, and heard it as it came from his lips in broken utterances, though evidently deeply sincere: "O God Almighty, you know I've always been a Christian, but I'm a desperate sinner, and I want to get saved; could you give me a lift? I promise you that with the help of Jesus Christ, who died on the cross to save my soul, I'll lead a different life from this blessed night. Would you give me a lift, for Jesus Christ's sake? Amen." So the poor old man surrendered to Jesus Christ. By always being "a Christian" he meant he had always been a Roman Catholic. Dr. Pentecost went with him to his wife, who was seated in the far end of the church, and delivered him over to her whom he had once persecuted.

A YOUNG WOMAN CAME SOBBING up to the front, just after a meeting had been dismissed, and, falling down on her knees near to where Dr. Pentecost was standing in conversation with several persons, said: "I am a great sinner, and I want to give up to Jesus Christ. I have often resolved in my heart to be a Christian, and have made many professions, but I have always gone right back into sin and the world. But now I want to give myself to Jesus and let Him save me. I've been too proud to confess Him before as my Saviour; but now, if He will just take me and save me, I'll confess Him before all the world. I've got no more pride left in me." All this was said with deep, choking sobs, and the tears streaming down her cheeks. It was most pathetic and soul-moving to hear these words of penitence and faith. After prayer for her, she broke out into prayer herself, in which she poured out her heart with tears and sobs, as it were, fairly bathing the Saviour's feet with her tears. The few friends standing about were themselves moved to tears by her deep distress, and sweet and solemn surrender to Christ.

One evening, toward the close of the mission, the people were amazed to see a gentleman, one of the leading men in the county, the principal landowner, and for years Colonel of the Militia and stand up, straight as an arrow, in response to the appeal, "Are there any here who desire to be saved?" The next instant an old man, who has been the Colonel's head man with the horses and hounds for nearly forty years, sprang to his feet. The two came almost together to the front seat and fell on their knees, where they both gave themselves up to God, and made a personal confession of their faith in Christ. It was beautiful to see the gentleman's Christian wife follow him forward, and take her place beside him, saying: "I feel that in this hour I ought to take my place beside my husband." The old servant said afterwards: "I have been wanting to take this step for some time, but I did not like to go before the master." This was a touching bit of old-fashioned loyalty. For forty years he had followed his master to the hounds, and now he followed him to Christ. Now, happily, both master and servant have followed the Great Master into the path of life.

Many more incidents might be related that illustrate the workings of God's Spirit among men and women. I will just relate one case, out of scores occurring in connection with Miss Tyson's wonderful meetings with the young people, in which nearly two hundred boys and girls from 13 to 17 and 18 years of age have intelligently accepted Christ.

A WEE LASSIE

of about fifteen years was passing down one of the aisles toward the pulpit end of the church, when a worker laid his hand on her shoulder, and said: "Well, my dear, have you given your heart to Christ?" "Not yet," was the reply, though tears were noted on her face. "But, are you not going to take Jesus as your Saviour?" "Ye-e-s," was the tremulous response. "But when, my child?" "I'm gangin' into the vestry to dee it noo." And away she went into the vestry, where Miss Tyson was dealing with a number of girls of her own age. How simple and beautiful was this.

Surely, though we could have wished for the conversion of hundreds, we rejoice with great joy over the scores who have come to Jesus, and at the out-and-out character of these conversions. The mission has been a great spiritual tonic to our Christian life as well.

Dr. Pentecost begins a four weeks' mission in Dundee on the 24th inst.

A HOWARD MEMORIAL.—At a meeting held in Bedford it was unanimously resolved to erect a statue of John Howard, the prison philanthropist, in some public situation in the town. The hon. secretaries are Rev. E. J. Hillier, vicar of Cardington, and Rev. W. P. Irving, of Bedford.

THE CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE HOME.—I wish very heartily to commend this Home for women of all ages, hitherto carried on at 21, Mortimer-street, Regent-street, but shortly to be removed to more suitable premises, if the needed amount, about £60, is supplied at once. I cannot speak too highly of Miss Richards, the lady by whom it was commenced, and is still carried on. The inmates, and those who desire to become such, not a few of whom have been brought to Christ, are praying that God may open the way for the new premises to be taken forthwith. My dear old friend, Mr. John Groom, as well as Miss Denham Smith, Miss Habershon, and other ladies and gentlemen, are deeply interested in this work, to which Miss Richards has been evidently called, and for which she is singularly qualified. MRS. HILTON'S CRECHE.

FOR the eighteenth time Mrs. Hilton has given an annual record of her faithful and loving stewardship in caring for the tender young lives entrusted to her at the Stepney Crêche and Orphan Home. Among the first in England to recognise the need for such domestic helps, and to do something towards supplying them, she has now the joy of seeing many imitators at work in different parts of the land. Her experience is at the service of any who espouse the cause of the children, and these friends find their way to Stepney from all parts of London to get initiated into the methods of crêche management. With Mrs. Hilton this is purely a labour of love, and the unwearied way in which she has devoted strength and energy to it ought to evoke responsive sympathy among those who are able to manifest that sympathy in a practical way.

Work on behalf of the little and often feeble children calls for the exercise of much patient and persevering endeavour. It is also attended by many discouraging circumstances, arising from the poor surroundings, or, perhaps, the unworthy conduct, of one or both parents. In her report Mrs. Hilton says the past year, like others that have gone before, has been "filled with countless mercies, and many cares and sorrows." As illustrating these cares and sorrows, she records the fact that during the year she has "received the children of fifteen women deserted by their husbands, of two men deserted by their wives, of numbers of widows, several widowers, and a very large number of women whose husbands are out of work, or invalids."

What a terrible commentary on our boasted nineteenth century civilisation and Christianity is to be found in these touching sentences:—

"No one can look on these women without feeling extreme sympathy for them, and admiration for the way in which they endure their lives of toil. Many of them have brutal husbands, who treat them so cruelly that it is almost strange that they stay with them; but they love their children too much to leave them, and baby's arms are a stronger chain than blacksmith ever forged. One man, whose wife works very hard, at times comes home and turns his wife and child out of bed, and the poor weary woman has to sit on the stairs while her 'protector' sleeps, until, assured that his slumber is profound, she creeps back with baby...The dread of the Union seems universal, and we have often been astonished at the privations cheerfully endured rather than break up the 'home,' as they term it, although to outward eyes it is desolate enough. Who shall say, though, that there is not a band of Home Angels who give to these dreary homes touches of brightness unseen by other eyes!"

Much more is said by Mrs. Hilton, in these glimpses of real London life, that Christian men and women would do well to ponder over. One cannot but be thankful that such sorrow-stricken ones have a friend and helper in this Institution; it must be to them the very incarnation of Christian love and kindly aid. Mrs. Hilton depends a good deal for the replenishment of her constantly drained purse on the bi-annual sale of the work contributed by friends. Unfortunately, last summer's sale was not so successful as its excellent object deserved. We hope many lovers of the innocent and much-sinned-against little ones will make up this lack by a more than generous co-operation.

The fruits of the Institution are becoming more and more apparent as the girls grow up and go out as well-trained servants. The Crêche and Orphan Home finds an excellent supplement in the Feltham House, where the training is carried on, and where the sickly ones regain convalescence. Visitors are welcomed to the Institutions, and friends desiring copies of the report should apply to Mrs. Hilton, The Crêche, 12, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

A GOOD WORK IN TELEGU.

FOR some thirteen years an excellent work has been done by Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Ward, who went to India in connection with the Mission of Rev. William Taylor, now the venerated Methodist Bishop of Central Africa. After three years of effort among the English-speaking people, they were led into the Telegu country, and our readers have heard from time to time of their care of native orphans, whom they sought to train for God, and for useful, industrious lives. In a recent letter from Secunderabad, Deccan, India, Mr. Ward writes:—

Since we began orphanage work in 1879, we desired a piece of land for an Industrial Colony for these orphans. But ensconced as we found ourselves in the midst of the largest native State of India, the Dominion of H.H. the Nizam, we met difficulties at every step through ten solid years of trying. Even a year ago it seemed almost settled that we could not get land. But our extremity was God's opportunity, and I now hold a lease for twenty-three years, duly executed and registered, for a village of nearly 3000 begohs area (one begoh equals about three-quarters of an English acre), at an annual rental of 800 rupees per year. Our village is well located two miles from Yallandu Railway Station, the seat of the Hyderabad Deccan Company's coal mines, situated 150 miles east of Hyderabad, the capital of the Dominion. God has helped us to wonderful success. Our native community maintains itself, owns nearly 3000 rupees of personal property, &c., all their own earnings; and their tithes so far, in 1889, are about 300 rupees, enough to support two workers. We are in the midst of a large population. The Church Missionary Society and the American Baptists are respectively in the east and north of us, but about us are many thousands who have never heard of Jesus' name.

We need nothing for our own support or maintenance. All this we can manage on God's good soil. But we need about £350 for the restoration of village watercourses and some building; with that we can within two years reach a production base from which a grand work can be indigenously supported. This has been our aim all these years. Now, at last, God has given us the land, we can but praise his name, take courage, and push on.

Anyone desiring more information may address me, or apply to Lieut.-Gen. Sir R. Phayre (69, St. George's-square, London, S.W.), of whose help and friendship we have a keen and precious remembrance. We ask the prayers of your readers for our whole community, and the little church of over fifty souls, who have been converted unto God from heathen darkness and idolatry.

AGED GOVERNESSES.—Some friends are endeavouring to raise a fund for helping, in their declining years, governesses who have been at one time in good circumstances, but have become destitute. This is a class that commands genuine sympathy, and the effort to which we refer is well worthy of countenance. Fuller particulars can be had from the hon. secretary, Miss Duckett, Elewyn, 11, Greenhill Park, Harlesden, N.W.

REV. E. VANORDEN writes, October 19:—The Presbytery of Sao Paulo has ordained another young man for the Gospel ministry. The Presbytery of Minas Géraes in August ordained a native. Three young Brazilians were received as candidates for the ministry. The native Presbyterian churches contributed during 1888-89 over £3000. Hundreds were added to the churches during the year. Several new churches have been organised. I have been permitted to print nearly one million of pages of evangelical reading, tracts, and papers. My press could be much more utilised if we had the means of printing much-needed matter. The evangelical school, under the care of Dr. Lane, has over 300 pupils, mostly belonging to Catholic families of different classes. He has 100 free pupils.

For the Young.

A LETTER FROM FRANCE.

For English boys and girls who love France.

MY DEAR YOUNG FRIENDS—

I DO not write to you very often, and I fear sometimes that you may forget the latter half of the superscription of my letters; they are especially for those who love this great country.

Now I do want you to care a great deal for your brothers and sisters—French boys and girls; they are very different from you, their privileges are so few, and the cares of life come upon them so early here. I know a little fellow of seven who hastens home from school to sweep the house, and have the soup ready when his parents come back. I have seen a child of three paring potatoes, with a big knife which would alarm your mother if your little brother got hold of it for a moment.

We rarely see our little neighbours play; they are too busy with their sheep and goats during the day, and too tired and hungry when evening comes to do anything but enjoy their soup and go to sleep. Then Sunday. There are still Protestant villages where Sunday rarely comes! I do believe one great pleasure to some of our little Sunday scholars is being dressed for Sunday; for, once or twice, when we have arrived at the village, when they had thought the day too cold or too wet for us to venture, we have found houses unswept, hair uncombed, frocks and aprons unchanged. Can you imagine a Sunday like that? To many of them the idea that buying, or selling, or travelling on Sunday is wrong is either unknown, or regarded as an English idea. They are quite pleased that we should observe the day of rest, and watch us with a kind of amused wonder. How we long to make them understand that the rest is for them as well as for us!

It is still strange to us to see the women from the country, with their large baskets on their arms, thronging the grocer's shop before going into the temple; then standing up gravely to say their prayer with closed eyes, and sitting down solemnly to listen to the pastor as, at the beginning of every service, he reads the ten commandments, including of course "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."

Will you try and think, and ask others older and wiser than you are, how one can hope to change the habits of a country like this, so that, when you come to evangelise France, you may know in what way to begin. Then all these little French boys must one day be soldiers. Poor little fellows! Do you know that when a baby boy comes into the world, people say, smiling, "Voici un nouveau conscrit!" Sometimes, if it is only a girl, the father says, "Eh bien! voici une petite souffle-feu!" (a little one useful to blow the fire). In fact, one of the sad things here in this part of France is the contempt for woman. For some things this is good for the girls, for their mothers do teach them to be obedient and polite; but for a boy to obey his mother is a very rare thing.

Without habits of obedience, and not taught to respect their mothers; learning at school not even the name of God, some of them never hearing God's Word, what will they grow up to be? A schoolmaster, not himself a pious man, said one day to me, "If the boys of this generation continue as they are, in ten years I would not care to live in France!

Now, English boys and girls, what noble men and women you ought to be, brought up in the fear of God, and in the knowledge of his Word. What are you going to do for your French neighbours?—Your sincere friend,

Montclar, France. S. R. GELDARD.

MY MOTHER'S VOICE.

My mother's voice—I heard her speak
In accents soft and mild,
As when I sat upon her knee
And I was but a child!

I feel I'm in her arms again,
And fondly there embraced;
And while I live that mother's kiss
Can never be erased!

She told me of a Saviour dear,
And said his love for me
Was greater than a mother's care,
Or father's love, could be!

He died upon the cross to save
Such little ones as I,
And He would come and take me hence
To dwell with Him on high.

They laid her in the silent grave,
And many tears I shed;
For, oh, what anguish filled my heart,
When told that she was dead.

Cast on the wide, wide world to roam,
Without a mother's care,
Yet still I feel my mother's God
Is present with me here!

ALICE HOYLAND.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., Nov. 24, Ps. cxix. 97—112; Mon., Nov. 25, Ps. cxix. 113—128; Tues., Nov. 26, Ps. cxix. 129—144; Wed., Nov. 27, Ps cxix. 145—160; Thurs., Nov. 28, Ps. cxix. 161—176; Fri., Nov. 29, Lam. iii. 22—33; Sat., Nov. 30, Lam. iii. 37—50.

DR. CARLESS AND MR. W. R. MOORE are holding special services for children this week at Park Chapel (Crouch End) and Mount View (Stroud Green) Congregational churches.

MR. T. LEWES SAYER held special services for young people in the Lyndhurst-road Church, Hampstead (Rev. R. F. Horton), for a fortnight, ending Nov. 8. There was a very good attendance each evening, and most manifest tokens of God's presence at every service. Numbers of the young people professed to decide for Christ; the workers also were much refreshed.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Polytechnic Hall, Falmouth, Nov. 23 to Dec. 2. Mr. James Tyler, St. George's Free Church, Nov. 24—30. Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, Middleton-road Congregational Church, Dalston, Nov. 25 to Dec. 6; Athenæum, Camden-road, every Sun. in Nov. at 3.15.

CAPE GENERAL MISSION.

NEWS from Mr. Spencer Walton, dated Kimberley, October 21, states that, en route from Cape Town to that place, Mr. Howe and the four evangelists stopped at various railway camps. They were well received, and held meetings with unmistakable signs of blessing. At De Aar, many coloured people were won to Christ. At Beaufort West, Mr. Spencer Walton and Mr. Dudley Kidd held Gospel meetings, the blessing being principally among the Dutch. This will go a great way to break down prejudice and open doors among the Hollanders.

At Kimberley, meetings were commenced in the large Beaconsfield Town Hall with encouraging results. With regard to work among the natives in the compound, much guidance is being sought. At Cape Town the services of a self-supporting Christian lady, about thirty-five years of age, are sadly needed. She should be able to speak Italian and German, owing to the great number of foreign vessels which now call at that port. Mrs. Osborn is hoping to return to England in January for the purpose of stirring up more active interest in the Mission among friends in this couutry.

Next year The South African Pioneer will be published, bi-monthly. The annual subscription in England is 2s., post free 2s. 3d. Application should be made to the Hon. Secretary, Cape General Mission, Lancaster-road, Wimbledon.

THE LATE MR. J. B. GRAY,

OF THE "CARTER HOME" FOR BOYS, CLAPHAM.

WE recently recorded the lamented death, at an early age, of this earnest worker among the young. A friend furnishes some interesting details of his connection with the Carter Home for Boys, High-street, Clapham. Though he had for years been active in the service of Christ in a quiet and unobtrusive way, it was as the director of this institution that he was brought into public notice.

Entering on the work in 1880, he saw it grow upon his hands in a manner both rapid and substantial, showing rare qualifications as business manager, as well as tender zeal in spiritual things. Prior to his appointment, the "Carter Home" had for some years a struggling existence. But no sooner did he and his excellent wife appear upon the scene than a new order of things was inaugurated. Larger premises were taken in the High-street, which were vacated rather over a year ago; but these, though at the time large, soon became straitened. Changes were made in the scope of the undertaking, and the Home became so crowded that another house, on the opposite side of the street, had to be rented; in their turn the two establishments proved too small. Last year St. Joseph's Roman Catholic College, situated in the same street, came into the market. Largely through Mr. Gray's urgent representations, these spacious buildings were secured at the low price of £6000, and in them, now for upwards of a year, this good work has been carried on.

In a communication to The South London Press sent by Mr. Piper about a month prior to Mr. Gray's lamented decease, the following descriptive words occur which we can fully endorse: "Mr. Gray is a typical Scotchman—hard-headed, shrewd, firm, yet kindly, with a keen eye for helping the boys to turn an honest penny towards their own support. In place of a mere shoeblack brigade, he has substituted the training of the lads in home industries rendering them much better equipped for after life. The lads are sent out to help in housework, to distribute circulars and newspapers, while employment is found for them in the Home at shoemaking, firewood bundle making, and chair mending, the latter work being reserved for crippled boys. An emigration scheme has been successfully carried out, by which over fifty youths have been taken to Canada and placed in good situations there. All as yet sent out have done well."

In the midst of a career of growing usefulness, at the early age of thirty-seven, this precious life has been unexpectedly cut short after a week's illness. By many of his friends the first news heard was the tidings of his death. A cold had for some days been upon him. Pleurisy set in together with bronchitis, and, notwithstanding all that Dr. Cronin's kindly medical attentions could do, Mr. Gray succumbed to the maladies on October 8. During the illness "peace, perfect peace," was our brother's lot.

Devotion for others was Mr. Gray's most conspicuous, as it was his most Christlike, trait. He might be said to have had the material and spiritual welfare of the Home on the brain. He cared for the boys as a prudent and loving father would. In many little ways his mindfulness of their good would appear. But while he had a parental heart, he had a firm hand, a sagacious mind. Mr. Gray was a model disciplinarian. There can be no question as to the healthiness of the influence brought to bear on the institution. It was God-fearing, upright and active. Mr. Gray yearned for the boys' souls, and he studiously cultivated in them habits of work and self-reliance. He set a high value on Smiles' "Self-Help," and was won t to give the boys a copy ere leaving the Home.

ISABELLA MACPHERSON:

The Story of a Devoted Life.

By her Brother, Rev. JOHN MACPHERSON, Dundee.

CHAPTER IV.—CONVERSION.

IN the autumn of 1859, Scotland was ringing with the echoes of the great revivals in America and Ireland. Union prayer-meetings were the order of the day. Prayer was being marvellously answered; and many persons, especially young men, were being saved, often without the intervention of any human agency. A pulse of religious anxiety was secretly beating at this time in the little northern burgh. The air was full of an awakening element; the minds of many were haunted with thoughts of God and eternity. What was to be done? Advised by a member of his family, then on a visit to him, Donald Macpherson invited four or five godly men, representing the several religious denominations of the place, to meet for prayer and conference. The meeting was held in a room of his house. It was a humble beginning; but God was there. As they prayed, their hearts were filled with a blessed sense of the Lord's nearness and an expectation that He was about to do great things for them. The union for prayer thus formed speedily grew in numbers and in interest; and they were compelled by its success to transfer the meeting to the Congregational Chapel, where it became a focus of light and blessing to the town.

Meanwhile the little band of praying men had sent for Duncan Matheson, who came and preached. One Sabbath evening, in the Free Church, the minister, Mr. McKay, was describing in glowing terms the work of grace in Ireland, and the scenes he had recently witnessed there, when a young man who had been impressed under the preaching of the Scottish Evangelist cried aloud for mercy. The cry of the young man was like a stone cast into dark waters, sounding great depths and creating a thousand rippling circles. It was the signal of the Holy Ghost. The light of eternity was breaking in; the congregation was startled; the ancient cry, "What must we do to be saved?" became the burning question. The fruits of that work remain. Some of the converts are now heralds of the cross, doing noble service at home and in heathen lands far away. As one result nothing was more marked than the new life, the fuller joy, the greater power, that came to many of the Christians. The Union prayer-meeting became the centre of the movement. Here revived Christians poured out there hearts in prayer; here young believers delivered their first testimony; here inquirers waited for counsel; and here all the glad echoes were awakened in holy song as each young convert was ushered into light.

The connection of Donald Macpherson with this union for prayer was of brief duration; but of infinite moment to himself. One night, after taking some little part in the meeting, he was suddenly seized with an alarming illness: at the same time his soul was flooded with joy in the Holy Ghost; and every doubt melted away in the cloudless sunshine of God's love. From this illness, although he lived nearly two years thereafter, he never recovered; and from that height of assurance and joy he never went down. Henceforth his time was spent either in rapt communion with God, or in guiding inquirers; in counselling young converts, and in fellowship with Christian friends. Whether the physical shock came before, or after, or simultaneously with, the spiritual visitation is not known. But so it was. Like Jacob, he had wrestled through a long, weary night till daybreak found him victoriously broken down, crippled, and blessed. By "terrible things in righteousness" prayer is often answered. As in the favouring gale the ship must be well ballasted, so the third heaven's experience needs "the thorn in the flesh." The timid believer had trembled into triumph. His fears, like the hosts of Midian, fled when the light burst forth from the broken pitcher. Formerly he could only cry, "Lord, I believe; help Thou mine unbelief." Now he could say, "Behold, God is my salvation, I will trust and not be afraid: the Lord Jehovah is my strength and my song. He also is become my salvation."

Isabella had seen the little convention in her father's house; but just then went from home on a visit to friends. On her return she was confronted with two events which arrested her attention. Here was her father broken down and prostrate, yet no longer despondent and full of fears, but joyful and triumphant; receiving as he lay on his bed or sat in his chair the young converts and anxious inquirers, whom he wisely counselled or lovingly encouraged. The alabaster box was broken, and the perfume of the ointment filled the house.

The other event was a sister's conversion. "Isabella, I have found the Lord!" said Jeanie. This to her was a startling announcement. She knew much about the Lord; but to find Him—what was that? The old question arose at once, "How can these thing be?" With the candour which was a leading feature in her character, she accepted her sister's testimony as genuine. Apart from personal concern in such matters, her inquisitive mind would have led her to demand what all this meant. But the personal question sprang to the front. What about herself? Where about was she now when the whole world around her was moving and changing? She had hitherto reckoned herself a kind of Christian; one on the fair way to become a real good Christian some day. Now, however, it was a question darkened round with clouds of portentous doubt. As she pondered the matter, the light faded; hope failed; her early piety seemed to be but a child's dream; such faith as she had gave way like quicksands at every step, till at length the fair past wholly vanished, leaving only a dark future to be faced.

She was now face to face with the stupendous question of the second birth. To be well-born, she said, is not to be born again; to be well-bred is not holiness to the Lord. Not to love God, it was plain, is sin; to please one's self rather than God, she confessed to herself, is sheer idolatry. "The wages of sin is death" had now a new meaning: the wages not of gross sin only, but of subtle heart sin also; not of many sins merely, but of sin. For long a vague sense of sin and its punishment had haunted her; but it was like a speck of cloud on the distant horizon: now the whole heavens were darkened with the coming storm. The sword in its scabbard hanging high on the wall boded no immediate danger; now the gleaming blade was within an inch of her guilty head. The sentence of death took hold of her; the whole of her past life looked like the sea-shore strewn with wreck, everything good was smashed, hopelessly broken to pieces.

This period of deep anxious questioning did not last long. She saw that "the wages of sin is death," but she also saw that "the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord"—and with the sentence of death in her soul she gladly accepted the "unspeakable gift." The storm-cloud passed, the light of peaceful heavens broke upon her; and she entered upon the new path with an alacrity, a joyousness, and a firmness of step that characterised all her decisions, most of all this crisis in her history. She delivered her modest testimony to her comrades; joined the company of the young Christians; threw herself heartily into the earnest work of the period. In particular she assisted in gathering the careless neighbours into the little meetings, a task for which her tact and persuasive manner pre-eminently fitted her; exercised her gift of song by leading the praise; counselled inquirers with a wisdom and tenderness that never failed her; and with all the enthusiasm of girlhood bounded along the new path, knowing as yet its sunshine, but not its shadow.

Meanwhile the visitor pursues her round, and the people assemble in a very humble cottage in a narrow lane. A blessing has come to the house; the hut is mean no more; Jesus has entered, and it is now a "palace of the King." The furniture is rude enough—just a few clumsy chairs and stools. The table or dresser serves for a bench, while the bed in a corner is occupied like a gallery by a bevy of girls who are the chief singers. The preacher is one of the newly converted young men. After much trouble and exercise of practical engineering in finding seats and places for the crowd, the service begings. Isabella Macpherson is the leader of praise. Seated on the bed she calls for the light—a penny candle bought in honour of the occasion. Mary C——, a woman of gigantic stature, raw-boned and fierce-looking, but of kindly nature, volunteers to hold the candle. Muddled with drink—her normal state—she rises, and, with the candle in her hand, reels and falls upon the bed. There is a scene. The poor soul, despite every remonstrance, insists on holding the candle; nothing will quench her zeal in the good cause; and although the taper sways to and fro like the masthead light of a ship in a gale, the service, despite some mingled alarm and merriment, proceeds. Hymns are sung with ringing heartiness; fervent prayers are offered; burning words are spoken; simple souls get a lift heavenward; and some consciences feel the touch of God.

On another occasion the preacher is a youthful student, who, as the result of his recent conversion, is earnestly setting his face toward the office of the ministry, and is not slow to deliver his hearty testimony and excercise his gift. To-night there is no candle, probably because there is no penny to buy one. At any rate, the light is from the old-fashioned "crusie," a rude, open, cobble-shaped iron lamp, filled with oil made of fish liver, and smelling horribly; the wick a peeled rush from a neighbouring swamp. To enable the preacher to read his small-type Bible, the lamp is removed from its accustomed nail at the cheek of the hearth. To carry it over the heads of so many persons is not easy. A sudden movement of the swaying crowd upsets the lamp, and its contents descend in full stream upon the back of the preacher—an anointing he had not bargained for. Who that knows the fearful stench will not pity the preacher in his sorry plight! Light out; preacher drowned in the essence of fish guts; the singer in distress; the youngsters snickering; the mistress raging; confused voices giving confounding orders; Mary C——, the giantess, plunging about in the darkness, and, in her zeal for order, making confusion worse confounded—the beginning of the Gospel meeting is not very full of promise.

Yet all is set a-going again; the chaos gives way before the sweet influences of the singing and the praying, while the preaching (though, like the oil, it has a strong odour of home production), is downright and telling. In some grand church an incident far less disturbing would have ruined the fine choral service: but revival meetings are hardier things, their strength and glory being not in the form but in the spirit.

PUBLIC MORALITY.—A conference with regard to the traffic in immorality took place in St. George's Hall, Seven Sisters-road, N., on Tuesday, last week, under the auspices of the Finsbury Park Vigilance Association. Rev. W. H. Barlow, vicar of Islington, presided, and several friends read papers. Mr. Coote, secretary of the National Vigilance Association, suggested, among other things, a mission to fallen men. Other friends emphasised the need. It was resolved to urge upon the Vestry and the police authorities the desirableness of more speedy action in the suppression of disorderly houses and street solicitation.

Rev. JOHN N. MURDOCK, D.D., LL.D.,

Secretary, American Baptist Missionary Union.

SCOTTISH blood has tinged the veins of many eminent Americans. Of this stock was born in Oswego, N.Y., 1820, John Nelson Murdock, now the Corresponding Secretary for the foreign department of the American Baptist Missionary Union, the headquarters of which are at Boston, Mass., U.S.A. Having prepared himself at the local schools, Mr. Murdock intended to enter Union College; but, the death of his father preventing, he began to teach, and at the same time pursued the study of law with such success that he was admitted to practice at the early age of twenty-one. Having been converted at seventeen, he had united with the Methodist church in Oswego.

About the time he was admitted to the bar, the religious life of Mr. Murdock was greatly quickened, and he felt that he ought to preach the Gospel. Not knowing whether it was the call of God, he decided that if the church, without request, should give him a licence to preach he would take it as the indication of God's will. This the church did a short time afterward, and he was placed by the presiding elder in charge of the church in Jordan, N.Y. With his new responsibilities came a desire to be more fully informed in regard to the work he had undertaken, and he began a study of the ordinances of the Church, specially stimulated by the lectures of Mr. Bliss in favour of a new version of the Scriptures. He became convinced that the views of the Baptists were in accord with the teachings of the Bible, and was baptized by Dr. Seymour W. Adams, at Durhamville, N.Y. In May, 1842, he was ordained as pastor of the Baptist Church in Waterville, N.Y. While here he took advantage of the vicinity of Hamilton Theological Seminary to perfect his knowledge of Hebrew and New Testament Greek.

(From a Photograph by Messrs. Lombardi & Co., 13, Pall Mall East, London, S.W.)

In this pastorate Mr. Murdock revealed that independence in thought and courage in action which have specially distinguished him as a Church leader. Waterville was a place of distilleries and drunkenness. The young minister boldly attacked the evil in a series of discourses, the first of which was founded on Hab. ii. 15, "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbour drink." He boldly arraigned those who distilled and sold liquor and those who furnished the materials. This trenchant sermon naturally created much excitement in the town, but a great reformation followed, in which five of the distilleries were turned into potato starch factories, and many drunkards were converted to God. Mr. Murdock was prominent in the Washingtonian temperance movement, and endeavoured successfully to give it a Christian aspect.

In January, 1846, he removed to Albion, N.Y., and, after a prosperous pastorate, settled with the South Church, of Hartford, Conn., early in 1848. Here his labours were attended with remarkable success. A new house of worship was erected to meet the demands of the congregation, and in one year (1853) more than two hundred were added to the church. After a stay of nearly ten years in Hartford, he removed, January, 1858, to the Bowdoin-square Baptist Church, of Boston, Mass.; and in July, 1863, was called to the service of the Missionary Union to which the maturity of his strength and life has been devoted.

It has been remarked that the most necessary qualification for important and responsible positions is the possession of clear and sound judgment. General Grant is said to have observed that both Sherman and Sheridan could suggest more plans for campaigns than he could think of, and carry them out better than he, but it always devolved upon him to decide what should be done. It was this same trait of almost unerring judgment which gained for Washington the confidence of the people and the army above the many able and perhaps more brilliant men of his time. This supreme quality Dr. Murdock possesses in an eminent degree. Amid the many difficulties and perplexities incident to the carrying on of extensive enterprises in foreign missionary work, his brethren have learned by experience to rely with great confidence on his clear, calm, dispassionate, and matured convictions of the right course to pursue. It has been his lot to advocate measures which were unpopular, but in the end it has been found that they were right. His legal training has proved of great service, and many personal qualities have contributed to his eminent success in the great work of his life; but more than all else his broad and correct judgment has gained and kept for Dr. Murdock the confidence and esteem of the denomination in the responsible position which he so worthily fills.

In 1860 Rev. H. Grattan Guinness was invited to Boston by Dr. A. N. Kirk, pastor of the Mount Vernon Congregational Church. Just before leaving for America, Mr. Guinness had been baptized, and, the news of this action preceding him, it was not considered advisable for Mr. Guinness to engage in the services contemplated at the Mount Vernon Church. Under these circumstances, Dr. Murdock, then pastor of the neighbouring Bowdoin-square Baptist Church, opened his house to Mr. Guinness, who there conducted his first series of evangelistic services in America.

Dr. Murdock's kindness at that time was never forgotten, and when Mr. and Mrs. Guinness were looking for some organisation to relieve them of the Livingstone Inland Mission on the Congo, which was becoming too great for them in addition to the other burdens they were bearing, the one to whom they turned most readily was Dr. Murdock and the Society of which he was the chief executive officer.

While pastor at Hartford, Dr. Murdock for three years edited The Christian Review, and its columns for those years contain many productions from his pen which testify to his literary taste and skill. In the reports of the Missionary Union and the volumes of The Baptist Missionary Magazine are also found many valuable papers and contributions from him on missionary themes. But it is probably owing to the fact that his life has been one of full and uninterrupted activity that he has never gathered into a volume any of the many sermons, addresses, and articles which have been printed in a detached form. In 1854 the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon Dr. Murdock by the University of Rochester, and the degree of Doctor of Laws by Madison University in 1888.

The Missionary Union, of which he is the senior officer, is among the largest missionary bodies of the world. He still gives his personal attention to the duties of his office, and it is the wish of the denomination that he shall continue to lend the vigour of his mind and his ripe experience to their foreign mission work, as long as the Lord whom he serves shall grant him the necessary health and strength.

THE McALL MISSION.

Dear Sir,—We have closed the six months' special work in the two Salles Evangéliques, at the gates of the Great Exhibition. Much good, we believe, has been accomplished. The Gospel has been preached three times each day in French, and sometimes oftener, and the attendance has been good. Altogether, we estimate that some 80,000 have been present, in the aggregate, at these meetings. We know of several cases of conversion, and the truth has been carried beyond France into other lands.

Tens of thousands of Gospels, and hundreds of thousands of tracts, &c., have been circulated. The Evangelical Alliance, the B. and F. Bible Society, and the Religious and Monthly Tract Societies have been the chief supporters of the special work, while friends in England, Scotland, France, and America have liberally helped, so that the special outlay has been covered by their contributions.

We have cheering prospects for the winter. The outlook is tranquil, and we trust that much good work will be accomplished while we have this "great door and effectual" open before us. But we are compelled to reduce our work, specially in the provinces, owing to lack of means; and this at a time when everything points to its extension and development.

Dr. Henry J. Benham, formerly of Ipswich, has been in charge of the work of the Salles Evangéliques during all the summer. He left England last year, giving up his professional work to give himself to work in France, entirely at his own charges. He is now in England seeking to stimulate interest in the evangelisation of this land, which has so many claims upon the Christian heart. We trust that many will be induced to do much more for France than they have hitherto done—to join themselves and their influence to the work. The many friends who helped this summer in the Exhibition Halls were all impressed with the willingness of the people to hear and to accept the books offered.—Yours, &c., W. Soltau.

THE JAFFNA COLLEGE.—Those friends throughout the country who have heard the eloquent pleadings of the Misses Leitch on behalf of this institution in Ceylon will be glad to know that an Occasional Letter recently published by these ladies contains much interesting information about the origin and progress of the work. Copies may be had of Misses Leitch, care of Mr. S. Stanton, 17, Southampton-row, London, W.C.

CHRISTIAN LITERATURE IN INDIA.

In a special issue of Light for India, the quarterly record of the Christian Vernacular Education Society, an account is given of the progress of a work for God which is as truly useful as it is deeply interesting. It is computed that, as the result of the educational policy inaugurated by Government in 1854, eleven millions of readers are now scattered throughout the country, all of them, less or more, impregnated with European culture, and some of them as familiar with English literature and science as youths trained in British schools and colleges.

Among the most important of the Society's agencies must be placed the Normal Training Institutions, in which Christian young men have during the past thirty years been equipped for the work of efficient teachers, and, as teachers, to be evangelists to the young. Alike by missionary societies and the Government of India, the great value of this agency has been acknowledged; near a thousand teachers having been trained, many of whom are labouring in the various mission schools. Upwards of 8000 children are now attending the schools under the Society, almost wholly on the "circle system," in which six or eight schools are grouped within a limited circuit, so as to allow of their being visited almost daily by a Christian native superintendent, who assists and directs the teacher, and gives the religious instruction in each. Twenty-five of these circles are placed under a committee, chiefly of Englishmen, in Calcutta, with a secretary, who receives the reports of superintendents, occasionally visits them, and takes an oversight of all. The lessons and tracts carried home by the children, not only influence the children, but have, in some cases, led to the salvation of the parents.

A still greater work has been accomplished by the Society in the production of complete sets of school books, in both the English and vernacular languages. These are permeated with Christian truth, so that the heathen pupil, in learning to read, gets the choicest passages of Christian authors interspersed among the classical quotations, and verses from Christian poets to commit to memory. The books are sold and purchased as Christian works, standing on their own merits as educational productions of a high order. Another sphere of the Society's operations has been the preparation and circulation of Christian literature, and not a little good has been done in this way. The great drawback has been the want of funds, these having hitherto been barely sufficient to support the educational enterprises to which the Society was committed at starting. But for the self-sacrifice and devotion of its accomplished agent, Dr. Murdoch, the usefulness of the Society would have been small compared with what it has been.

The corruption of native literature is not the only danger to which the Indian reading public are exposed. Much of the English literature provided for the more highly educated is full of danger, not only to the reason and morals, but to the spiritual nature. Clearly there is great need for the operations of this Society, for which we trust a very useful career is yet in store. In view of proposed special efforts, an appeal will shortly be issued. The offices of the Society are, 7, Adam-street, Strand, London, W.C.

MEN WANTED FOR MYSORE.

In your issue of Sept. 20, I was much impressed by the paper by Rev. J. Robertson, on "The Need of Men," and I would earnestly echo his cry for India, and especially for the Mysore Territory, with its doors wide open to the Gospel, and its fields white unto the harvest We want men (Ezek. xxxvi. 37, 38), a consecrated band. I have just returned from a three weeks' missionary tour in the Mysore district, after visiting over twenty villages and towns. The Lord has vouchsafed to us wonderful times of blessing and power, and of remarkable acceptance with the people. I have never before seen towns so stirred, and the people so anxious to hear, so ready to listen, and, in several instances, coming long distances to see us and hear of Christ.

Yet our hearts were often filled with sorrow and pity, for again and again did the villagers tell us that they had never heard of Jesus Christ, and that before this no one had ever been to them with the message of salvation. One cry was especially pathetic: "What is the use of your coming only once to tell us these good tidings? We forget so quickly; oh, come again soon." No wonder our hearts were saddened, not knowing when we should be able to go again—perhaps never. I would be afraid to say how many villages in this large district have never yet heard of Christ, and the villages that have heard of Christianity look upon it only with fear, believing it means a breaking of caste and of losing all they hold dear. Many, I regret to say, think Christianity consists in eating meat and drinking liquor; more than once have I been told so by respectable natives.

After an interesting visit to Hoskote where our brother Lakshman Rao is working, I went to Malvalli, the scene of the labours of Mr. and Mrs. Lynn. We preached in many villages in that neighbourhood, and God gave us much acceptance with the people.

I could give numbers of instances of the great needs of this district, but must refrain for want of space. I would reiterate the cry, "Oh, the need of men," of consecrated men and women, who for Christ's sake will live right among the people, and point them to Christ. What India wants is to see the life of Christ lived out in daily experience. May the Lord Himself thrust out many servants into this needy harvest field. W. H. Stanes.

THE REFORMED CHURCH OF ENGLAND.—A work of energy and promise is being done at Ilfracombe, under the oversight of Bishop Price. There is a roomy church, with a goodly congregation. Tokens of God's favour have not been wanting, and hopes are entertained of a truly blessed outcome of present efforts. As there is no school or mission-room, work among the young people is almost at a standstill. It is proposed to erect such a room over the church, at an expenditure of about £250. This would accommodate 300 people, and prove useful in many ways. Towards the estimated cost nearly £60 is already in hand. Interested friends may communicate with the curate, Rev. A. W. Evans, 5, Greenclose-road, Ilfracombe.

Mr. Rabinowitz and his Work.

MR. JOSEPH RABINOWITZ, of Kischeneff, who is on a brief visit to England, has been privileged to tell of great blessing from God upon his truly remarkable work in South Russia. Clearly his influence among Jews on the Continent is steadily increasing; we rejoice, also, to recognise evidences of a more widespread interest in his Mission on the part of British Christians. Rev. C. A. Schönberger, of Vienna, accompanies Mr. Rabinowitz and interprets his addresses from the conglomerate tongue known as Judeo-German. At Glasgow, a fortnight ago, at a meeting in Free St. Matthew's Church, Mr. Rabinowitz told his singularly interesting story to an assembly of men and women whose hearts God had filled with loving pity for Israel. Rev. James Stalker, the minister, presided. The great need was realised of a larger meeting-house than that at present used at Kischeneff, and it was proposed to raise £500, the estimated cost, and to erect the building as a memorial to the late Dr. Somerville, of Glasgow, who visited Kischeneff only last year.

AT EXETER HALL.

London friends of the Mission have since been privileged to hear of its progress. On Tuesday afternoon, last week, Rev. Dr. Bullinger presided over a well-attended meeting in Exeter Hall. Quite a number of Hebrew Christians were present. Rev. Dr. Edmond, of Highbury, having, in prayer, thanked God for the many tokens of the approach of the set time to favour Zion, the CHAIRMAN made a brief statement. The Council which has been formed in London in no sense guides Mr. Rabinowitz in his work; rather, its desire, from the first, has been to recognise that the work is God's. Not by any human agency was Mr. Rabinowitz brought to a knowledge of Christ, but only by the Spirit of God, and by the Word of God. God's hand has appeared working so completely and wonderfully that the Council's desire has been simply to stand aside and help in any way that may present itself. Having watched Mr. Rabinowitz's movements, the Council has helped him from time to time with advice, and with funds which Christian friends have sent in.

Mr. SCHÖNBERGER rejoiced to testify to the importance of the work which Mr. Rabinowitz has in hand. He had seen it in actual operation, and knew of its growing influence. Mr. Rabinowitz's printed sermons, pamphlets, and songs are read and discussed far and near. It has now become a fact generally known that one who was formerly renowned as a Hebrew scholar and Jewish patriot is proclaiming with great joy that Jesus is the Messiah—the Son of God who made propitiation for the sins of his people, and is the Saviour of Jews and Gentiles alike.

after thanking God, in the name of Jesus Christ, for having again brought him face to face with his dear English friends, rejoiced that evidences are being multiplied to show that God hath not cast off his people Israel. The width and depth of the movement in which he is engaged was shown by the statement that information is continually reaching him of others having followed his example, and begun to preach Christ to the Jews of Russia. He hears of persecutions endured for the sake of Christ, of Jews turned out of the Synagogue. A very old man had written to him saying that he would very much like to live in Kischeneff among his believing brethren, so as to spend his remaining days in the peace of the Lord Jesus. Many letters have reached him from young men still living with their parents, and asking for a helping hand to be extended to them, so that they may live as followers of Christ. Again, numbers of teachers have sent to him for copies of the New Testament and pamphlets from which they may learn something of Jesus Christ. Yet others, baptized Jews, have asked to be organised in some way, in order to bear a more influential testimony for Christ—so that they may not be ashamed of the name of Israel, but rather, as Israel, glory in the Lord Jesus. Mr. Rabinowitz went on to say that he would rejoice if, in God's way and time, Kischeneff should become a central spot from which the Gospel might go forth into districts as yet unpenetrated, and to which Jews who are yearning for the salvation of Israel, as well as those who have already found their all in Christ, might look as a home.

Some of Mr. Rabinowitz's remarks had an accentuated force given to them by a statement made by the Chairman. No missionary work of any kind is allowed among the Jews in Russia. It would be impossible for us here in England to send anyone to labour among the Jews in Russia. Therefore, it is all the more wonderful that God has set man's wisdom at nought, by raising up in the midst of the Jewish people one who can thus act as a faithful witness for Him.

REV. DR. SAPHIR

followed with a thoughtful address, emphasising the fact that Israel is still living. In the dark ages there were here and there people who remained faithful to God, and, although it appeared as if there were no Christian Church, those who believed Jesus was the Son of God, also said: "I believe in the Holy Ghost, the holy Catholic Church." In like manner, he said: "I believe in Israel—in God's people, whom, according to his eternal counsel, He hath set apart to be his own nation." The promises which God has given must all be fulfilled. God remembers all his promises; He only forgets one thing—our unworthiness and sinfulness. Having shown from the Scriptures that God will perform his promises to the nation as well as to individuals, the speaker expressed joy that there is to-day an Israel that is looking forward to the great consummation foretold by God's prophets. A time is coming when Israel shall have both the land and the Spirit; and then, and then only, will the promises of God to the nation be fulfilled, and the people will be prepared to say; "Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord." In some further remarks, the speaker urged his hearers to pray continually for the outpouring of God's Spirit upon Israel.

The announcement having been made that Mr. J. E. Mathieson, of Mildmay, is treasurer to the fund in aid of the work, the proceedings were brought to a close with earnest prayer by Rev. James Stephens, of Highgate.

AT MILDMAY.

On Thursday evening a meeting was held in the Conference Hall, Mildmay, N. The attendance showed an increased interest in Mr. Rabinowitz and his truly blessed work, as compared with the meeting in the same building three years ago. Mr. R. C. Morgan presided, and in the course of the opening proceedings read Zech. viii., a portion glowing with assurances of God's unchanging love to the seed of Abraham, and of his purpose to return in his good pleasure unto Zion.

MR. RABINOWITZ

pitched his address in the key of, "I will mention the lovingkindnesses of the Lord, and the praises of the Lord, according to all that the Lord hath bestowed on us, and the great goodness toward the house of Israel, which He hath bestowed on them according to his mercies, and according to the multitude of his lovingkindnesses" (Isa. lxiii. 7). Referring to his recent experiences, he said that it was by degrees becoming known that his work rested simply and solely on the Bible. The attitude of his opponents clearly showed how the Lord had helped him. At first hostile Jews declared his Mission "a swindle"; now the Jewish press is calling upon the Rabbis, "Why are you silent? We have a plague among us. Rabinowitz and his hypocrisy are undermining Judaism, and yet you are quiet! Let us read his sermons, and write against him." Three years ago the movement was much like a riddle to the Christian public—Rabinowitz a Jew and a Christian together! How could that be? Now, however, it is more plain that Jews, as Jews, can receive Christ, and become children of God through Him, just as Englishmen and Frenchmen and Germans can, and yet retain their nationality. Accordingly, a Russian bishop has recommended that the Jews should enter Rabinowitz's community, and not the Russian Church, which is for the Russian people.

Mr. Rabinowitz described himself as endeavouring to act on the injunction: "Show my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins." Three great faults hinder the Jews from turning to the Lord. The first is a glorying in being the children of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. This fault they showed while the Temple was yet standing, and John the Baptist, as well as the Lord Himself, spoke against it. Jerusalem was destroyed because Israel gloried in their flesh. Afterwards they took to themselves a new glory—in their wise men, and in the Law and the Talmud. When, subsequently to the middle ages, it became clear that they could no longer glory in their wisdom, Israel said in effect: We are the men of great ability—foremost in commerce, banking, and so forth. In fact, instead of looking upon their dispersion as a curse and a chastisement from the Lord, they have begun to regard it as a God-ordained blessing, in order that there may be Jews everywhere, as the merchants of the world.

To-day, said Mr. Rabinowitz, one may meet many a Jew who combines in himself all these three gloryings, and, because I speak out against such faults, the Jewish papers do their best to injure me. I show these Jews that, but for Christ, Abraham would have been nothing more than an Arab chief, and if it were not for Christ the Jewish prophets would have been no more than dreamers. Therefore Christ said: "Abraham rejoiced to see my day," and also "I have come to fulfil the law and the prophets." I tell them, if they want a true heritage in which to glory, it must be Jesus, by whom all has been fulfilled and all confirmed—Son of David and Son of Abraham, likewise Son of God. As for Israel's glorying in their wisdom, I show that the wise men of the people have not moved one bone of the dead house of Israel. I assure them, moreover, that there is but one wisdom in which to glory, and that is the knowledge of Jesus, in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. Against glorying in commercial prosperity and wealth, I place glorying in the true riches, showing that only Christ can satisfy our heart's cravings, and give us true contentment.

In some further remarks, Mr. Rabinowitz said that Russian Jews about to leave the country visit Kischeneff in large numbers to hear his preaching. Many also seek interviews with him, and frequently the question is, "What must we do?" His uniform answer is, "Save yourselves from this untoward generation."

followed. He said that often, on finding Christian thoughts and aspirations in Russian Jews in London, he had learned that the source of light had been some tract or printed sermon by Mr. Rabinowitz. To-day, while Judaism is in a state of decomposition, Christian interest in Israel is steadily increasing, and he rejoiced in the many indications that God's time to favour Zion is approaching. Rabinowitz has been raised up in answer to earnest prayer, and if we will now open our mouths still wider, assuredly God will fill them.

Rev. Dr. Edmond also delivered an address, admirably stating the duty of Christians to interest themselves in the evangelisation of Israel. The meeting was inspiring throughout. That Mr. Rabinowitz has been raised up by God to do a great work is an inevitable inference from all the facts, and it is fervently hoped that he will be encouraged in the endeavour to do with his might that to which he has put his hand.

FRIENDLY LETTERS.

In a recent address by Miss V. M. Skinner, of Bath, giving an account of the origin and growth of this well-known series of printed bulletins for different classes of people, she said:—

These letters sprang out of my Mission to Public-Houses in the country, about nine years ago. I used to go and visit them, and get the landlords to hang up large texts of Scripture (given to me by various friends), in their bars, and give tracts to the customers. As a rule, I found these landlords very civil, and some more than ordinarily grateful. Once, when visiting in Norwich with a friend, on our return home we found some bottles of brandy on the table, and a message from a landlord, saying that he thought it so very kind of ladies to come and speak to him about his soul, and that he wished to make some little acknowledgment, and so he sent the best he had to offer. My friend, who was strong in the temperance cause, declared she could not visit any more public-houses, if this was to be the result, and wished to return the present. Knowing that nothing would be more likely to give offence, I begged her to keep it for medicinal purposes.

There was a far better result, however, from our visits in a saved soul. The next time I visited Norwich, I was asked by a gentleman, the owner of a beautiful place in the neighbourhood, to meet the thirty city missionaries at tea. One of them said, "I have good news for you. One of the landlords who had your large text, 'This is a faithful saying,' &c., received it as a message from God. He hardly knew there was such a text in the Bible, but he felt that it was just suited for him, that he was a sinner, and that Jesus Christ was the Saviour he wanted. Soon after he was taken with the illness of which he died. On his dying bed he sent for me, and told me that text had brought him to Jesus, and he died rejoicing in his salvation. Had he lived," continued the missionary, "I make no doubt he would have given up the business."

As the result of my letter to licensed victuallers and to barmaids, a Public-house Mission was started in Bath, and a missionary appointed regularly to visit them. We have added a Mission to Cabmen and to Bath Chairmen, to both which classes I have written.

A lady from Worthing told me that the Letter to Bath Chairmen had been greatly blessed there also.

The other classes I have written to are as follow:—

Cabmen, flymen, and omnibus men; policemen, sergeants, and inspectors of police; railway porters, guards, and engine drivers; shepherds, herdsmen, and drovers; ministers, missionaries, and all labourers for the Lord; ploughmen, or horsemen, and farm labourers; boys, especially those who have the care of goats and donkeys; grooms, and their helpers in stables; medical men; labourers' wives; young women employed in houses of business; invalids; lodging and boarding-house keepers; prison officials, warders, and assistant-warders; fishermen, watermen, and beachmen; organists; gamekeepers; young ladies, especially those who have just left school; the Jews; laundresses and washerwomen; nurses of the sick; merchants; quarrymen, colliers, &c.; printers; women employed in factories, mills, and warehouses; grocers; shoemakers; hairdressers; firemen.

The one to policemen was written at the request of members of the force, and so with most of the others. That to medical men has been translated into French. I am now sending a letter to each of the medical men in France. I have had some grateful letters addressed to me as "Doctor Skinner" from a French medical man, saying that he thought it very kind of an English physician to think of their needs in France; that he was sorry to say most of them were sceptics and infidels, but that he would undertake to deliver any number of my letters that I could send him.

Last year a Canadian sent me a list of the names and addresses of all the Roman Catholic priests in Canada, about 2000, and I sent each of them a letter, including the bishops and archbishops as well. Some time after I had a letter from one of them, addressed to me as "Rev. and Dear Sir," in which he said he had left the Church of Rome, and was now preaching the faith which once he destroyed. He also said that he was now editor of an Anti-Romanist paper, and would be glad to review the Friendly Letters in it. I have also been able to send out some hundreds of my letter to Japanese ladies. This has since been translated by a native student, and 500 printed at the C.M.S. press at Hakodate.

My latest venture has been to help a Scripture-reader in Ireland, who goes by the name of "the Friendly Letter Scripture-reader;" also a missionary in Paris, who circulates my lettres amicales there. There is also a little work which I help nearer home, amongst the railway porters at the Paddington Station, in connection with the London City Mission, and my book, "These Seven Years," which contains the history of the Friendly Letter Mission, gives an account of a railway porter to whom I was made useful on this line.

Another letter is to young ladies. Are there not many young ladies, clergymen's daughters, for instance, in lonely country villages to whom such letters would be a boon? and most of us have some such that we might in this way influence for God amongst our own relations and friends. My letters are all undated, and so may be sent out at any time.

As to results, of course this is but sowing the seed, and we must not expect the harvest yet. A lady in Brighton told me that my Letter to Cabmen had been blessed to one there. She had given him one when first it came out. He had read it over and over again, till it was quite worn out, and, just before he died, he sent for the lady who gave it, drew the precious letter from under his pillow, and asked her to read it to him once more!

I should be glad if any of those who read this would undertake to visit the public-houses in their own neighbourhood. I would gladly give such a one the benefit of my own experience, or send the report of our last year's work in Bath. My address is 5, St. James's-square, Bath.

PENTECOSTAL CHRISTIANITY.

Rev. James Stalker, of Free St. Matthew's Church, Glasgow, is delivering a series of Sunday morning lectures on this subject. On Sunday week he remarked that one great characteristic of the primitive Church was its thirst for knowledge. We are told that the three thousand converted at Pentecost "continued stedfastly in the Apostles' doctrine"; the doctrine of a risen Christ and fulfilled prophecy. In the present day there is a strong dislike to strong religious affirmations. Whilst a state of doubt is not necessarily irreligious, it certainly is not Pentecostal; and only from a mind firmly rooted in Christian conviction can we get either a strong testimony for Christ or consistent loyalty to Him. Another characteristic of these Christians was their devotional spirit. This is always the case when religion is real and earnest. When it is cold and formal, the idea is to have as few services as possible, and make them as short as possible. Private devotion, however, is the best proof of the reality of public worship.

The early Church repelled outsiders. "Of the rest," we are told, "durst no man join himself to them." This will always be a characteristic of the true Church. The Christian Church ought not to be all door, as some people would have it. Men must be made to feel that they dare not join themselves to it, unless they are prepared to lead the Christian life.

A Bible-reading is held every Friday at half past two, at Chalet des Syrphes, Chemin du Petit-Juas. Mr. and Mrs. Cheyne Brady invite the attendance of Christian friends.

THE BLACKDOWN HILLS MISSION.

We rejoice to learn, from the nineteenth yearly report, that the work of the late George Brealey, on the Blackdown Hills, Somersetshire, continues to prosper in the hands of his highly esteemed son. Opening the narrative of the work which the Lord enabled him to do last year, Mr. W. J. H. Brealey well says:—"As for more than twenty-five years, the Lord sustained and blessed my beloved parents in their earnest work for Him upon the Hills, setting his seal to their labour of love, so I rejoice to be privileged to say, 'The God of our fathers is the God of their succeeding race.'" Last year was not without its trials, yet it was a season of goodness and mercy, encouragement and blessing, alike to Mr. Brealey, his wife, and fellow-workers.

The report states: "The mission-rooms all over the Hills have been supplied, and not a service has been closed for lack of funds or preachers. Over 900 Gospel and other services have been held in the various mission stations connected with us, and in each place the meetings have been, and still are, well attended. Thousands of tracts and books have been distributed all over the district, while open-air and tent services, special missions and children's meetings have been held in various localities with distinct blessing to souls.

Mr. Brealey further says that, "There is not a preaching-room connected with us that has not been the scene of rejoicing over souls born again of the Spirit of God. With the work of the evangelist is still continued that of the shepherd. The sheep and lambs of the flock have needed feeding and visiting and nourishing. In these precious spheres of labour we have seen much cause for cheerfulness, and are thus encouraged to labour on in patience and to sow in hope, even though in tears." Among the incidents given in the report is one which shows how God gives

FRUIT AFTER MANY DAYS.

"For several years," he says, "my late father and I had prayed earnestly for five persons—two young farmers and three farmers' daughters—who had been regularly attending the meetings. With each of them we had had many personal conversations, and had prayed not only for them, but with them. It seemed, however, as though the Evil One had such power over them that there was little hope of their conversion. Convictions deep and many had been apparently stifled, and it looked as if they were given over to their own ways...An evangelist from Torquay (Mr. H. Veasey) was visiting us, and, remarkable to relate, the whole of these five persons were truly converted on the same day. Four of these have been baptized and received into the church, and the other would have been had he not left the neighbourhood. We still correspond with him, and rejoice to know that there is every evidence of the genuineness of the work in his heart."

As in former years the seed of the kingdom was scattered among the militia during their three months' encampment. The tent work also was prosecuted with cheering results. The sick and poor receive attention, and the day and Sunday-schools are carried on as usual. The teaching in the schools has not been in vain, for from them many have been received into the visible Church, while many who were scholars are now preachers, evangelists, pastors, teachers, or missionaries, who in their turn have been greatly blessed of God. We trust the efforts put forth will continue to be owned of God. Communications to Mr. Brealey should be addressed Clayhidon, Wellington, Somerset.

MRS. BOOTH, although a little better last week, is not quite so well this. By a printer's error, the Scripture passage which Mr. T. A. Denny quoted in his letter in our last issue was wrongly given. It should have been 2 Cor. iv. 16—18; v. 1.

MESSRS. HYDE AND STEVENSON.

DEAR SIR,—Mr. Hyde and myself had made arrangements to labour another year on your side of the Atlantic, specially through Ireland, our hearts being very much drawn out towards it. Mr. Moody, however, cabled us to return, as the work here has pressing demands just now.

I would say a word to the Christians in Ireland. While over there last year we were much impressed with the earnest prayers that God would open doors for the preaching of the Gospel, in the South of Ireland especially. I am convinced that God has abundantly answered this prayer. The doors are many and open, and surely it is for the believers there to step into these open doors. Our hearts are very much in Ireland, and we hope, God willing, to pay a visit to it again. May God stir up the Christians to reach out with deep love to their neighbours in darkness and error, and bring to them the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

ZENANA AND MEDICAL MISSIONS.

THE schools at Bombay, Allahabad, &c., are turning out numbers of Christian teachers year by year, who engage in teaching their fellow-countrywomen the truths of the Gospel. This agency is of a very far-reaching character. There are upwards of 2500 pupils in the day-schools, where careful religious instruction has the first place. The girls who have passed through the Society's schools may now be numbered by tens of thousands. Many more schools might be opened, if means for their maintenance were provided.

The English lady missionaries regularly visit and instruct upwards of two thousand native women in the privacy of the zenanas. Prayer is earnestly asked for the large number of present inquirers and secret believers who are "almost persuaded" to come out and confess Christ. Many zenanas cannot be visited because of lack of workers, who, however, are waiting at home, ready and willing to proceed to the mission field as soon as the finances of the Society will justify the committee in sending them,

The Society's hospitals and dispensaries are crowded day after day with sick and suffering women. When the returns come in they will probably show that from 12,000 to 15,000 have been relieved during the past year.

Two new hospitals are about to be built, one at Lucknow, and one at Benares; and later on, a third will have to be provided at Patna, as extensions of the medical work of the Society, and in answer to the urgent appeal from these places. Of the several missionaries going to India this autumn two are fully qualified lady doctors, who will join the staff at Benares and Lucknow.

A new house for the missionaries is much needed at Faizabad. From this station comes the report of the baptism of a native convert under very trying circumstances. She is a married woman of forty-eight years of age, and was the first zenana pupil at Ajoudhya, visited over six years ago. Her husband offered much opposition, and treated her with great cruelty, because of her wish to become a Christian. She has, however, stood firm, giving up all for Christ. Her case is a very sad one, as it transpires that she is a leper, although in the earlier stage of the disease.

We feel persuaded the important work of this Society will commend itself to the earnest prayers and sympathy of our readers.

The hon. finance secretary of the Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society, is Mr. W. T. Paton, who will be glad to give information. The offices of the Society are at 2, Adelphi-terrace, London, W.C.

MR. AITKEN IN CARLISLE.

A GENERAL mission throughout the city was held in Carlisle, beginning Oct. 26 and terminating in most of the parishes on Nov. 4; but was extended at St. John's Church until Nov. 11. Rev. W. Hay Aitken, Rev. F. Hodgson-Jones, of Salford (who addressed the children), and Mrs. Crouch (who conducted the meetings for women), were the missioners. The services in church and the meetings in the mission-hall for women were well attended, about two thousand persons being reached each day. Towards the end of the mission the crowds eager to attend were very great, and on the last Sunday evening it was impossible to provide accommodation for all, and many had to stand throughout the service. On the last day, Monday, November 11, about three hundred persons commemorated the dying love of the Saviour.

The addresses on "Spiritual Life," which were delivered each day, were found to be most helpful, and were attended by persons from all parts of the town and neighbourhood. In addition to the services in the church and mission-hall, addresses were delivered during the men's dinner hour at the following works:—Messrs. Cowans, Sheldon & Co., the London and North-Western Railway, the North-Eastern Railway, the Midland, the Glasgow and South-Western, and the Main's Manufacturing Co. These were well attended, and the addresses well liked by the men. The addresses to "men only" in the church were listened to by increasing audiences, until about six hundred men assembled on the last Sunday afternoon. In response to a requisition signed by several professional and business men, Mr. Aitken addressed two meetings in the County Hall, which was on each occasion crowded with earnest and attentive hearers.

The blessing attending the mission will not soon be forgotten. Many were brought to a knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ, and many others drawn nearer to God. About two hundred people received memorial mission cards; many of them had personal interviews with the mission preacher. In several instances husband and wife have been brought to a knowledge of Christ as their Saviour, while backsliders were reclaimed and the fallen restored. The Atonement was prominently put before the large and attentive audiences. The subjects of "The Brazen Serpent" and "The New Birth" were pre-eminently useful to many hearers, and the fearful doom of the impenitent was graphically portrayed. Altogether it must have been one of the most successful missions conducted by the eloquent mission preacher, and the ministers of St. John's Church have abundant cause for thankfulness, and will find plenty to do in consolidating the winter's work.

We must not omit to mention that the children's services were most successful, some seven or eight hundred children and their parents and friends attending daily; while the addresses of Mr. Hodgson-Jones were most delightful to the young people, many of whom sought private interviews with him, and appear to have been deeply impressed. Mrs. Crouch's meetings were also largely attended and very much blessed. W. M. S.

A QUESTION.

OUGHT I to love God only in the light,
And leave Him when I feel the shades of night?
Ought I to praise Him for each gracious gift,
And, when they fail, refuse my voice to lift?
Nay! rather let my song for ever flow,
Breathing the joy that o'er my life does glow.
Or, if through poverty of present love
A strain so glad as this, too hard should prove,
Then let me sing who lights my darkest road,
And tell who helps to bear my heaviest load;
Till, glad with thinking of his constant care,
My heart bounds up to Him, and leaves its burden there.

MEETINGS FOR UNITED PRAYER.

A HUMBLE and comparatively unknown Christian worker in the North of London has had it laid on his heart to invite Christians, as such to meet for prayer for the union of Christians and the manifestation of the Holy Spirit's power. The first meeting took place last Friday evening, at Parkhurst Hall, Holloway-road, opposite the Seven Sisters-road. The brother whom God has used in thus drawing his children together, says:—

About 150 were present. There was no restraint, but perfect freedom in prayer. The meeting lasted over two hours. Some twenty engaged in prayer, both men and women. A good and holy influence pervaded the meeting. The drops of a shower have come already from above. We feel very grateful to the Lord that He has laid it on our hearts to call his people together, and that he has inclined their hearts to respond. Should we not praise Him, and continue to wait on Him for showers of blessing to descend on all his people in this great city, and everywhere, that He may be glorified?

The meetings will be continued to-night (November 22) and the two following Friday evenings. Meeting at 7.30.

SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, GIBRALTAR.

MR. JOSEPH HANNINGTON, superintendent of the Soldiers' Institute, Gibraltar, writes:—Mr. Baldwin, whose work in Morocco is well known, recently held some special services at the Institute. Some have professed conversion, backsliders have returned, and Christians have been revived. Both before and since the mission a steady work has been going on, and almost nightly one or more professions have been made, some apparently very satisfactory. One good feature is that the Christian men are hunting out the anxious, and bringing them to the meetings to be personally dealt with. The larger number of cases have been brought out by being spoken to individually. The spirit of revival seems spreading, as the converted men attend other meetings, and carry zeal and fervour with them.

We have given special attention to the refreshments in the coffee-bar, and, as missionaries, have not felt it out of our province to turn our hands to cooking; our labours in this respect have been rewarded with much success. The soldiers greatly enjoy home-made things; it reminds them in some small degree of home. Moreover, we try to give a thoroughly good article at a moderate cost. More soldiers come to the Institute, and consequently attend the meetings, and are kept out of the public-houses and canteens. The larger sales enable the many expenses of the work to be more easily met, and some of the difficulties of finding the needed funds are removed. It does one's heart good to see how deeply the Christian soldiers have been interested in promoting the welfare of the Institute. We are now thinking about Christmas, which every worker amongst the military knows is a most trying time for those who follow Christ. We want to do all we can to counteract the attractions of the public-house at the festive season. Colonel Clarke, secretary Church Pastoral Aid Society, Falcon-court, Fleet-street, E.C., will receive any provisions given for the occasion.

Mr. George Holmes, late superintendent of the Institute, writes:—"During the visit of the German Squadron lately, special efforts were made to reach the sailors. So large was the attendance that every available room was utilised for supplying them with refreshments. This is at present the only place where refreshments are sold without intoxicating drink, while wine and spirit shops abound. Sleeping accommodation is also provided, which is a great boon, especially to sailors. The highest needs of the men are by no means forgotten, and letters are continually being received from old converts in various parts of the world."

The Y.M.C.A.

CORK.

THIS Association, which was formed about two years ago, with a membership of eleven, has made good progress since then, and is now in a flourishing condition, numbering about 150 members and associates. A junior department, varying in age from thirteen to eighteen, has been started, and fifty members enrolled. Mr. Thomas A. Bailey has been appointed as paid secretary.

SAVILE-ROW BRANCH.

Services in connection with the West District Branch were held last week at All Souls' Church. Rev. Evan H. Hopkins took for his subject, "The joy of the Lord is your strength." Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston, "Fight the good fight of faith." Rev. Llewellyn Caley, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" Rev. E. A. Stuart, "Zadok, a young man mighty in valour." Rev. W. R. Mowll closed the series with an address on "Decision." At the after-meetings there were many proofs of blessing as the result of these services.

PAIGNTON, DEVON.

A branch Association has been formed here. At the inaugural meeting last week fifty-one young men and others gave in their names as desirous of joining the Association, and this the organisers thought exceptionally encouraging. Mr. L. M. Miller was elected hon. sec. pro tem.

YOUNG MEN IN THE CITY.

In these days of keen theological controversy, it is encouraging to find amongst young men signs of a deepening interest in the study of the Word of God. This has been very manifest during the course of Bible-readings in Colossians which Rev. F. B. Meyer has been giving at the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. It seemed to some to be courting failure to invite young men to come together on Saturday afternoons to study the New Testament, but undoubted success has attended the effort. The meetings (in accordance with the practice of this Association) were exclusively for men, and the average attendance from 130 to 160. On Saturday last, 16th inst., at what was to have been the closing meeting of the course, Mr. Meyer announced that he proposed to continue for two more Saturdays (November 23 and 30), taking for his subject the Epistle to Philemon. The intimation was received with hearty approval, showing how warmly his hearers have appreciated this teacher.

While the Christian young men of the City are thus being encouraged in the study of God's Word, a special effort is being made to reach the tens of thousands of unsaved young men employed in the City. A mission to young men conducted by Rev. James Smith, of Dufftown, commenced on Sunday last, and will be continued until Friday, 29th inst.; the meetings are held each week night at 8, and on Sundays at 3.30 p.m. In response to an invitation by Mr. M. H. Hodder, about 100 workers were present at a social reception on Friday last, to meet Mr. Smith, and the earnest prayerful spirit of the meeting was a hopeful indication of coming blessing.

FACTORY LADS' INSTITUTE.—Last week the first annual meeting of the Factory Lads' Institute and Home, 331, Kentish Town-road, was held in the Hampstead Vestry Hall, Haverstock-hill. Dr. A. Eversheld, chairman, said that in Kentish Town and Camden Town there were about 1800 lads between thirteen and seventeen years of age employed in factories, and he pointed out the importance of exerting elevating influences upon lads of that class. There were now about 170 lads on the books of the Institute. Mr. T. J. Wood read the annual report, which showed that the work was increasing daily, and applications for admission to the Home had to be refused for want of funds. The claims of the Institute and Home were earnestly advocated by Canon Girdlestone, Rev. R. Thornber, Mr. John Groom, and Mr. D. Warde.

AMERICAN NOTES.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

THE Y.M.C.A. State Convention of Kansas was the largest of the kind held as yet in any of our States, numbering 901 delegates. The missionary spirit rose to such height that the final service lasted from 7 o'clock on Sunday evening until 2 o'clock on Monday morning. During the seven-hours' session none felt weary. Four young men spoke thrilling words of farewell, as they are soon to start for the Great Soudan; its pioneer missionaries. At this meeting seventy young men, the bone and sinew of Kansas Y.M.C.A., volunteered for the foreign field. An impromptu collection taken for the outgoing missionaries, included gold watches, chains, earrings, finger-rings, and brooches. We never before witnessed such a scene for depth of consecration, enthusiasm, and calm determination to spend and be spent for God and man.

Another meeting of extraordinary power was the Convention on "The Glorious Person and Manifold Ministry of the Holy Spirit" held at Baltimore. After one of the addresses nearly one hundred preachers rose requesting prayer that they might be filled with the Spirit. The Convention lasted four days. During each session able teachers presented carefully prepared addresses on this vital theme. We were struck with the fact that every man who emphasised the honour of the personal Spirit, emphasised also the inspiration of the Scriptures. The final service of this remarkable Convention was also one of peculiar sacredness and tenderness. Other cities are desiring conferences. Many disheartened men are turning away from religious machinery, and are directing their cry to heaven for spiritual power.

A large number of training schools and Bible institutes are springing up all over the land. Many young men find they have neither means nor time to take a long theological course, while others hesitate to study in any denominational college. The result is that all the new schools have many applicants, and young men who wish to devote their lives to foreign, or home missionary work, hope to receive necessary preparation in a short space of time. Such schools as Mr. Moody's and Mr. Guinness's will certainly have the support and sanction of aggressive Christians. The chief aim is to doctrinate their pupils with the precious Word of life.

Quite a stir has been made within the ranks of Episcopalians by reason of Dr. Leavitt, a distinguished clergyman of that order, withdrawing from the denomination because of its Romanising tendencies, and connecting himself with the Reformed Episcopal party. This latter body recognises ministers of every evangelical Church, has purged the Prayer-book of objectionable expressions, and holds tenaciously to the doctrines of grace.

During the late General Convention of the Episcopal Church, a vote was taken on the proposal of prayers for the dead. One hundred and eleven dignitaries voted for its adoption, but it was lost by a majority of eight. These are more straws in the current.

IRVINGITE DELUSIONS.—Where can I get pamphlets or books refuting the errors of the Catholic Apostolic Church (so-called)?

JOHN PATERSON.

98, Trongate-street, Glasgow.

NOTTINGHAM.—Mr. Robert Mellor, writing with reference to the United Gospel Mission and Pleasant Sunday Afternoons, says:—"We are crowded out. Last Sunday afternoon, we had 2500 men in the Albert Hall, while the Circus-street Hall was filled with women. In the evening the Albert Hall was crowded again. Every Sunday men and women are being converted, and God is giving abundant blessing. We have bought Circus-street Hall for week nights."

CHILDREN'S DINNER SOCIETY.

THERE are sixty-five dining-rooms connected with the London Destitute Children's Dinner Society. Many additional rooms are necessary to meet the existing wants of the children, whilst ever-increasing London adds year by year to the piteous prayer for help to its poor child population. During the winter season of 1888-89 the Society provided 367,679 dinners, also making grants to different dining-rooms to the amount of £1796 6s. 10d., while £760 16s. 10d. was contributed by the children's pence. It is estimated that 100 dinners can be provided by every pound subscribed.

Baroness Burdett-Coutts has issued an appeal on behalf of the Society, whose work has this year been resumed with unusually small funds. On all hands, the Society is well spoken of by ministers and schoolmasters. One of the latter writes:—"Had it not been for the promotion of the dinner scheme, thousands of poor children would daily go without a morsel of food." A clergyman says:—"The moral influence of the Society's work has equalled the charitable benefit." The secretary of the Society is Mr. H. Morton Carr, 89, St. George's-square, S.W.

EVANGELICAL SCHOOLS IN ITALY.

A FEMALE Normal Training Institute has just been opened in Pisa in connection with Miss Carruthers' Schools, and thus the original plan of training teachers, which was proposed twenty-two years ago, has at length been carried into effect.

As it is started on a thoroughly Scriptural but undenominational basis, Miss Carruthers hopes the various evangelical churches in Italy will take advantage of the new Institute, to send girls to be practically trained, not only as elementary and Kindergarten teachers, but also in a graduated course of manual work, specially prepared for her schools; which, commencing in the Kindergartens, is carried on through all the elementary classes, under the very able direction of a duly qualified Italian professor and his highly educated wife.

The night schools are now reopened for the winter season, and the day schools have already 268 pupils in attendance, not a few of whom have come from the Communal Schools, and from those of the nuns.

Miss Carruthers earnestly invites travellers to visit the Normal Institute and annexed girls' schools in Borgo No. 1, where there is also a small depôt for the sale of Gospel portions and other Scriptures.

Information as to fees and terms for boarding pupil-teachers can be obtained from Miss Carruthers, Via del Santo No. 2, Cisanello-Pisa.

ROMSEY, HANTS.—Meetings for the deepening of Spiritual life were held here on Tuesday and Wednesday, Nov. 12 and 13. Rev. George Wainwright, of Bournemouth, W. J. Hams, Winchester, and A. W. Wood, of Broughton, were the workers, and evidently enjoyed the Master's guidance and blessing. At each of the eight meetings the light revealed and the blood cleansed. Deep were the heart-searchings, genuine the contrition for sin, and clear the testimonies borne to rich blessing received by pastors, deacons, and other believers. In some sense the town was waiting for blessing, inasmuch as every Sunday morning the believers of nearly all sects meet at seven for united prayer, visiting each place of worship in turn; the attendance at these vary from thirty to fifty winter and summer. The brethren are not only about to hold a Gospel temperance mission, and so work together as well as pray, but are seriously thinking of following up the week of prayer in January by holding a series of distinctly evangelistic services in the chapels of the town in rotation.

Death of Professor Elmslie.

HE death of this young and gifted preacher, n Saturday last, after a brief illness, has aused a feeling of deep and widespread sorrow mong the Nonconforming churches in London nd throughout the country. Few of our public eachers have won such a high place in the steem of the Christian public. The fact of his lness was made known a week ago, but his amented death has come to most of us as a ad surprise. It now appears that for some ime the strain of continuous work has been elling upon him. As Dr. Donald Fraser said t the funeral service on Monday evening: The cruel urgency with which the services of opular men are sought, drove him to one exer- ion after another; when his frame was en- eebled and his nervous energy exhausted, fever eized on him, and bore him down almost vithout resistance."

The remarkable position that Dr. Elmslie eld in the public esteem and affection could be udged from the scene that was witnessed at he funeral service held in Marylebone Pres- byterian Church on Monday evening, of which he Professor was a member. The spacious church, even to the last inch of standing room, was crammed to excess with a congregation hat included within it many of the leading men n the Metropolitan Presbyteries, as well as hose of other churches. Nearly all were in mourning attire, and a feeling of subdued grief pervaded the place. Principal Oswald Dykes conducted the devotional part of the service. An address was given by Dr. Fraser full of sympa- thetic appreciation of the rare talents and high character of the departed servant of God. He was a man, said Dr. Fraser, "of the choicest spirit, rare powers, great attainments, and wide sympathies. In Oriental languages and literature he was surpassed by very few in this kingdom. He was a most successful Professor. His alertness of mind, thoroughness of know- ledge, command of expression, genius for ex- position, and enthusiasm for teaching, secured the admiration of successive classes of students. He had a great attraction for young men every- where. His perception was so keen, his sym- pathy so warm, his style so flowing, and the very beam of his eye so inspiring that they could not but listen to him with delight. His learning never sat heavily upon him, for his bright spirit shone out, and his lambent fancy played freely while he spoke. After his ap- pointment as Professor he preached often with growing power, and it was as a preacher that he was best known to the public. He had left behind no enemy, no rankling wounds, no bitter memories."

As representing the Congregational body, Dr. Henry Allon, of Islington, paid a warm tribute to the catholicity of spirit manifested by Dr. Elmslie, who was as ready to preach in Congregational as in Presbyterian churches. The closing prayer by Dr. Monro Gibson was marked by pathetic reference to the bereaved wife and child, and the other sorrowing relatives of the Professor. The vast congrega- tion filed slowly past the flower-bedecked coffin at the close, and many lingered to see the loved remains placed in the hearse that conveyed them to Euston Station, whence they were taken to Liverpool for interment. The death of Professor Elmslie makes a wound in the public heart that will not be easily healed.

NAPLES SAILORS' REST. — The medical branch of this many-sided work is succeeding ad- mirably. The Seamen's Scripture-reading Union, recently formed, promises to be a very useful agency. Christian Sailors have taken up the movement with great heartiness, and it is hoped to arrange for men to read the Scriptures to such of their mates as are indifferently educated.

SEEKING THE LOST.

No department of Christian work is more diffi- cult or discouraging than that of seeking to reclaim from an evil life those whom conven- tional society has agreed to call "fallen women. Yet it is work that must be attempted if our modern Christianity would justify its existence. The Midnight Meeting Movement does its best, through the special agency of late meetings, to seek and to save those truly lost ones. Last week meetings were held on three evenings at Craven Chapel lecture hall, with a view to in- fluence for good some of the many daughters of shame who frequent the purlieus of Regent- street after dark. The effort was very earnestly gone about and was not without good result, though the success of course was partial.

In the neighbourhood referred to there are to be found a large number of French and German women, and these are exceptionally "hard cases." One difficulty in dealing with them is the absence of any Home or institution in London ready to receive these foreign sisters when they show signs of penitence. Mr. J. H. Christien, the devoted superintendent of the Movement, feels very strongly the need of some institution, especially for the German-speaking women, and we trust something may be done to meet the need. On the three evenings in ques- tion the workers went out, and, by kindly per- sonal invitation, induced several "relays" to attend the hall for tea and conversation. Many of those present were living examples of the eternal axiom that "the way of transgressors is hard"; and as Mr. Christien remarked to our representative, their tales were enough to make one weep.

By song and heartfelt speech every endea- vour was made to wean the erring ones away from the paths of sin and not without fruit, as we have said. There were also found some cases of prevention.

We cannot help saying, as we have done before, that the police authorities ought to do something to lessen the glaring temptations of the streets. Meantime, those who feel strongly as to the condition of things should do all they can to support the Midnight Meeting Move- ment, whose headquarters are at Red Lion- square, Bloomsbury, W.C.

PARIS Y.M.C.A.—Daily prayer-meetings were held the whole of last week, for young men, in con- nection with the Y.M.C.A. in Paris, and addresses were given by various friends. Mr. Newman also conducted a Bible-reading on Sunday afternoon, which was well attended.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.—PRAISE: For blessing given at the inaugural ser- vices for navvies, on Nov. 8 to 11, at Shaftesbury House, Margate; continued prayer is requested for these services, which are to be continued every Sunday.——PRAYER: For blessing on missions by Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, at Birkenhead, Nov. 24 to Dec. 1; and at Abingdon, Dec. 8 to 15. ——For blessing upon a twelve days' mission, by Mr. R. Cairns, at Corfe Mullen.——That God's richest blessing may rest on the Gospel Mission for the young men of the City of London, now being conducted by Rev. James Smith, of Dufftown, N.B., in the Young Men's Christian Association, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., and to be continued till Nov. 30.——For an outpouring of God's Spirit during a fifteen days' special Gospel mission, at Tollington Hall, Hornsey-road, N., Nov. 24 to Dec. 8.——For blessing on a special effort being put forth in connection with Mr. T. M. Wintle's work at Pontymoile, to reach the masses of colliers in Cwmyniscoy, and steel workers in Sebastopol, Mon.——For blessing on Christian work being undertaken by a band of young students at Cam- bridge.——For blessing on a mission being held by Mr. Herbert R. Francis, at St. John's Mission Hall, World's End, King's-road, Chelsea, S.W., to Sun- day, Nov. 24.——For blessing on a mission con- ducted by Rev. W. A. Meaton, at Leyton, Nov. 24 to Dec. 1.——For blessing on special services, by Mr. William Forbes, at Clifton Chapel, Peckham, S.E., commencing on Sunday next.——For blessing on the mission being held by Rev. F. D. Sanford, at Stoke Newington.

ZANZIBAR AND ITS NEEDS.

To the east of Africa lies a large tract of almost unknown country, nominally under the despotic sway of the Sultan of Zanzibar, but politically broken up among innumerable petty tribes or factions, governed by native chiefs. Of these chiefs eight or nine have recently, under missionary influence, renounced heathen- ism and embraced Christianity. Zanzibar, the state capital of this immense region, lies on a picturesque island, separated from the mainland by a thread of water, fringed by graceful cocoa-nut palms and date trees. Nature has been bountiful to Zanzibar. Gold and vegetable products abound, some of the latter forming articles of commerce for expor- tation. Zanzibar itself is a famous emporium for ivory.

Since the beginning of the year it has been laid upon a few faithful hearts to take up the burden of Zanzibar's needs. Christian honour and re- sponsibility have been startled and dismayed by the state of the surroundings into which our seamen are hopelessly plunged as soon as they go ashore. A clergyman, at one time resident in Zanzibar, writes to us:—"I know of no place in the world where a 'Strangers' Rest,' is more needed than at Zanzibar. It is a much- frequented port, and the place is full of temp- tation to sailors, to drink and every kind of vice." Sympathy with the seamen from many lands, employed in the merchant vessels trading there, was first awakened by a conversation with the Consul-General of Zanzibar, himself resident in the port. The temptations that surround a sailor from the first moment of his landing are simply appalling. Those who understand anything of seamen and their habits must know how ready they are to be influenced by their first impressions ashore. Too often, alas! drunkenness and immorality spring up in their footsteps. And if the temp- tation to sin is sharp and real at home, it is tenfold more so in a foreign port, where our men land strangers, weary with the restraints imposed by a long voyage, and eager for any form of excitement that will banish the sick- ness of the heart for home, and for the clasp of a friendly hand.

In Zanzibar there is an average of from twelve to twenty ships lying in port, manned by seamen of all nationalities. There is not a single agency at hand to reach these men, or to provide a counter attraction to the haunts of vice that allure and ruin them. There is no "Strangers' Rest," where tried and tempted men may be sure of finding loving sympathy and words of help and prayer. It is to supply this need, and in obedience to a very distinct call and most definite leading of the Divine hand that we cast the foregoing appeal upon the prayerful sympathy and help of our Chris tian friends. As to the natives themselves, bound and fettered by the saddest slavery to superstition and Mohammedanism, shall we not open the doors of our "Rest" to them? Three months' intelligent study of the native Swahili language would enable a worker to tell out, in the simplest forms of speech, the story of sal- vation. The cry that reaches us is a voiceless cry, from the heart of a people's unutterable need, but with us who have been raised from death unto life it pleads despairingly, "take ye away the stone."

Mr. J. Theo. Isaac, Strangers' Rest, 163, St. George's-street, Ratcliff-highway, E., will be glad to hear from friends willing to help in establishing a "Rest" at Zanzibar.

MR. HERBERT R. FRANCIS has lately held some very successful missions. At Croydon he was much blessed; now he is holding meetings daily in St. John's Mission-hall, Chelsea. Every afternoon this week he gives lectures descriptive of the Tabernacle in the wilderness, illustrated by a large model.

The Book World.

WHERE THE DEW FALLS IN LONDON, by Sarah Doudney (2s. 6d. James Nisbet & Co.), well sustains the author's reputation as a skilful analyst of character. The scene is mainly laid in Central London, and the tale throbs with human interest.

FOR HONOUR'S SAKE. By Jennie Chappell. 3s. 6d. Partridge. A story full of life and incident. The features that are generally regarded as inevitable to sustain interest are cleverly introduced, and many lessons are pointed before the arrival of the happy situation with which, in quite orderly style, the very entertaining volume closes.

THE EAGLE CLIFF: A Tale of the Western Isles. By R. M. Ballantyne. 3s. 6d. Partridge. Here are life and adventure sufficient to whet the appetite of most boys for further reading of the same essentially wholesome kind. The scene is laid in the West of Scotland, and if the situations are occasionally startling, and dialectical peculiarities are brought into prominence, it is in order to emphasise sober truth, and give force to the narrative of one who at the end gloried in being "saved by grace."

SARAH TYTLER'S WORKS. Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. have published new editions of DAYS OF YORE, A HERO OF A HUNDRED FIGHTS, and PAPERS FOR THOUGHTFUL GIRLS. They are exceedingly attractive half-crown volumes. Miss Tytler's style has a reputation which does not require emphasising. We are, however, glad of an opportunity to commend the last-named of the three books. As when it was first written, so to-day, it is calculated to prove very useful to young women. Many "thoughtful girls" in the past have been the better for reading the eloquent and entertaining papers, and we trust many will yet peruse them with equal pleasure and profit.

THE LORD'S PRAYER: A PRACTICAL MEDITATION. By Newman Hall, LL.B. 6s. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark. A work of distinct spiritual purpose and sterling value. Touching only lightly upon critical questions, the author addresses himself to a thorough opening up of the prayer which our Lord taught his disciples. As he well says, the quarry, however diligently worked, is inexhaustible. The book not only evinces deep thought, but also wide reading, for the pages are enriched both by quotation and suggestion from the writings of many others who have done their part in elaborating the same grand theme. Occasionally the commentary is adorned by original verse, always chaste and truly devotional in tone. Mr. Hall's work is more than an exposition, for he enforces throughout the implication, in doctrine and practice, of the various clauses of the prayer. This is the second edition, and we trust it will not be the last, of an essentially sound and helpful book.

RECENT PROGRESS IN THEOLOGY. By Marcus Dods, D.D. 1s. Hodder & Stoughton. This is the inaugural lecture delivered on the 6th inst., in New College, Edinburgh. It is outspoken and incisive, in its author's well known manner. The contention is that, though Scotland still holds fast by the central doctrines of Christianity, there has been a forward movement in theology, whereby aspects of truth which have hitherto been neglected have been given their due weight and proper place in thought and faith. Enlarging upon New Testament studies, Dr. Dods ably sketches their great fruitfulness during the past fifty years. His eulogy of Baur's method of criticism reveals a sympathy which we do not share. While willingly recognising the good that has come out of investigations excited by the audacious attacks of Baur and his disciples upon the New Testament Scriptures, we decidedly decline to thank them for an increased assurance which we immediately owe to the activities of men whom God himself raised up to rout the enemy. Further, we rejoice that, as a result of inquiries of which the origin is easily traced to times anterior to the assaults of Baur, the New Testament Scriptures have been established more firmly than ever in the confidence of Christian people. It is to-day intensely true of Paul's Epistles, round some of which the battle raged so long and fiercely: "They have passed through the fire. We hold them now in no fear of what some unknown critic may adduce." These are Dr. Dods' words. The assurance, however, implies the total discomfiture of the Tübingen school, whose industry would certainly have been more fruitful, if their method, in rendering them blind to the supernatural, had not obscured their vision of God as He is seen in the face of Jesus Christ.

THE TREASURY OF SACRED SONG. By Francis T. Palgrave. Oxford University Press. This is a manual edition of a work which we recently noticed in its large paper form. In every respect it is a beautiful book, admirably suited for presentation. The contents include many compositions that are rarely met with, but which are nevertheless calculated greatly to promote spiritual reflection and devotion.

Messrs. T. Nelson & Sons have published two story books which the young may read to profit as well as with much pleasure. ROSE AND THORN, by Katharine Lee Bates, has its scene in America. Alternately pathetic and vivacious, the pages show that moral excellence commands admiration even though associated with physical deformity.—DORA'S DOLL'S HOUSE, by the Hon. Mrs. Green, will specially delight little girls. It is a capital story, pointing many and important lessons.

JOSHUA: HIS LIFE AND TIMES. Rev. W. J. Deane supplies yet another volume to the very useful "Men of the Bible" series (2s. 6d. Nisbet). The pages embody the results of careful study of the Old Testament story. Controversial questions, arising out of modern criticism on what is called the "Hexateuch," have been wisely left out of view. Taking assured facts, the author has virtually replied to more than one of the theoretical fancies associated with the "higher criticism." The latest researches in topography, with sidelights from the monuments, give a special value to this very useful biographical handbook.

THE YOUNG CASTAWAYS, or, The Child Hunters of Patagonia. By Lady Florence Dixie. 5s. J. F. Shaw & Co. A book of stirring and romantic adventure, written apparently with a purpose, to show that woman is man's equal—and rather more. It is somewhat off the line hitherto affected by its publishers, and has a savour, though very slight, of Roman Catholicism. Once or twice the name of God is used in a way not intended to be, and yet which sounds, profane. Yet thanks are habitually given to God for his deliverances. It is like one of Mayne Reid's books, and quite their equal in ability and interest.

IT MIGHT HAVE BEEN: the Story of the Gunpowder Plot. By Emily S. Holt. 5s. J. F. Shaw & Co. Another of the episodes in English history to which Miss Holt has imparted such thrilling interest. Few events are more startling than the Gunpowder Plot, and its discovery. The story is told with Miss Holt's accustomed particularity of detail, and describes characters, the study of whom will interest as well as profit youthful and elderly readers. We confess this book pleases us less than some others by the same author. Expressions occasionally occur which would be more suitable to newspaper writing. Nevertheless, there are few books of the class to which this belongs, which will be greater favourites, or more deservedly so.

THE ANCIENT BRITISH CHURCH. By W. L. Alexander, D.D. 2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. A new and revised edition of a succinct and reliable work. The "Church History Series" could hardly have been considered complete without a narrative of the rise and early progress of Christianity in Britain. The evidence on the subject is sifted with care, and estimated in a truly judicial spirit. At what time Christianity first visited our shores is unknown; but that it must have found its way hither at an early period, perhaps before the close of the first century, is established on grounds of considerable firmness. This is a volume of more than ordinary interest, and constituting an important chapter in the history of Britain.

PERSONAL GLIMPSES OF REMARKABLE PEOPLE. By Archdeacon Whately. 6s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Men, after all, are much more than manners, or theories, or systems of thought, and we are finding it out, if one may judge from the prevalence of the "personal" element in current literature. This volume is quite in keeping with the spirit of the time. It gives delightful glimpses and inside views into the lives and characters of some of the past generation who carved for themselves more or less deep niches in the temple of fame. To his own recollections the author has added the fuller knowledge of his illustrious father (Archbishop Whately) in describing such figures as Keble, Newman, Arnold, and others associated with Oxford. The reminiscences of the Lake Poets will be intensely interesting to all acquainted with such skilled interpreters of nature as Southey, Wordsworth, and Coleridge. The author's treatment of his fascinating theme is most judicious, and his standpoint soundly evangelical.

STUDIES IN THE CHRISTIAN EVIDENCES. By Alexander Mair, D.D. 6s. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark. We cordially welcome a revised and enlarged edition of this very useful manual. In days when there is a far too common disposition to give way to a negative criticism, which is often as shallow as it is unscrupulous, it is quite stimulating to read such vigorous pages as these. Dr. Mair starts from the belief in a personal God, and triumphantly conducts the earnest reader into the central truths of the Christian religion. Setting himself to meet present-day needs and forms of thought, in a manner which the intelligent, although untheological mind can easily grasp, he makes a free use of the studies of others in the same field. The result is a treatise which we gladly commend for its comprehensiveness in dealing with fundamental points, and its thoroughness in demonstrating the grounds of our most holy faith. To this edition is added a chapter entitled, "Some Recent Reverses of Negative Criticism," in which it is shown that one by one the contentions of Baur and his disciples are being surrendered, investigation and discussion having resulted in the confirmation of the Scriptures, and of our confidence in them as having been written in the Apostolic age.

BIBLICAL COMMENTARY ON THE PSALMS. By Franz Delitzsch, D.D. Vol. iii. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. This is the third and concluding volume of the Rev. David Eaton's excellent translation of Professor Delitzsch's great work on the Psalms. Besides being a translation of the latest edition specially revised by the author, it contains an appendix of essays illustrative of points touched on in the commentary, from the pen of Dr. J. G. Wetzstein. As an illustration of Delitzsch's sagacious exegesis, we may quote some of his remarks on Ps. cxxxiii. 3: "Like the dew of Hermon that cometh down upon the mountains of Zion" (R.V.). "An abundant dew after a succession of warm days might rightly be accounted for in Jerusalem by the influence of the cold current of air sweeping down from the North over Hermon. When brethren bound together in love also come together locally, and indeed when brethren from the North unite with brethren from the South in Jerasalem, the city which is the mother of all, at the great feasts, it is as when the dew of Hermon, which is covered with deep, almost eternal snow, descends upon the mountains round about Zion, which are bare and unfruitful, and therefore long for such refreshment." Possessed of this work, the student may rest assured that he has at hand information fully up to date, both with regard to the text and ascertained interpretation of the Psalter. We need not add that the spiritual implication of the book is not sacrificed at the expense of verbal and literary studies.

BOOKS ABOUT HYMNS.

Psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, mated to appropriate music, are God's two-wheeled chariots that carry the spirit up to the heavenly places, while yet it tabernacles in flesh. To the devout heart, therefore, there is an undying attraction about all that pertains to our choicest hymnology. An excellent contribution to the literature of the subject is ROMANCE OF PSALTER AND HYMNAL. 6s. Hodder & Stoughton. Its authorship is dual, and both parts are ably done. Rev. R. E. Welsh, Presbyterian minister at Brondesbury, expounds with rare insight, sympathy, and catholicity the grand old Hebrew Psalter, in which have been found for ages the battle song and the dying pillow of the Christian Church. Many a fresh ray of light flashes athwart the Old Testament minstrelsy as we follow the fortunes and ponder the experiences of the known or reputed authors, and the people among whom they lived. The second part of Mr. Welsh's contribution deals, briefly of necessity, but comprehensively and judiciously, with the history of Christian hymnology. Some will think that for an evangelical writer he passes over rather lightly the sacred song of his own theological school, but the field is large, and we find nothing that could well be left out. The sketches of eminent modern hymn tune composers by Mr. F. G. Edwards are an admirable appendix, and the whole forms a book that will be greatly enjoyed by those who love to make melody with heart and voice unto Him who is the supreme object of Christian praise.

Another book in the same category is Mr. H. E. Lewis's SWEET SINGERS OF WALES. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) Our Welsh friends are born singers, and we are glad in these pages to know something of the men and women who have furnished material for the swelling strains that echo rough the mountains and valleys of the brave tle Principality.

HYMNS AND THEIR ASSOCIATIONS, by Frances rsford (Elliot Stock) is a monograph on a great bject, dealing with some of the best known of r devotional hymns, and various historical asso-tions connected with them. The little book is shly interesting.

FOR THE NURSERY.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. know how to cater for the all people. What better magazine for them uld the wit of man devise than LITTLE FOLKS, th its short, bright articles and stories, its pretty ems, its wealth of beautiful engravings, and its perb, coloured pictures, that certainly excel ture itself in their glorious array. The half-arly volume of this favourite serial (3s. 6d. and .) is a perfect treasure-house of delights for the ll days, and the winter nights. The same firm ve published a series of shilling illustrated books, ade up of one-page tales, in big print, each capi-lly illustrated. Two of these are before us, TITTLE ATTLE TALES, and SCRAMBLES AND SCRAPS.

From Messrs. Shaw & Co. comes the annual olume of Dr. Barnardo's OUR DARLINGS—that ost attractive monthly for the young, that seems improve with every volume. The outside cover is year is specially gorgeous. Where the Doctor ts his inexhaustible stock of graphic pictures om it is hard to say, but he gets them, and gives em without stint. The set of sepia drawings, by r. Irwin, we observe, are made to do duty in ustrating a very pretty little story, called SOME-DY'S DARLING, by Mrs. Shaw (2s.), which is lendidly printed, and sumptuously got up.

OBITUARY.

MRS. WEBSTER KIRKHAM.

E regret to record the death of this devoted dy, better known to the evangelistic world as iss McLatchie. As a Gospel preacher, she was ghly gifted, and was honoured of God in leading any into spiritual light and liberty. Since r marriage, in 1885, she has resided at New arnet. On Sunday-week she succumbed to the vages of that dread and mysterious disease, ncer. Her last hours were full of triumphant ith and hope.

REV. DR. HATCH.

Rev. Edwin Hatch, D.D., a ripe scholar of the urch of England, died on the 10th inst., at the e of 54. An alumnus of Pembroke College, Ox-rd, he spent some years in Canada, as professor d head of a college. Returning to Oxford in 67, he became Vice-Principal of St. Mary Hall. e is widely known by his Bampton Lectures, de-vered in 1880, on the organisation of the early ristian churches. These constituted a vigorous tack upon the conceit of "Apostolic Succession," d gave rise to a good deal of controversy. The ctures which Dr. Hatch delivered last year as rinfield Lecturer on the Septuagint, were re-ntly published, and have led scholars to anticipate ith pleasure the publication of his Concordance the Septuagint, a work of stupendous labour to hich he devoted the best years of his life. It is derstood that this much-needed work is left in unfinished state. Dr. Hatch was a theologian of dependent thought and wide sympathies.

SIR SAMUEL MORTON PETO.

This well-known Christian patriot expired on e 13th inst. at the ripe age of 80. Until a little ver twenty years ago he was engaged for a long me in building operations. He constructed a rge portion of the leading railway works in Eng-nd, and carried through important undertakings Canada and on the Continent. A baronetcy as conferred upon him in 1855 for patriotic ser-ces on the occasion of the Crimean War, when, ithout prospect of profit, he undertook the con-ruction of a railway from Balaklava. Blooms-ury Chapel was built at his expense for the Bap-st denomination; and the Diorama premises in egent's Park were purchased by him and con-erted into a chapel—now Regent's Park Chapel, resided over by Rev. F. B. Meyer. From 1847 to 868 Sir Samuel sat in Parliament. The last twenty ears of his life were passed in comparative retire-ent. He was acquainted with disappointment, t, in success as well as in adversity, his trust was the living God.

Evangelistic Notes.

Major Evered Poole and Mrs. Poole have held Gospel meetings at Barnstaple. Many confessed Christ, and started on the life of holiness.

Craven Arms, Salop.—Here, among the Shropshire Hills, Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker have much joy in seeing the work of the Lord prosper in their hands.

Eastbourne.—A successful mission has been held here by Mr. George King in connection with the work among fishermen. The attendances were good, and at each meeting the Lord's power was manifested.

Edinburgh Castle.—During last week upwards of one hundred inquirers gave their names to the workers as having accepted Christ during the mission now being conducted by Mr. James B. Wookey, at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse.

Mr. and Mrs. Somerset Gardner have conducted special services for a week in the Baptist Chapel, Bridlington, with constantly increasing congregations, and a deepening blessing. The prayers of many friends follow them in their work at Dover.

Ventnor.—Mr. C. Russell Hurditch lately held an eight days' mission at the Congregational Church here, daily prayer-meetings having been held for a week previous. The result has been very encouraging; many have professed conversion, and Christians have been stirred up to greater zeal and earnestness in the Lord's service.

Mr. Oscar Owers has concluded a fortnight's mission at the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Wallingford. His Gospel addresses each evening were remarkably clear and manifestly accompanied by the power of the Spirit of God. The meetings were well attended throughout, and on the last day of the mission the hall was crowded, and many had to be turned away from the doors.

Rev. T. Waugh has conducted a mission at the Wesleyan Chapel, Mansfield, extending from November 3 to 14. The various meetings were largely attended. Never, in the memory of the oldest inhabitant, has Mansfield been so moved, the mission being the main topic of conversation alike in the streets and in business establishments. Persons from almost every place of worship in the district were among the inquirers, who numbered several hundreds.

Mr. and Miss Parker, of Brighton, have just concluded a series of evangelistic meetings, extending over three weeks, at the Carrubbers' Close Mission, Edinburgh. The principal part of the speaking was borne by Miss Parker, while Mr. Parker led the singing, and rendered sacred solos with good effect. Miss Parker's addresses have made a deep impression, and the remarkable knowledge she possesses of Scripture, and her singular aptitude as a Bible teacher, have greatly delighted the Christians, who have helped in these services. Some very striking cases of conversion have taken place.

Selkirk, N.B.—Successful evangelistic meetings have been held in Philiphaugh Congregational Church (Rev. William Robertson, pastor), from Nov. 5 to 17. The church was crowded during the week of Rev. D. Robb's visit, his third within fourteen months, Mr. Robb is Congregational minister of Leith, and has taken a leading part in evangelistic work among Scottish Congregationalists. The other preachers were Mr. T. Nicol, and Rev. B. Morris. Mr. Nicol's meetings were largely attended. He spoke to an audience of children, which filled the church, besides addressing a great crowd in the market-place. Conversions took place.

Wesleyan Mission.—A fourteen days' mission, conducted by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, M.A., in Princes Hall, Piccadilly, commenced on Monday, November 18, and will continue to the end of the month. On Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of each week there is an afternoon service at four and an evening service at eight. At the afternoon service the Rev. Mark Guy Pearse will frequently assist. On Sundays, November 24 and December 1, the service will be at seven p.m., in St. James's Hall and Princes Hall. On Tuesday, November 26, there will be a special late service at nine p.m., for young women. On Thursday, November 28, a similar service for young men. Holy Communion at St. James's Hall, on Sunday morning, December 1.

"MODERN SOCIALISM."

DEAR SIR,—Permit me, as sympathetically and respectfully as brevity will allow, to point out to you that the explanation of the meaning of Modern Socialism, given in col. 3, p. 8 of your current issue, is a series of misstatements, the whole conception being quite the reverse of truth. I hope the writer will not be offended if I say that it arises from his seeing the subject through his own "individualist" spectacles. If he will just throw them aside, and read such a book as Dr. Albert Schäffles' "Quintessence of Socialism," lately published by Sonnenschein & Co., he may reject Socialism as an economical heresy, but he will never again give the idea that it means individual appropriation of other men's industry and thrift, or a redistribution of property. Nor could he have got such ideas from any "Socialist" agitators and mob-orators (why agitators and mob-orators more than any other street preachers?), for such ideas contradict the fundamental thought of Socialism.

Yours faithfully, RICHARD HEATH.

[Perhaps Mr. Heath is right in his definitions of Socialism as understood by himself, but we have often heard "orators," who proudly declare themselves, by banner and speech, to be "Socialists," distinctly advocate redistribution of property, &c. Perhaps they err in their claim to be called Socialists, but ordinary hearers take them upon their own ground.—ED.]

THE HON. AND REV. R. MORETON.

DEAR SIR,—I was glad to see the letter in your issue of November 1, referring to the evangelistic work of the Hon. and Rev. Captain Moreton at Montreal. Not long after leaving England, he found that it would add to his opportunities of usefulness if his ministry were formally recognised, and he accordingly entered the Presbyterian ministry, thereupon dropping the prefix "Captain."

First near Le Mars, and since then in three or four other places in the States and Canada, he has found out churches without a pastor, and for months (or longer) has kept the people together, until a new pastor was found. Now, however, in Hamilton, Ontario, he has been asked to settle in charge of a congregation. The schoolroom in which the meetings have been held is too small and ill ventilated. The people are seeking to erect a plain, substantial building for public worship. I doubt not that nine and a half years' absence have not caused many to forget the unselfishness which showed itself in rare sympathy for the needs of others, whether of soul or body; and such, did they know of the need, would be glad now to manifest sympathy with an absent friend.

The character of Mr. Moreton's teaching may be seen by turning to the letter in your columns to which reference has been made.

A FELLOW-WORKER AT MILDMAY.

A QUESTION FOR TOTAL ABSTAINERS.

DEAR SIR,—Being sure that a great many of your readers, like myself, desire in every sort of way to discourage the drink traffic, I venture to ask through your columns what my fellow householders and housekeepers do, as regards dealing with grocers and co-operative stores? It is only lately that I have become alive to the inconsistency of contending against the poison of our country, and at the same time helping to support those who supply it often in a more dangerous way than do acknowledged public-houses.

I find that several I have spoken to seem as unaware of this inconsistency (or mistake) as I was, and who own, on reflection, that their grocers do hold a licence for the sale of intoxicants; but where can you find a grocer who doesn't? and truly they may well ask the question.

Grocers consider themselves forced by the drinking majority to deal in wine and spirits, &c.; all the large stores do it, and where, I ask, are the few who do not?

The Bristol "British Women" have, I understand, taken a most practical step in publishing a list of all grocers in that city who do not sell intoxicants. This might not be possible in London, but I feel sure some of your readers more skilled in practical temperance work than I am will be able to suggest a plan by which abstainers may "liberate their souls" in this matter.—Yours faithfully,

Southend. ANDREW JOHNSTON.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The next annual "Islington Clerical Meeting" is to be held on Tuesday, January 14, 1890, at the Memorial Hall, Islington.

Three undergraduates at Cambridge have volunteered to accompany Mr. Douglas Hooper, of the Church Missionary Society, on his return to his work in East Africa in January next.

Bishop Ryle, in the course of an address at the opening of St. James's Mission-hall, Windsor-street, Liverpool, the other day, speaking of the immense value of mission-rooms, said he did not believe there was any better plan for getting hold of their brethren among the working people. In the matter of mission-rooms, he thanked God for the great advance which had been made upon the times of our forefathers, when people would have been shocked, and the cry would have gone up that the Church was in danger if a layman or a laywoman had come forward to preach the Gospel. It was not from the laity coming forward or from ladies undertaking to preach or speak that the Church was in danger; the danger was in going back to the old principles laid aside by our reforming forefathers.

SALVATION ARMY.

Two great meetings were held in the City Hall, Glasgow, on Sunday afternoon and evening, led by Colonel McKie, who has succeeded Major Adams at the Glasgow headquarters.

The other day the serenity of proceedings in the Sydney Assembly was disturbed by the apparition of a member in the full regimentals of the Salvation Army. The Army had converted the hon. member, who was thereupon appointed to a command, and he bravely resolved that he would not lay aside his uniform to discharge the duties of his secular office. There were some protesting cries, of which Mr. Speaker took no notice, and the Salvation Army will continue to have its uniformed representative in the Parliament hall.

BAPTIST.

Rev. J. E. Shephard has been delivering a series of discourses on John's Epistles, in John-street Chapel, Bedford-row.

The church at Upper Holloway, N. (Rev. J. R. Wood, pastor), has a membership of 950. During the past year 100 were added to the membership, 26 being from the senior classes in the Sunday-school.

At the autumnal meetings of the Shropshire Association, at Oakengates, an address was given by Rev. W. J. Dyer, president, on "Periodical Evangelistic Services," and a committee was appointed to arrange for the holding of such services throughout the county.

On Sunday week Rev. George Harris, pastor of the old Albert Hall Church, Newport, Mon., baptized three female candidates in the Ebbw River, when about 3000 people assembled. Mr. Harris stated in his address that they could have used their baptistry, but went to the river for the sake of letting people who never frequent a place of worship have an opportunity of hearing God's Word.

Wednesday, November 6, was set apart at Westbourne Park Chapel as a "quiet day" for devotional services and meditation, conducted by the minister, Rev. Dr. Clifford. In the evening an address was given by Rev. F. B. Meyer. As a result of a powerful sermon against betting and gambling, preached by Dr. Clifford in Westbourne Park Chapel, an "Anti-Betting and Gambling Society" has been formed among the young men of the congregation, and already numbers a large roll of members.

CONGREGATIONAL.

There are, says The Canadian Independent, about one thousand Christian Chinamen connected with the Congregational churches of California and Oregon, mostly the fruit of the "Sunday-school" system, as practised in their case—one scholar to one teacher. These converts have formed a missionary society, and have sent two missionaries back to China, one a native.

Rev. H. F. Lawson, of Hackney College, commenced his ministry on Sunday week as pastor of Orange-street Church, Leicester-square, W. It was announced that the services on future Sunday evenings will be of an evangelistic character, to continue for one hour. By these means, together with week-evening entertainments, and social gatherings, it is hoped that the poorer classes of the neighbourhood may be attracted.

After an interval of nearly three years since the death of Rev. H. J. Gamble, who was pastor for thirty-four years, Rev. W. A. Blake has entered upon the pastorate of Upper Clapton Church. Mr. Blake has occupied previous pastorates at Stockport and Southport, and is well known among the churches as a successful missioner. Speaking at his recognition meeting, he said he believed in the old-fashioned Gospel of the grace of God, but it must be adapted to the throbbing present, and become a Gospel for the age.

Mr. E. Crossley, M.P., presiding at the annual meeting of the Nottingham Congregational Institute, urged that one of the first duties of the theological student is to acquire an intimate knowledge of the Scriptures, which should be the A B C of the Christian ministry. Another thing was sound doctrine. He had no sympathy whatever with the notion which was in the minds of some people, that because they happened to live in the nineteenth century they had to change the doctrines of the Bible. It was a delusion calculated to carry people down to destruction instead of lifting them up. They must hold firmer than ever to sound doctrine. There were people who wanted Christ without a doctrine, but they would not get Christ without it.

METHODIST.

A "People's Guild" has been formed in connection with the Attercliffe Wesleyan Circuit, Sheffield. It comprises branches for the organisation of all forms of Church work, including mothers' meetings, prayer-meetings, home reading circles, &c.

On Sunday Rev. Hugh Price Hughes was at Oxford. In the morning he preached in Mansfield College Chapel; in the afternoon he delivered an address to the members of the Wesley Guild; and in the evening he addressed a gathering of undergraduates on the work of the London Mission.

A great convention for the deepening of spiritual life is to be held in connection with the London Mission at City-road Chapel, from Dec. 9 to 13. Two meetings will be held daily. Revs. Mark Guy Pearse, Hugh Price Hughes, Dr. Lunn, Peter Thompson, J. H. Hopkins, and others, will take part in the subsequent meetings.

On Sunday and Monday, last week, special prayer was offered in the Wesleyan chapels all over the country on behalf of foreign missions. A special prayer-meeting was held on Monday at the Centenary Hall, Bishopsgate. The president of the Conference (Rev. C. H. Kelly) delivered an address, and prayer was offered by Mr. B. Broomhall, of the China Inland Mission, Mr. Samuel Budgett, and others.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Caroline W. Pumphrey, of Leominster, editor of The Friend of Missions, spent last Sunday and Monday in Cardiff, with the object of starting a "Missionary Helpers' Union" there. Her visit was highly appreciated and successful.

The Friends' Review says:—"Our Society may be congratulated for the gaining strength of the Young People's Associations within it." Kansas has taken the lead, and now there are several Young Friends' Fellowship Unions in different American Yearly Meetings.

It will interest many to know that the following excerpt from The Friends' Missionary Advocate applies just as fully to England as to America: "How times are changed! Ten years ago it would have been quite an event in our Church for a missionary to be sent to a distant field. Now it is of such common occurrence as hardly to cause comment outside the appointing Board."

An exceedingly interesting eight days' series of meetings closed in Gloucester on the 10th inst. Friends attended from various parts to help, and the whole work was characterised by earnestness, love, and power. The forenoon Bible-readings, conducted by Richard and Caroline Westlake, of Southampton, were specially favoured times. Four meetings, in as many places, were held daily.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Mr. Robt. Stark, the London Presbytery's lay evangelist and organising missioner, has held an eight days' mission at Aston Tyrrold. The attendance was good, and the results most encouraging.

The Presbytery of Newcastle have resolved to ask the Synod to set apart three ministers with special evangelistic gifts, whose duty it shall be to visit congregations and Presbyteries with a view to organise and further evangelistic movements.

There is no likelihood, says a contemporary, that Rev. John McNeill will conduct Sunday evening services at Exeter Hall. He was at first favourable to the project, but he now feels this would not be fair to the congregation of Regent-square Church.

Rev. A. F. Forrest, Renfield-street, U.P. Church, Glasgow, is conducting "Services for the People" every Sabbath evening. The ordinary congregation are requested to stay away and make room for the public, who crowd the church in every part. Mr. Forrest lectures on "Daniel," and is assisted by musical illustrations from a choir.

At College-park, Willesden, there is a working men's church fully equipped and self-supporting, quite unique in its kind. It was originated by the late Professor Elmslie during his ministry at Willesden, and was fostered by that congregation. Remarkable success has attended the pastorate at College-park of Rev. D. M. McIntyre, who went there straight from college. There are two hundred members, and a Sunday-school of over six hundred children. At the meeting of the London Presbytery last week, Mr. McIntyre tendered his resignation after a ministry there of three and a half years, because he took exception to Saturday evening concerts held in connection with the Temperance Society. The secular element, he thought, interfered with the spiritual growth of the church. On the motion of Dr. Donald Fraser, a committee was appointed to endeavour to adjust any difficulties that had arisen, with a view to the continuance of Mr. McIntyre at College-park.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Girls' Temperance Society, which was established only a short time ago, is doing a good work in Belfast and the neighbourhood among the upper classes.

The Ulster Female Penitentiary, which has been in existence upwards of half a century, presents a cheering report for the past year. Some months ago a work of grace began in the Home, and has gone on deepening from week to week.

The special Gospel mission commenced on Sunday week in Hermon Hall, Belfast, by Rev. R. C. Johnson, and continued every night since, has already had a most encouraging measure of success. Gospel services, in which many were truly converted, have been held by Revs. H. Moore and J. W. Parkhill, in the Methodist Church, Ballineen, co. Cork.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

In the different cities and towns of Scotland that a to be visited by Dr. Pierson, the great advocate Christian missions, energetic preparations are in pr gress; his tour will doubtless result in much blessing.

Session 1889-90 of the Protestant Institute of Scotla opened on Saturday in the Free Presbytery Ha Glasgow, when Rev. Dr. Wylie lectured on "Iri Education and proposed Popish University." Th privileges of the course are free to students of a denominations.

The members of Dingwall Free Presbytery hav received from the Presbytery of Edinburgh a reply their representations anent Dr. Marcus Dods, whic leaves them no alternative but to let the matter dro A conference on the subject, however, is to be held Inverness on December 12.

STIRRINGS IN SUSSEX.

FOR some time there has been a deepening of spiritual life at Mayfield, and an awakening over a wid district. Social meetings for prayer are increasing in number, and the hearts of believers are being drawn together. On the 9th of last month at thanksgiving service heart-stirring testimonies wer given of God's power to save and to keep, by wit nesses over a wide district—Heathfield, Horsham road, Hadlow Down, and Jarvis Brook, as well a those residing in this place.

The Sunday-school teachers connected with th church are stirred up, and the children impressible Special prayer-meetings are held in different house in the village, and great power rests on the Gospe preaching.

Much prayer is asked that the churches in th district may be baptized into one spirit, for in creased blessing on the open-air preaching in th village on Saturday nights, and for the conversion of the young men and others who there congregate I think it quite likely that I may now remain with the people among whom I have laboured fo twenty years. The considerable withdrawal o "grant" from outside sources will, it is hoped, b met by friends who are acquainted with the work A safety bicycle would be a great boon in reaching our far-lying districts. CHARLES SNELL.

Mayfield, Sussex.

PHILIPPOPOLIS.—Pastor Tonjoroff writes:—We have had a very interesting conference, composed of all the workers in South Bulgaria. Among the subjects discussed was, "The best way of the distribution of the Bible throughout Bulgaria." All the workers returned encouraged to more earnest work for the Master. We believe a new era is opening for Bulgaria. Pray for us.

ST. GILES'S MEDICAL MISSION.—Special meetings were held in the afternoon and evening of Thursday last week on the occasion of the opening of an Invalid Kitchen and Coffee Bar, which will be a great boon to the sick poor this winter. Hitherto we have longed to supply good soup and beef tea direct from the Mission to the patients in their homes, while those waiting at the dispensary to see the doctors and get their medicines can also be provided with hot soup and hot coffee and bread at the lowest possible cost; and any unable to pay one penny or half-penny will be supplied gratuitously. We were encouraged by the presence of several Christian workers, among whom were the Rev. W. Mowll, Dr. Ziemann, and Dr. Latchford, the medical superintendent, and Miss Clark. Much prayer was offered for God's continued blessing on the work. G. SAUNDERS.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes.

SUNDAY, NOV. 24.—1 Kings XXI.

Ahab coveting Naboth's vineyard (1—4).—The more we have the more we desire. He who possesses a kingdom is heavy at heart because he cannot have a plot of land for a kitchen garden. The cause of Naboth's refusal is indicated in the two points of his answer. "The Lord forbid": he was actuated by religious considerations. Canaan was, in a special sense, God's land, and no Israelite might alienate his portion of it, except under very special circumstances (Lev. xxv. 28). In addition to this, Naboth's plot was endeared to him as the inheritance of his fathers.

The murder of Naboth (5—16).—Ahab must have known that Jezebel could only give him the vineyard by foul means, and therefore he was as guilty as she was in her use of the power which he delegated to her. There could hardly be imagined a more horrible crime than this. The sanctions of religion were invoked, and a fast was instituted as if to avert some terrible judgment, caused through the special ungodliness of one of the citizens. Suspicion was directed towards Naboth, who was then assailed by suborned witnesses, and without opportunity for defence hurried away to execution. His whole family seems to have been involved in a common fate (2 Kings ix. 26). There must surely be another life in which to adjust the wrongs of time (Eccles. viii. 14).

Elijah's protest and prediction (17—29).—Like an incarnate conscience he reproached the king in words remembered long after (2 Kings ix. 25). Men sell themselves for a mess of pottage, a vineyard, a few years of sin (20, 25). The repentance of Ahab was more in dread of the penalty than in horror of his crime; yet God instantly recognised, and met it, and postponed execution. How gracious is God, and willing to reciprocate the sinner's slightest advance!

MONDAY, NOV. 25.—1 Kings XXII.

The compact between Jehoshaphat and Ahab (1—4).—It seems strange that so good a man as the king of Judah should have entered into such an alliance; but he paid dearly for it, both at this time and afterwards (2 Chron. xx. 37). We must not be "yoked together with unbelievers," lest we suffer their fate (Rev. xviii. 4).

The conflict of the prophets (5—28).—It is a good thing to ask counsel of God before entering upon a new expedition; but it is not always easy or naturally pleasant to submit one's judgment and behaviour absolutely to his reply. The false prophets fell in with Ahab's inclination, and advised the war, doing so in the name of Jehovah. Ramoth was one of the cities of refuge in the land of Gad, across the Jordan. Jehoshaphat was not satisfied. There was something deficient in their asseverations and horns of iron. The ear of the child of God can detect his Father's voice, and nothing can compensate for its silence. Wicked men hate the good, because they cannot speak good of them (8). But they forget that the prediction is not the cause of the evil. The map does not make the sunken rock in the vessel's course, but indicates it, that the crew may turn aside and be saved. Sin brings disaster, of which God apprises men. The address of Micaiah is not a representation of things done in the heavens, but a parable, or figurative mode of expression. God cannot be tempted of evil, nor does He tempt any man (James i. 13). But He permits men to be tempted, and He overrules the working of Satan for the execution of his own purposes. Micaiah adopted an ironical method of speech, which at least suggested to the king how his prophets might claim to be God-inspired, and yet be deceiving him. How many Micaiahs have there been in every age, who have stood up for truth, at the cost of all (27).

The battle, and Ahab's death (29—40).—The predictions of Micaiah had shaken Ahab, and he thought to evade their fulfilment by disguise, exposing his friend to danger. Jehoshaphat cried to God (32, and 2 Chron. xviii. 31). The arrow's flight was directed by God to execute his purpose. Our disguises cannot evade God's eye. And all our wealth will not avail to ransom our soul from death (39).

Jehoshaphat's good reign. (41—50).—Further details are given in 2 Chron. xvii., xviii., xix., xx. There was an evident effort to rid the land of the more obvious evils which had disgraced it. And God gave him rest, and victory, and prosperity. The great defect of his character was the ease with which he associated himself with the kings of Israel, which wrought evil in his house (2 Kings xi.).

TUESDAY, NOV. 26.—2 Kings I.

Ahaziah's sickness was caused by a fall through a defective lattice or fence work, which surrounded the upper storeys of his house; either around the flat roof without, or enclosing one of the galleries which looked down on the open court of the palace within. There was a special instruction about this (Deut. xxii. 8). We should be careful of our battlements, to see that they are in good repair, and we should build them in all threatened places. The habit of abstinence from strong drink is one piece of lattice work, which in these days we should very carefully maintain. If we do not fall for want of it, others may. All good habits are strong battlements.

His mission to Baal.—To reach Ekron the messengers had to pass Jerusalem. What a direct insult to Jehovah! In the interests of the people, who were under the Divine government, it could not be passed over in silence. The fire from heaven was the revelation of God's wrath against the ungodliness and unrighteousness of man (Rom. i. 18). It was a sign to Israel, as the destruction of Sodom to its age. The successive fifties were consumed, because they evidently partook in the impiety of the king. Notice the arrogant bearing and speech of the captains. But as soon as there was one captain of a different temper, the judgment stayed (13). Our Lord distinctly forbade his disciples attempting to imitate this episode. We belong to another dispensation, which savours of forbearance and grace (Luke ix. 54).

Elijah, who had before dreaded the royal court, and fled from it, seems to have lost all fear, and goes boldly to the bedside of the dying monarch, raised on an alcove in the side of the room, and he returns unscathed, being defended by the gracious care of God (Ps. xxvii. 1—3).

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 27.—2 Kings II.

The sons of the prophets.—From the days of Samuel there were schools or colleges in which young men were trained for the office of teachers and prophets throughout the land. They were instructed in the law, and the principles of religion, and cultivated the art of sacred psalmody (1 Sam. x. 5, &c.). The greatest prophets were not always selected from their ranks. Elijah, notably, was not. But they seem to have given them the benefit of their tutelage. These young men had been made aware of the approaching rapture of their venerated leader. Elisha was also aware of it.

The test of Elisha.—Before we can be entrusted with some great spiritual blessing, we have to submit to inevitable trials to prove the tenacity of our faith, the irrevocable choice of our souls. At Gilgal, Bethel, and Jericho, Elisha was dissuaded from coming on. And if he had yielded to indolence, or love of ease, at any of these stages, he would have missed the crowning blessing of his life. He that is faithful in a little shall be accounted worthy of much. He had learnt from the lips of Elijah to speak and think much of the living Lord (2, 4, 6).

Elijah's last journey (8—17).—Rivers part before men who believe in the living God. The Spirit of God can work through a flimsy cloak, as well as by an outstretched rod. The double portion is the heritage of the eldest son, and heir. Its reception in this case depends on that spiritual affinity which could behold the movements of the spiritual world. To none but the purged eyes of faith would that radiant vision have been evident. To see it was a proof of the spiritual temper of Elisha's faith; and the parted river witnessed the acquisition of his master's power. That same Spirit is for us. This is the meaning of Pentecost (Acts ii. 39).

Elisha's ministry was sweet, beneficent, gentle. The healing of the waters at Jericho was specially significant. But there was judgment also, as his "strange work." We must not think of these children (23) as boys and girls. The same word is used of Joseph at 39, and of Rehoboam at 40. They were probably young men connected with the false idolatry, which had its seat in Bethel.

THURSDAY, NOV. 28.—2 Kings III.

Jehoram's reign (1—3) was marked by some measures of reform. He discountenanced the Baal worship, though he clave to Jeroboam's calves.

The revolt of Moab (4, &c.) was very serious, as the tribute had been large. It was a great mistake on the part of Jehoshaphat again to ally himself with the house of Ahab. It would have been well to have inquired of the Lord before he started. We so often rush into engagements without previous prayer, and begin to seek God only when we encounter disappointment. In the day of their trouble the kings sought his help. But it was very absurd to charge the Lord with their disasters (10). The references to the Lord on the part of each of these kings are very significant of their respective characters. To pour water on (11) the hands of another is to act as his servant.

Elisha's advice.—He quotes the very words of Elijah (14, and 1 Kings xvii. 1). He recognises the presence of Jehoshaphat as a reason for clemency. The influence of music calms his agitation, and predisposes him for the Divine communications. How often we have to make preparations for the advent of Divine blessing, long before we see any signs of the blessing itself. Our expectant faith is the valley full of ditches, and God is able to do exceeding abundantly above all. The answer came at the hour of morning prayer, and probably in answer to the prophet's intercession (1 Kings viii. 44). Prayer is successful when joined with the offering of our great High Priest. God's movements are often so still and quiet that they can give no outward or visible sign, "neither wind nor rain"; yet our prayers are answered to the full. There are interesting corroborations of many points in this narrative, specially of ver. 27, in recent explorations in the Land of Moab.

FRIDAY, NOV. 29.—2 Kings IV.

The widow's oil (1—7).—God cares for the poor. How much they miss who do not go to Him about their temporal wants. "He is the God of the widow." The oil went on pouring so long as there were vessels. If only there had been more expectancy and a larger number of vessels, there would have been a more plentiful supply. So is it with all spiritual blessing; it will continue as long as we keep applying for it. According to our faith, so will it be done.

The Shunammite's son (8—37).—A real man of God needs but little for the supply of his wants (10, and Phil. iv. 12). Sunstroke was a common cause of death (Ps. cxxi. 8). So sure was the mother in the life-giving power of the prophet that she needed not to tell her husband of the lad's death. Why should she grieve him, when the child would soon be again in health (Heb. xi. 35)? She felt convinced that God could not mock her, and that, when He gave, it would be a gift worthy of Himself (28). How often we put the staff of doctrine and precept on the face of our beloved and unconverted children, without result. In the home and school there must be a definite contact between soul and soul, as between the body of the prophet and that of the child. Walk your house in intercessory prayer, and persevere even until seven times (35).

The pottage and the loaves of barley (38—44).—Miracles of beneficence and healing were akin to Elisha's gentle spirit. Is not this also the province of the Gospel, to counterwork the ancient curse of the ground, to meet the hunger of men? The blessing of God will turn an evil into a blessing (Mark xvi. 18), and will multiply a little to feed many (Ps. cxxxii. 15).

SATURDAY, NOV. 30.—2 Kings V.

Naaman had everything that this world could give, with one sad exception—health. "But he was a leper." There is more evenness in our earthly lot than any of us realise. In the wealthiest lives there is almost always some "but" of sorrow. In the poorest there are often well-springs of blessedness.

The little maid sought the peace of the home to which she was carried captive (Jer. xxix. 7). Where she found herself, therein she abode with God (1 Cor. vii. 21—23). What a blessing a godly servant, though but a little maid, may be to a home!

The journey to Israel was undertaken under the impression that healing might be obtained by influence and wealth. The imperious soldier had to learn to receive it as a gift into a humbled, obedient, and believing spirit. Our physical health and other blessings may depend on the state of our hearts much more largely than we sometimes realise. "I thought": how many notions we form of the way in which God will save us; and generally the blessing comes as we never expected. It is a mistake to lay down any conditions as to God's advent to the soul. How fond we all are of doing "some great thing" to secure our salvation (13)! The sevenfold dipping in the Jordan may fitly symbolise the perfect washing in the cleansing blood of Christ (Zech. xiii. 1). We may be young again. The pure flesh of a little child, united with the manly strength of the warrior (14). Naaman's bowing in the house of Rimmon may have been condoned under special circumstances which we cannot fully estimate; but it is no precedent for us.

Gehazi's privilege as the prophet's servant aggravated his sin. What a contrast to the earnestness of the new Gentile convert (Matt. viii. 11; Luke iv. 27).

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, December 1.

THE TEMPLE DEDICATED.—1 KINGS viii. 54—63.

GOLDEN TEXT: HAB. ii. 20.

IN the fourth year of Solomon's reign, and in the second month, Zif (vi. 1), corresponding to our May, the building of the Temple began, and was completed in the eleventh year, and the eighth month, Bul, corresponding to our October and November. It occupied seven and a half years in building.

Its site was Mount Moriah, supposed by some to have been the scene of Abraham's sacrifice of Isaac (Gen. xxii.). It was also the place where David's sacrifice had been accepted by God, after the three days' pestilence (1 Chron. xxii. 1). Two such incidents made it an appropriate site for the Temple of God.

It was a most costly building. The materials which David had prepared for it, as described in 1 Chron. xxii. 14, xxix. 1—7, included 500 tons of gold, 1000 tons of silver, 1100 tons of brass, and 6000 tons of iron, used probably for tools.—James Sime. The interior was of cedar wood, overlaid with pure gold, not beaten out into leaf, but laid on in plates, estimated to have been, in the Holy of Holies, one-eighth of an inch thick.

The number of workmen employed in the building (v. 13—16) was 150,000 labourers; 30,000 Israelites; and 3000 overseers; besides the men supplied by Hiram, king of Tyre, who were skilled in hewing timber (v. 6); and Hiram, a skilled workman in brass (vii. 13, 14), by whom the two pillars were made. The costliest material and the best workmanship were needed for the house of God. We should always give Him our best. He withheld not his best gift from us—his only begotten Son.

There were two courts (2 Chron. xxxiii. 5); the first, for the people; and the second, on a higher level, for the priests. The Temple building—allowing 18 inches to a cubit—was 90 feet long, 30 feet wide, and 45 feet high. But the porch at the front, and the chambers at the sides and back of the building, increased the length to 120 feet; and the width to 60 feet. The interior was divided into the Holy Place—60 feet long; and the Most Holy Place—called the oracle (viii. 6—8)—30 feet long. In this stood the Ark of the Testimony, the Mercy Seat with Cherubim, whose wings stretched from side toside. Here too, between the wings of the Cherubim, God dwelt in Shekinah glory (Ps. lxxx. 1).

To the Dedication Service, not only the heads of the people, but "all the men of Israel" came together (viii. 1, 2). On such an occasion all who could would be present. See the description in verses 3—11. The grandest part of the ceremony was that in which God testified his acceptance of the building. The Tabernacle, with God upon the Mercy Seat, would have been more glorious than the gorgeous Temple without Him.

Our lesson begins just as Solomon has closed his beautiful and comprehensive dedicatory prayer. It was an appropriate method of dedicating what was to be "a house of prayer" (Matt. xxi. 13).

Ver. 54.—Solomon's prayer had been offered "before the altar." The sacrifice offered there secures the acceptance of our prayers. Because Jesus has made atonement for our sins, therefore He is "the way...; no man cometh to the Father but by" Him. The attitude in which Solomon prayed was "kneeling," with hands outspread toward heaven. It was most appropriate, expressing deepest reverence and submission, and most earnest and fervent appeal. The bodily attitude is not everything in prayer. That may be right when the spirit is wrong. But we may be sure that where the spirit is right the attitude of the body will be appropriate.

Ver. 55—61.—"Solomon blessed" the people. He did this when he rose from his knees. No man obtains power to bless others except by similar waiting upon God. Yet his first utterance in blessing the people was, "Blessed be the Lord" (56). There is no way of blessing for ourselves except in recognising gratefully and trustfully God's right to our praise. As we delight in blessing God, He delights in blessing us. The people are exhorted to bless God for his faithfulness (56). It is impossible to remember that without ourselves being blessed. If He is faithful in fulfilling his promises, we are blessed in having the experience of their fulfilment. They were to be further blessed by God's abiding presence (57, 58); by his continual care over them (59); and by making them a witness to other nations (60). While this is the object for which we seek blessing God will not withhold it. Let the aim of our life be to make his name known to others. The health and prosperity of our own life depends upon this. Yet these blessings were not to be theirs without any condition on their part (61). Let them not live upon the enthusiasm of that wonderful service. The spirit of obedience was necessary to continued prosperity. A second descent of fire from heaven (2 Chron. vii. 1—3) followed this benediction.

Ver. 62, 63 record the sacrifices in which the grateful praise of Solomon and the people found expression.

The Temple was a type, first, of the body of Jesus (John ii. 21); then of the whole Church of Christ (Eph. ii. 20—22); and of each believer (1 Cor. iii., 10—16).

We may dedicate our bodies as his temples. Begin by recognising that we are his—by creation, and by purchase (1 Cor. vi. 19, 20), then freely give all to Him (Rom. vi. 13, 19).

What we surrender He will accept (Rom. xii. 1; John xiv. 23; Rev. iii. 20). To have God dwelling in us by his Spirit is possible even to the feeblest believer. "Is your God a great God, or a little God?" sneeringly asked a sceptic of a little boy. "He is both, sir," answered the boy. "He is so great, that the heaven of heavens cannot contain Him; and so little that He can dwell in my heart."

A Convention in New York.

THE "'Florence' Night Mission" in New York was recently the scene of an unusual gathering. A four days' Holiness Convention was held. About one hundred professed conversion, or the reception of a baptism of the Spirit for service. The convention was addressed by Mrs. Palmer, now in her eighty-fourth year, still bright and active in work. As she took her place, about twenty-five girls who were recently among the fallen sang a song of welcome. Rev. Dr. Wilson, of St. George's Episcopal Church, gave an admirable address on "Righteousness." Many ministers and evangelists were present. Nothing like it has been seen in such a neighbourhood before.

There is a great desire manifesting itself in New York for power from God.

WILLIAM PECK SMITH.

MADEIRA.

REV. J. LAWSON FORFEITT, F.R.G.S., writing from Funchal, Madeira, en route for the Congo, calls attention to the excellent work carried on in Funchal by Mr. W. G. Smart. Steamers and other vessels arriving here are visited by Mr. Smart, who distributes tracts and Scripture portions in many different languages to the seamen, and also invites them to the Sailors' Rest on shore, with reading-room and library, where refreshments can be obtained at moderate prices. This proves a most valuable counter-attraction to the many drink-shops, and is a great boon to our sailors in a strange land. Mr. Smart is also agent for the British and Foreign Bible Society, and has a depôt which is in charge of a Christian native young man, under Mr. Smart's superintendence.

Mrs. Smart has a Protestant mission school for poor Portuguese children, an institution greatly needed here, where the Roman Catholic priests have so much influence, which is directed towards keeping the people in ignorance of the Word of God.

Mr. and Mrs. Smart have a large, well-appointed house (183, Rua dos Ferreiros), and receive Christian workers and others seeking rest and change. I can speak of it as a real "home from home," having much enjoyed a short stay here while waiting for a steamer to take our party to the Congo.

IN MEMORY OF WILLIAM BURNS.

BY H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

As gazed the prophet on the ascending car,
Swept by its fiery steeds away and far,
So, with the burning tear and flashing eye,
I trace thy glorious pathway to the sky.
Lone like the Tishbite, as the Baptist bold,
Cast in a rare and apostolic mould;
Earnest, unselfish, consecrated, true,
With nothing but the noblest end in view;
Choosing to toil in distant fields unsown,
Contented to be poor, and little known,
Faithful to death. O man of God, well done!
Thy fight is ended, and thy crown is won.

God shall have all the glory! Only Grace
Made thee to differ. Let us man abase!
With deep, emphatic tone thy dying word,
Thy last, was this—"Thine is the kingdom, Lord,
The power, and glory!" Thus the final flame
Of the burnt-offering to Jehovah's name
Ascended from the altar! Life thus given
To God, must have its secret springs in heaven.

O WILLIAM BURNS! we will not call thee dead,
Though lies thy body in its narrow bed
In far-off China. Though Manchuria keeps
Thy dust, which in the Lord securely sleeps,
Thy spirit lives with Jesus; and where He,
Thy Master, dwells, 'tis meet that thou shouldst be.
There is no death in his Divine embrace!
There is no life but where they see his face!

And now, Lord, let thy servant's mantle fall
Upon another! Since thy solemn call
To preach the truth in China has been heard,
Grant that a double portion be conferred
Of the same spirit on the gentler head
Of some Elisha, who may raise the dead,
And fill the widow's cruse, and heal the spring
And make the desolate of heart to sing;
And stand, though feeble, fearless, since he knows
Thy host angelic guards him from his foes;
Whose life an image fairer still might be
Of Christ of Nazareth and Galilee—
Of thine, O spotless Lamb of Calvary!

China, I breathe for thee a brother's prayer:
Unnumbered are thy millions. Father, hear
The groans we cannot! Oh, thine arm make bare,
And reap thy harvest of salvation there.
The fulness of the Gentiles, like a sea
Immense, O God, be gathered unto Thee!
Then Israel save; and with his saintly train,
Send us Immanuel over all to reign!

OPIUM SMOKING.

DR. EDKINS, of Peking, now in the Chinese Customs Service, has prepared a pamphlet on "The Poppy in China," which has been published in English and Chinese by order of the Inspector-General of Customs, and of which copies are now to be had in this country from Messrs. P. S. King & Son, Canada-buildings, King-street, Westminster. It is chiefly occupied with the history of the poppy from the eighth century, when it began to be known in China as a valuable plant for medicinal purposes. The poppy extract continued to be known exclusively as a medicine in the Chinese Materia Medica till early in the eighteenth century. At this period, we are told, tobacco was introduced from the Philippine Islands and Java, and, by degrees, those who smoked tobacco began to mix opium with it, which led to the smoking of opium by itself for the purpose of sensual indulgence.

Alas! all the prohibitory edicts failed to arrest the progress of the opium vice, and this "Historical Note" by Dr. Edkins forms but the prelude to the fearful devastation of the opium plague in the nineteenth century.

COASTGUARDS.—For some years past the work of corresponding with and supplying Gospel papers regularly to coastguards serving in Ireland has been carried on with manifest blessing. It is desired to extend the work in this special branch of the navy throughout England; will some Christian lady or gentleman willing to act as hon. sec. communicate either with Miss A. E. Weston, Sailors' Rest, Devonport; or Wm. A. Garratt, Blackrock, co. Dublin?

DOCK LABOURERS & FACTORY GIRLS.

In various ways the North-East London Gospel Mission seeks to minister spiritually and practically amongst the suffering poor. The well-appointed Halls at Bow Common, Cubitt Town, and Millwall are centres of blessed activity, reaching most largely Factory Girls and Dock Labourers, amongst whom the direst moral and temporal need is found. There are eight Gospel Halls and two country Homes for the ailing poor.

Contributions would be gratefully received.

35, FITZWILLIAM STREET, DUBLIN.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

Established 1822.

FOR the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible throughout Ireland. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities as City Missionaries, and visit all denominations, where permitted. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES—27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN; and 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE.

NOTE.—Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

ANTI-INFIDEL TRACT ENTERPRISE.

ESTABLISHED 1880.

OBJECT.—The gratuitous distribution of Anti-Infidel Literature among the masses at HOME and ABROAD.

PATRONS.—REV. A. R. FAUSSET, M.A., D.D., Canon and Prebendary of York, Rector of St. Cuthbert's, Heworth York; REV. T. FRANCIS FERGIE, B.D., Honorary Canon of Liverpool, Vicar of Ince; REV. GEORGE LITTING, M.A., LL.B., Head Master, Grammar School, Stevenage; R. CORY, Esq., J.P., Cardiff; J. GARNETT, Esq., J.P., Bromley Cross.

URGENT APPEAL. £200 NEEDED.

TO CLOSE THE YEAR FREE OF DEBT.

We have given to missionaries at home and abroad, and to working men and others employed in ironworks, collieries, dockyards, and on the railway, over TWELVE HUNDRED FREE grants of our ANTI-INFIDEL LITERATURE, varying from Five Shillings to £15 in value, but for want of means we are quite unable to continue these distributions, notwithstanding the fact that we are receiving daily applications for free grants. Therefore, unless the necessary aid is forthcoming, the FREE GRANTS will have to be ENTIRELY SUSPENDED.

All subscribers of five shillings and upwards receive a half-price grant of assorted anti-infidel publications, in return for their subscriptions, or, if preferred, packets will be forwarded to any person in the United Kingdom, on receipt of order and remittance. A good plan is to have these tracts distributed where INFIDEL MEETINGS are being held. Donors who can see their way to a promise of an annual subscription will be aiding a work more necessary in this age than any that has preceded it, and those who can only afford a single donation may yet help in proportion to their means.

Any contributions in aid of the ANTI-INFIDEL TRACT ENTERPRISE, will be most gratefully received and acknowledged by the Rev. T. A. Clarke, Treasurer, The Vicarage, Rumworth, Bolton, or by W. R. BRADLAUGH, 70, King's Cross-road, London, W.C. Sample packet post free on application.

Personalia.

The late Lady Kinnaird.—Dr. Donald Fraser is preparing a memoir of this lady at the request of the family.

Mr. C. H. Spurgeon left London for the South of France on Monday morning. He expects to be away about two months.

Rev. Dr. Cunningham Geikie preached his farewell sermons as vicar of St. Martin-at-Palace, Norwich, on Sunday week. He is leaving Norwich to become a resident of Bournemouth, where he will devote himself entirely to literary work.

The late Dr. Somerville.—At the request of the family, Dr. George Smith, of Edinburgh, has undertaken to prepare a memoir of the late Dr. A. N. Somerville. Possessors of letters from Dr. Somerville will do a service by lending them to Mr. A. Somerville, 34, Granby-terrace, Hillhead, Glasgow, who will return them in due time.

Mr. J. W. Wilson, late of Redruth, Cornwall, has arrived at Melbourne, Australia, with his devoted wife. Blessing was experienced in evangelistic work amongst the passengers on the voyage out. Calling at Adelaide, he saw Rev. George Rowe, Wesleyan minister, formerly a Sunday scholar under his own care at Redruth. Mrs. Trostrail, an old worker among the Cornish miners, welcomed him at Melbourne. Mr. Wilson hopes to respond to calls for Christian work in Australia. His address is Belmont, Errol-street, Hotham, Melbourne.

Rev. Dr. Ashmore is one of the ablest advocates of foreign missions in America. The best years of his life have been spent in China, and upon matters relating to that country he is a recognised authority. For some time past he has been rousing missionary enthusiasm in the Baptist churches, associations, conventions, and seminaries. It is now reported that Dr. Ashmore will once more leave America with a large party of missionaries, who sail before long for Japan and China.

Rev. S. A. Selwyn, vicar of St. James's, Hatcham, sails next week for West Africa, where he goes for six months, to undertake special missionary work in connection with the C.M.S. Mr. Selwyn is making this departure as an experimental step, in the hope that God may prove to him that he is fitted for a missionary career, in which event he would resign his living, and surrender himself entirely to work abroad. Such an event, remarks The Rock, is a noticeable one, and we trust he may have many imitators.

Rev. T. Connellan, ex-Roman Catholic Priest, whose portrait recently appeared in our columns, is at present resident at Riverside, Geevagh, Carrick-on-Shannon. Some of his late co-religionists are not disposed to allow him peaceably to hold to his convictions; but, notwithstanding this, he has received much encouragement in his evangelistic endeavours. Already a few Roman Catholics have been won to the simple Gospel of Christ, and will, it is hoped, soon openly declare themselves as his followers. We trust our readers will remember Mr. Connellan in their prayers. A word of cheer from other earnest witnesses for Christ would doubtless be very welcome to him.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The temperance party of Glasgow is much encouraged by the result of the municipal elections.

There are in Ireland in connection with the Methodist Church 229 Bands of Hope, with 25,880 members, being an increase for the year of 3044 members.

The winter meetings at Lambeth Baths were commenced on Saturday last. There was a large gathering, and an attractive musical programme in addition to the temperance advocacy.

We would remind the ministers and members of the Nonconformist churches that November 24 is Nonconformist Temperance Sunday. We hope in all Nonconformist places of worship and Sunday-schools it will be heartily observed.

Rev. William Paterson, of Newcastleton, Roxburgh, who has undertaken a special temperance mission to the children attending Board schools, has achieved some success in his efforts in the schools of Blantyre and Cambuslang. Some nine hundred hitherto unpledged scholars have joined the ranks of the abstainers.

The Homerton Book Distribution Society, 87, Wick-road, South Hackney, London, N.E. (Mr. T. W. Westcote, hon. sec.), would be extremely grateful to receive back numbers of THE CHRISTIAN or similar periodicals, to be distributed from week to week among people who cannot afford to buy any literature themselves, in the neighbourhood of Homerton.

DONATIONS RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1889.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

Drink CADBURY'S COCOA

"It is Absolutely PURE."

CADBURY'S COCOA is closely allied to milk in the large proportion of flesh-forming and strength-sustaining elements that it contains. It is prepared on the principle of excluding the superabundance of fatty indigestible matter with which cocoa abounds—supplying a refined thin infusion of absolutely pure cocoa, exhilarating and refreshing, for Breakfast, Luncheon, Tea, or Supper—giving staying power and imparting new life and vigour to growing Children, and those of delicate constitutions.

A few of the many Good Reasons why CADBURY'S COCOA enjoys such world-wide popularity.

It is guaranteed to be Pure Cocoa.
It is made instantly with Boiling Milk or Water.
It is not reduced in value by the addition of Starch, Sugar, &c.
It is specially rich in flesh-forming and strength-sustaining principles.
It contains all the delicious aroma of the Natural Article, without the excessive proportions of fat.
It is delicious, nutritious, digestible, comforting, and a refined beverage suitable for all seasons of the year.
It is a gentle stimulant, and sustains against hunger and bodily fatigue.
In the whole process of manufacturing Cadbury's Pure Cocoa, the automatic machinery employed obviates the necessity for its being once touched by the human hand.

MORLEY HOME,

For Worn-out Governesses, Needlewomen and Servants,

25, CHATHAM PLACE, HACKNEY.

ELIZABETH COALES, gratefully thanking the kind friends who for SO MANY YEARS have helped her in her work, earnestly hopes they will still remember her aged family. In view of the distress always at this season of the year in the East of London, she never asks without a cause; but now there are heavy and unavoidable claims to be met before the close of the year, which render this appeal necessary. Again would she like to mention Matthew xxv. 40.

ADDRESSES BY D. L. MOODY.

DELIVERED IN ENGLAND.

Revised by Himself.

Tinted cover, 1s.; Limp cloth, 1s. 6d.; Cloth boards, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

"In what is said there is nothing that can be described as absolutely new; but seldom has it been said with aught like the same force, fervour, and urgency. The intense earnestness of the man communicates a certain glow and energy to his language, which serve to make it arrest and enchain."—Edinburgh Daily Review.

A Devoted Life.

BY REV. JOHN MACPHERSON,

Author of "Henry Moorhouse, the English Evangelist"; "Duncan Matheson, the Scottish Evangelist"; "The Christian Hero, Memoir of Robert Annan"; "Revival and Revival Work"; &c., &c.

With Mezzotype Portrait.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"With refined tastes and exquisite sensibilities, with a fascinating presence and a gracious winsomeness of manner that would have made her a favourite in fine society, she preferred for Christ's sake to mingle with the poor, and be as one of them. Rather than cut a figure in high quarters, she would be 'oor freen, Eesabell,' in the slums. Vanity in every form she abhorred."—EXTRACT FROM PAGE 190.

DUNCAN MATHESON:

THE SCOTTISH EVANGELIST. His Life and Labours. With life-like Portrait. Tinted covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"The life of a real man, consecrated in life and full of zeal for the Lord. This biography will not only interest, but benefit a wide circle of readers. We had the happiness of frequent correspondence with Duncan Matheson, and valued him as a successful soul-winner. We are right glad to see so worthy a memorial of so worthy a man."—The Sword and Trowel.

HENRY MOORHOUSE:

THE ENGLISH EVANGELIST. With life-like Portrait. Tinted covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth gilt, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"Full of interesting incidents from which counsel and encouragement may be gathered. We heartily commend this record of simple unaffected piety to the attention of those who would know what may be done by workers somewhat off the ordinary recognised lines."—The Rock.

ROBERT ANNAN:

THE CHRISTIAN HERO. Tinted covers, 6d.; Cloth neat, 1s.

Superior Edition. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"A striking example of the power of divine grace exhibited in the conversion and devoted life of Robert Annan—a Christian Hero indeed."—Gospel Magazine.

CHRIST LIFTED UP. SECOND THOUSAND.

By Rev. ROBERT GILCHRIST, of Shotts. Tinted covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"Right well has the Author done his work in this charming book. In the first part he exhibits 'CHRIST LIFTED UP' on the cross; and deals in an inexpressibly sweet and tender manner with the words and spirit of Jesus while nailed to the tree. In the second part, Christ risen from the dead, and exalted to the right hand of the throne of God, is evidently set forth before our eyes. In both sections there is much sound exposition; and the book from beginning to end sparkles with fresh, and beautiful, and inspiring thoughts."
Primitive Methodist New Connexion Magazine.

SCRIPTURAL HOLINESS NOT SINLESS PERFECTION.

By Rev. CHARLES GRAHAM, of Shepherd's Bush. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"With considerable skill and sagacity Mr. Graham has proved his title, and wheeled away much fanatical rubbish. Anything that will promote true holiness has all our heart."—The Sword and Trowel.

GEORGE WHITEFIELD.

CLARKE'S "PYRAMID" NURSERY LAMP FOOD WARMERS.

With New Registered Pannikin.

BY their peculiar construction—the glass chimney conducting and concentrating heat to the bottom of the water vessel—they give a larger amount of light and heat than can be obtained in any other lamp of the same class. Without smoke or smell.

Clarke's New Registered Pannikin.

By this invention any liquid food can be poured out or drunk without scum or grease passing through the spout, and prevents spilling when poured into a feeding bottle, so unavoidable with all other Pannikins. The Pannikins will fit all the old "Pyramid" Nursery Lamps, and can be purchased separately.

Clarke's "Pyramid" Night Lights and "Fairy Pyramid" Night Lights

Are the best in the world, and the only suitable ones for burning in the above, and for lighting passages, lobbies, &c. Sold everywhere.

Price of Lamps, 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 5s., and 6s. each. If any difficulty in obtaining them, write to CLARKE'S "PYRAMID" AND "FAIRY" LIGHT COMPANY, LIMITED, Cricklewood, London, N.W., for nearest Agent's address.

NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

PULVERMACHER'S WORLD-FAMED GALVANIC BELTS, for the cure of NERVOUS DISEASES, have received Testimonials from three Physicians to Her Majesty the Queen and the leading Physicians of Nine London Hospitals, including Forty Members of the Royal College of Physicians of London.

The distressing symptoms of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION, Loss of MUSCULAR POWER, RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA, PARALYSIS, EPILEPSY, &c., are speedily removed by means of Pulvermacher's World-famed Galvanic Belts, which convey the electric current direct to the affected parts, gradually stimulating and strengthening all the nerves and muscles, and speedily arresting all symptoms of premature waste and decay.

Dr. C. HANDFIELD JONES, F.R.C.P., F.R.S., Physician to St. Mary's Hospital, says: "I am satisfied that Mr. PULVERMACHER is an honest and earnest labourer in the field of science, and I think he deserves to meet with every encouragement from the profession and scientific men."

Dr. H. A. ALLBUTT, M.R.C.P., 24, Park Square, Leeds, writes, October, 1888: "I always recommend with confidence Mr. PULVERMACHER'S BELTS. Ladies recovering from illness incidental to their sex will find these BELTS of vast assistance in restoring lost nerve power."

ADVANCED CASE of CONSUMPTION. A YOUTH at STOURBRIDGE.

"I applied to you some two years ago; my son being (according to the medical report) in an advanced stage of Consumption; in a few weeks he was wonderfully improved, which continued till he got nearly well, and since then he has gradually become strong."

Such is the testimony of a recent letter from Mr. B. FIDDIAN, of Albion Works, Longlands, STOURBRIDGE.

On referring to the original statement of this case, as forwarded to me by his father when applying for medicine, I find the history of the case as follows: "Illness had arisen from cold after bathing, followed by cough, blood spitting, periodic dyspnœa, pain in the side, flushing, and night sweats, loss of appetite and strength, and general wasting of body."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

BEETHAM'S Glycerine & Cucumber.

Is the most perfect emollient milk for preserving and softening the skin ever produced! It soon renders it soft, smooth, and white; entirely removes and prevents all roughness, redness, sunburn, tan, &c., and preserves the skin from the effects of the sun, wind, or hard water, more effectually than any other preparation. No lady who values her complexion should ever be without it, as it is invaluable at all seasons for keeping the skin soft and healthy.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR

That BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR possesses very valuable qualities as a food for all classes, at all periods of life except earliest infancy, has been attested by eminent dietetic authorities, as well as by universal public experience during over thirty years.

Interested attempts to set aside these facts in favour of other foods only appeal to ignorance and prejudice, and it remains true that no other kind of food can serve the special purposes of Corn Flour.

This Leaf addressed to Christians, Friends regarding Prayer and Tracts, referred to in advertisement of November 1, in this spot.

BRITISH & FOREIGN EVANGELICAL TRACT SOC. & PRAYER UNION

If you distribute tracts, the Committee invite you to apply as follows:—

1.—State how many tracts are desired, for your personal distribution only, for one month. The tracts are selected with a view to the simplicity and value of the message they bear—God's great plan of salvation through a crucified and risen Saviour—and care is taken to secure an ever-changing variety and assortment.

2.—Enclose (if able) a freewill offering towards the expenses. This is necessary but let it be as "unto the Lord." If you are able, let your abundance be a supply for another's lack. In any case, if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to what a man hath, and not according to that he hath not.

3.—Address your application to the Superintendent, SAMUEL E. ROBERTS, 48, Malvern-road, Kilburn, N.W., and enclose Postal Order, payable at the Post Office, Cambridge-road, Kilburn.

The Spezia Mission FOR Italy and the Levant.

THE remarkable growth of this Mission in the face of difficulties so formidable, has inspired its united Friends to give greater publicity to its efforts to permanently benefit the Italian people. The great thankfulness of many in Italy for the blessings received is felt to be an encouragement to the Friends of the Mission to unite in earnest prayer for a large measure of the Holy Spirit to be imparted to those who superintend the Mission; to its varied and numerous agents; as also to those who contribute of their substance for its support and growth; that their willingness and ability may be equal to the Mission's needs.

Real compassion and tenderness of soul for the perishing has always, and will always, open the heart and hand.

"Italy for Christ" should be the aspiration of thoughtful, earnest Christians. It is proposed, from November 24 until December 1, inclusive, to hold Thanksgiving Services for the blessings already granted the Mission, and to bring its needs before God in prayer, that He will graciously so assist in every respect as to make it a perennial and vastly increasing blessing in the land so long benighted and oppressed.

FATHERLESS.

315 ORPHANS of both sexes are now in the ASYLUM FOR FATHERLESS CHILDREN at Reedham, Purley, Surrey, and the Board of Managers most earnestly appeal for help to maintain and educate them. These children have been admitted to the Asylum at ages varying from 6 months to 11 years, and will all be retained and cared for until they are 15 years of age. This Charity is entirely unsectarian, and has no endowment; it is therefore dependent upon public benevolence for support.

The necessary expenditure averages £3,000 per annum, but the only reliable income—that from Annual Subscriptions—does not provide one-third of that amount, hence the necessity for this appeal.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS AND DONATIONS will be most thankfully received.

ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

ALREADY, since this work began, 21,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with most gratifying results.

This season has commenced with more than usual severity, arising from the recent Dock Labourers' strike and other causes; and from present appearances an unusually severe season is most certainly apprehended, making our appeal all the more urgent.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the SECRETARY; or Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or by the EDITORS of "THE CHRISTIAN."

HOMES OF HOPE,

4, 5, & 6, REGENT SQUARE,
GRAY'S INN ROAD, W.C.

The Committee are obliged to make an URGENT APPEAL FOR IMMEDIATE HELP.

1. For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.
2. For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five Shillings would pay for a child for a week.
3. For Law Expenses: in every case where it be possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The Homes are very full, and the Committee have so a large number of young women to look after, who ave passed through, and are doing well in situations, t who are not quite able to pay the full amount, five illings a week, to the nurses for their children.

The applications are so distressing and urgent, that ery shilling has been spent.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

Established 1822.

FOR the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible throughout Ireland. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities as City Missionaries, and visit all denominations, where permitted. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES—27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN; and 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE.

NOTE.—Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

DOCK LABOURERS & FACTORY GIRLS.

In various ways the North-East London Gospel Mission seeks to minister spiritually and practically amongst the suffering poor. The well-appointed Halls at Bow Common, Cubitt Town, and Millwall are centres of blessed activity, reaching most largely Factory Girls and Dock Labourers, amongst whom the direst moral and temporal need is found. There are eight Gospel Halls and two country Homes for the ailing poor.

Contributions would be gratefully received.

URGENT APPEAL FOR £250.

THE Committee ask the Readers of THE CHRISTIAN, to many of whom this Mission is well known, to assist in raising £600 per annum to carry on the various Agencies as follows, viz.:—

GOSPEL SERVICES—Sunday Afternoon and Evening School (1000 Children in attendance).

YOUTHS' INSTITUTE—Gymnasium, &c. (455 Members enrolled last session).

YOUNG WOMEN'S WELCOME.

MOTHERS' MEETINGS, SEWING CLASSES, BANDS OF HOPE.

SICK RELIEF—Soup Distribution (twice weekly).

CHRISTMAS DINNERS, &c., &c.

Owing to the death and removal of old friends of the Mission, the income has been so reduced that there is now an accumulated DEBT of upwards of £100. This the Committee are anxious to clear off at once, so that they may be able to meet the increased Expenditure of the WINTER'S WORK.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Right Rev. Bishop Crowther, of the Niger Mission, West Africa.

In another column will be found a most interesting statement by Mr. D. L. Moody as to his plans in connection with the recently established Biblical Institute in Chicago. In a letter he says that the school has opened grandly, and he is greatly encouraged.

The name of Alexander Balfour needs no monument of bronze or brass to keep it fresh in the memories of the Christian public of Liverpool. Still, his large and unostentatious benefactions to that community make it fitting that there should be some tangible and visible token of the esteem in which he was held. In The Liverpool Courier we read that the statue of Mr. Balfour just erected is a "worthy ornament" to the city; we trust it will also prove a constant reminder to the busy merchants on the Mersey that consecration of life to the service of God and man is an infinitely nobler thing than the accumulation of earthly riches, or the short-lived éclat that comes from mere worldly honour and fame.

The memory of another friend, whose services to the cause of national peace and morality should never be forgotten—Mr. Henry Richard—has been perpetuated in somewhat similar manner by the erection of a monument over his grave in Abney-park Cemetery. It is a hopeful sign when any people love to hold its best citizens who have departed this life, in public reverence and remembrance.

The correspondence in The Times on short services and short sermons has not been very edifying. Someone recently remarked that in times of true spiritual revival people feel lengthy services to be no burden at all, so long as they prove profitable and inspiring. It is an undoubted symptom of the decadence of vital religion when we find grumbles of the kind that have been filling the columns of our daily contemporary.

The adjustment of satisfactory relations between pastors and Sunday-schools formed a prominent topic in a conference held last week in the Sunday-School Union Lecture Hall, Old Bailey. Dr. Parker held that ministers could not do more for their Sunday-schools than they were doing, and that their premature graves should be looked at as well as new spheres of work. The question is one that cannot be summarily disposed of. When teachers find that girls who are leading an openly sinful life, and working men who have cast off all religious observance, have passed through Sunday-schools, their anxious concern is abundantly justified. The solution will be found, not in upbraiding ministers, but in the systematic service of members of churches who might bring themselves into close personal contact with young persons in the hour of danger. Not merely to teach but to touch the young is a pressing question of the time.

A hymn competition is in progress among the readers of the well-known illustrated weekly, "A 1." Prizes have been offered by the proprietors of that paper for the best answers to eight questions on the hymns contained in Sacred Songs and Solos; the questions have reference to such hymns in that collection as may be considered best from various points of view. For fuller details we refer our friends to "A 1" for November 23.

We are pleased to observe the following among the "Editorial Notes" in The Christian Commonwealth of last week:—

> Our esteemed contemporary, THE CHRISTIAN, has, for the last few weeks, occasionally given portions of its space to the discussion of the perennial problem of Christian unity. One of its most interesting illustrations of the tendency of many minds at this juncture is the elaborate and earnest article of a well-known Baptist minister, Rev. G. Wainwright, of Bournemouth. This gentleman well expresses the aspirations of many of his brethren after blessings which sectism can never give, but which it can and must hinder, and, indeed, fatally prevent. Such communications are a very hopeful indication of coming developments in the only right direction. When denominationalists are dissatisfied with denominationalism, as so many are beginning to be, it is a sign that things are not destined to remain as they are.

Not only is denominationalism losing its hold, but we trust a positive desire for the manifested oneness of the body of Christ is growing rapidly. Let not new interests take the place of those which are dying out.

The Guardian of November 20 gives the following facts as stated by Dr. Blyth, Bishop of the Anglican Church in Jerusalem, in an address at the Church of St. Margaret, Lothbury:—In 1841, when the bishopric was founded, there were 8000 Jews in all Palestine. In 1883 there were 20,000, but so great has been the increase of late that in 1888 the number came up to 70,000, about the number that came up from Babylon. The Bishop further stated that while the feeling of these Palestinian Jews towards Christians was losing its bitterness, and an agricultural aptitude developing, the fertilising rains, known in Scripture as the "latter rains," had been granted for the last two years, although they had been withheld from, perhaps, the time of the exile.

The condition under which myriads of people live in our large cities was illustrated by statements made at the recent inquest over the body of a married woman who had died in Somers Town. The relieving officer remarked that on visiting the house he found two or three families living and sleeping in one room. In the kitchen fifteen people had slept, and the house was in a filthy condition. We hope the members of the London County Council will address themselves as speedily as possible to this question of overcrowding, which is so detrimental at once to the health and the morals of the people.

Scarcely less inimical to the public well-being is the insanitary and uninhabitable condition of so many dwellings in the poorer parts of London. We have noticed with pleasure the crusade begun against this disgraceful landlord neglect, in the columns of The Daily Telegraph. A special commissioner of that journal has well earned for himself the title of "A Friend of the Poor" by his East-end investigations and reports. Mr. Montagu Williams and other police magistrates have taken the bull by the horns, and have condemned as unfit for occupation a number of houses to which their attention has been drawn. But should there not be some severe penalty attached to such neglect on the part of the property owners?

We have received a communication from the Hon. Secretaries of "The Catholic Truth Society" with reference to the statement in Dr. Barnardo's recent article in our columns, to the effect that that Society had backed up priests in getting children away from the Homes under his care. The Secretaries assert that the Society they represent has never taken any such action, as its object is solely to disseminate literature; they further state that the Society is not wealthy, and is not largely supported by "wealthy Catholics." Dr. Barnardo informs us that the mention, on his part, of the Catholic Truth Society was an error, and that his reference was to another Roman Catholic society. We regret that we have unwittingly given currency to the mistake.

The daily newspapers state that Sir J. L. Simmons has been received by the Pope in cordial audience, as a special English envoy. We have yet to learn on what righteous or justifiable ground the English Government sends an official messenger to the occupant of the Vatican. Happily, he is not now an earthly potentate, and is not likely to be one again, we imagine. Why our rulers should be in treaty with the so-called spiritual head of the Romish system it is very difficult to conjecture, seeing that they do not deign to consult the recognised governing powers of other religious communities. We hope a strict inquisition will be made into this mysterious business as soon as Parliament meets. Rome loves plotting and concealment, but we must insist on this intrigue being brought into the light of day.

The munificence of Sir Edward Guinness in giving the sum of £250,000 for the erection of dwellings for the labouring poor will, it is to be hoped, lead others to generosity in the same direction. It ought to put to the blush those who are in any way officially responsible for the delay in dealing with the pressing question of the Housing of the Poor. We are among those who think that Sir E. Guinness's noble gift would be more welcome if it were not tainted in its source, by the fact of its being part of the profits of a brewery. At the same time, there may be some sort of poetic justice in restoring to the people, for good uses, some of that which they have squandered in hurtful indulgence. It would be unfortunate, however, for the cause of temperance, if those who make fortunes out of the follies and the miseries of the masses were to be encouraged in the idea that by such gifts they can ever make atonement for the woes and sorrows that flow from the traffic in strong drink.

At a recent missionary gathering in America, Dr. Storrs, of Brooklyn, gave a singularly eloquent address. We reproduce some of his words on the relations that ought to exist between Christianity and commerce, which we are not surprised to find were loudly applauded :—

Christianity helps commerce everywhere, and Christianity has the right to require that commerce shall help it and shall not hinder it. Christianity has the right to demand that the agents of commerce on foreign shores shall not be men of loose life and vicious manners and an infidel spirit. Christianity has certainly the right to require that commerce shall not debase the nation which it is trying to lift by helping the opium traffic in China, and by pouring millions of gallons of the vilest liquors into Africa. Every dollar won by a traffic of that kind ought to burn in a man's hand like a bit of the infernal asphalt which is the pavement of hell. Riches so acquired simply reek with the blood of immortal souls; and Christianity would be false to its trust if it did not remonstrate and condemn; and civilisation and commerce are false to their trust if they do not in this sympathise with the Gospel of our Lord and of his Christ.

The remarks as to riches acquired by the liquor traffic are very far-reaching in their application, and they cannot be altogether forgotten in connection with the brewer's gift referred to above.

We recently referred to the gravity of the race question as it affects parties in the United States. Recent information goes to show that the best minds in the American churches are moved to profound interest on the subject. In Chicago, was held at the beginning of this month, the annual meeting of the American Missionary Association. This Society is representative of all the churches. Its central principle is equal justice to all races on the Continent. Leading ministers took part, and we note with pleasure a few accepted utterances. For example :—

"The negroes have vindicated their right to be citizens." "He is here, and here to stay." "God has made this a polychromatic country that we may give a Gospel-illustration of the essential unity of all races."

Christians on this side of the Atlantic will give thanks that this admirable Association, while it teaches the negro a religion which is morality with a clean manhood, aims at a real brotherhood, and takes the Indian and Chinese also under its special care. On the Chinese work, it was reported, that it afforded the largest returns of any done by the Association.

GOVERNESSES AND THE HOLIDAYS.—Miss C. F. Ryffel, directress of the Home for Foreign Governesses, 3, Colville-houses, Talbot-road, London, W., desires to inform our readers that she is ready to receive applications from families requiring foreign governesses for the holidays.

THE BOYS' HOME (Southwark, S.E.).—Dear Sir,—The time for holding our annual sale is drawing near. If your readers could help in any way from their abundance towards the needs of our rescued waifs and strays we should be very grateful. The coming winter brings with it many heavy expenses and anxieties, but we trust our kind friends and co-workers will respond as generously as they have done in the past, so that we may not be compelled to turn any homeless little one from our doors. Contributions of any fancy manufactures or works of art will be most gratefully acknowledged.

DR. PIERSON AND MISSIONS.

Rev. Dr. Pierson landed in Liverpool on Saturday, November 16, accompanied by Mrs. Pierson, after an extremely stormy voyage across the Atlantic. Repairing without delay to Gordon Hall, he found a goodly assembly of earnest Christians pleading for the Divine blessing upon the important mission which has brought him to this country. In the course of an address, he narrated the chain of circumstances which, dating from the Centenary Conference on Missions, held last year, had led him to break away from American ties, and throw himself into the work of stirring up the churches on the subject of world-wide evangelisation. On the following Lord's Day, Dr. Pierson occupied Liverpool pulpits, and on Monday spoke at the noon prayer-meeting, and at a gathering of friends who accorded him a right hearty welcome to Britain. He also spoke some rousing words at an enthusiastic meeting presided over on Tuesday by Mr. S. Smith, M.P.

ARRIVED IN SCOTLAND,

Dr. Pierson took the platform without delay, and has since delivered several telling addresses in Edinburgh on the theme which he has so near his heart. Arrangements have been completed for a tour of the West of Scotland, and prayer is ascending to God to bless his message and prosper his appeal. The various sections of the Church have combined in cordial sympathy, and it is again being demonstrated that the cause of missions, when earnestly espoused, is calculated above all others to unite hearts and minds which are more or less divided on questions of congregational policy and form. On Wednesday evening, in the Church of Scotland Assembly Hall, Principal Cairns presided over a meeting called for the purpose of welcoming Dr. Pierson. Addresses were delivered by Revs. J. McMurtrie, Professor Lindsay, Mr. Duncan McLaren, and Rev. Robert Craig, all of whom emphasised the great importance of the home churches exerting themselves to make known the Gospel in distant lands. In the course of an eloquent speech, characterised by much fervour, Dr. Pierson maintained that if our affection goes far beyond ourselves it should affect the most distant, destitute, and degraded objects upon which Christian love could expend itself. The reason why he had come 3000 miles from home was not simply because of any personal interest or enthusiasm in missions, but in answer to the most splendid, absolute, and resistless call from God that he had ever met with in the course of his life. Nothing could have induced him to resign the charge of his congregation, and leave his many and dear ties in America, except the distinct call he had received to stimulate increased interest in foreign missions. He urged to a greater diffusion of missionary facts, and a more zealous devotion to the glorious cause.

On Friday Dr. Pierson addressed a meeting of congregational workers in the United Presbyterian Synod Hall, Castle-terrace, Principal Rainy presiding; and on the following day he attended a meeting to promote women's work among women. Dr. Norman Macleod occupied the chair.

On Saturday Dr. Pierson addressed a meeting of Divinity students in the Free Church College. Alluding to the prevalence of religious doubt, he gave his brethren in the ministry some sound advice. Never, he said, give unnecessary expression to your doubts; never cherish a sceptical spirit, making the mistake of believing your doubts and doubting your beliefs; verify your beliefs by personal experience and experiment. Dr. Pierson referred to the great mission field now open to students, and spoke of the increase of Young Men's Christian Associations, and the students' crusade in this country and in America. On Sunday a large missionary meeting was held in the United Presbyterian Synod Hall, Sir W. Muir presiding. Dr. Pierson pleaded for a revival of the responsibility of individual members of the Christian Churches. The meeting was one of the most magnificent ever held in the city, and Dr. Pierson's address the most thrilling he has yet delivered in Scotland.

An Edinburgh correspondent writes: "Really Dr. Pierson's work is something beyond speaking about. He is clearly sent of God, and he is carrying conviction of the most wonderful kind to the minds of the Christian people of the Scottish Metropolis, that as yet the Christians of the world generally have not done anything like their duty to the great heathen world; and that now is the day to rectify it."

THE WEST LONDON MISSION.

Next week, when this mission will be over, we hope to give some account of its progress, and its ascertained results. Meantime we may say that, so far as we have learned, the effort has been marked by many happy and encouraging features. The workers have been indefatigable in making the meetings known to the fashionable dwellers in the West. Even the places of amusement have been visited, and in some cases, we believe, the managers of these have offered co-operation in distributing notices.

A representative attended Princes Hall one evening last week, and was glad to find a large audience, to whom Rev. Hugh Price Hughes pressed home the Gospel message with rare skill and sympathetic urgency. The number of those who openly responded to his appeals was not very large, but the fact that almost everybody lingered to the last moment showed how deep an impression had been made. The arrangements for dealing with inquirers seem to be very thorough and judicious.

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

The monthly gathering of Christian workers at Miss Macpherson's "Home of Industry" was held on Wednesday evening last week. There was a large attendance. Mr. R. C. Morgan presided, and delivered a brief, helpful address, based upon Eph. iv. 1—3: "I beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called,...forbearing one another in love, endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

Miss Child gave an interesting account of the work among seamen in Ratcliff-highway. She sketched it from its commencement years ago, incidentally remarking that it was Miss Macpherson who initiated her into this service in London, though she had been similarly engaged in other seaports before coming to the Metropolis. Miss Steer also recounted some incidents of her labours at the "Bridge of Hope," showing the beneficent influence exerted through this noble mission in reclaiming fallen women, and saving others in danger of falling into grievous sin.

For the success and blessing which have attended the efforts of these faithful servants in the past God was praised, and fervent prayer was made for continued prosperity to follow those and all other works having for their object the furtherance of the kingdom of God.

HOLLOWAY EVANGELISTIC AND OPEN-AIR MISSION.—A meeting to celebrate the twenty-third anniversary of this Mission was held in Warlter's-road Schoolroom a few days ago. Mr. Barry Wake presided, and addresses were given by Messrs. Robert Paton, Colin Young, James Townley, W. Holmes, and J. H. Putterill. The report stated that the indoor services had been well sustained, and 170 meetings had been held in the open air. The sick and dying and the common lodging-houses have been visited; free meals have been given to children and unemployed poor. The balance-sheet showed a deficit of £30. Mr. H. Putterill is superintendent of the Mission.

Palace-Car Piety.

By Rev. THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

Good old John Bunyan lived before the days of railroads, and he sent his pilgrim to the Celestial City on foot. Some pretty rough walking and hard climbing did Christian find before he had traversed the straight road to the City of God. His convictions of guilt were deep and pungent, his conversion was thorough, and when he reaches a dark and dangerous defile on the way, he bravely says, "I see not but that this is the way to the desired heaven," and on he goes without flinching. The piety of the pilgrim was stalwart, self-denying, sin-hating, and uncompromising; the man relished even the severities of duty, and never coddled himself with confectionery. Is there not a strong tendency in our day to make a Christian life a great deal easier and more self-indulgent—and, instead of a sturdy walk with God, to make it a comfortable ride to heaven in a palace-car.

(1) This tendency shows itself in quite too much of the preaching to the unconverted. The Apostle Peter's first discourse after Pentecost was not a bid for popularity; he did not seek to bribe those Jerusalem sinners by telling them how easy it was for them to become Christians, and what a "good time" they would have if they embraced the new Gospel. He knew that the very best thing for them was to convict them of their sins and lead them to a prompt acceptance and confession of Jesus Christ. Thorough conviction brought thorough conversion; then came gladness of heart and stedfast continuance in the Apostle's doctrine and fellowship. This same kind of subsoil ploughing down to the roots was the characteristic of Whitefield, Finney, Edwards, Nettleton, and Lyman Beecher; it is the characteristic of Spurgeon's preaching to-day. The best service that can be rendered to a sinner is first to convince him of his sinfulness and then lead to Jesus' blood; the more thoroughly sick of sin he becomes, the more he gets the bad stuff out of him by deep repentance, the healthier, holier Christian he will be afterwards. But to preach to an unconverted man that "it is just the easiest thing in the world to be a Christian," and to urge him to come on board the church-train just as he is, and be transported safely and comfortably to paradise, is pretty sure either to hoax him into self-deception or to make him a crude, half-converted, self-indulgent professor to the last. When the deadly hurt of sin is salved over, or "healed slightly," it breaks out again. To endeavour to bribe sinners with the offer of "happiness" before the heart is right toward God is a cruel deception; it is the surest way to rob them of that solid soul health and purity and holiness which alone can give enduring peace.

(2) Our blessed Master—who loved sinners infinitely more than we can—never bribed men into discipleship. He invited them to come to Him, but He frankly told them that unless they were willing to deny themselves and take up the cross and follow Him, they could not be his disciples. There was a magnificent reward waiting for them at the terminus, but no palace-cars to carry them there. The young ruler, who fancied he might find one, and ride to heaven "like a gentleman," went away disgusted and disappointed. Brethren, we are always safe when we copy our blessed Master. So in dealing with the unconverted and with the awakened nquirer, let us be honest with them and tell them that, if their "right hand" be a favourite sin, the hand must come off. The biggest devil in a sinner's heart is self, and unless that greedy devil is cast out, Christ cannot and will not come in and flood the soul with peace and joy and power. What is it but the subtle spirit of self that would seek to bargain with Christ for a safe and "genteel" journey to heaven in a palace-car?

(3) The spirit of indulgence eats like a canker into the life of too many members of our churches. It leads them to choose as their place of worship—not the one in which they are the most needed—but the prosperous one, in which they have the lightest load and the most luxuries. The wealth that ought to feed a dozen feeble churches into independence runs right down into the pool of one aristocratic church and stagnates there. Self-indulgence inquires—"Who preaches there? Is he eloquent? Is the music fine? And do the best society go there?" In plain English this means—bribe me with a seat in the drawing-room-car and I will go with you. Self-indulgence always goes to its store through a storm, and hires a carriage on the bitterest nights to reach a pleasure party; but it leaves Christ's ambassadors to preach to empty pews on an unpleasant Sabbath. The conduct of a vast portion of Christ's professed followers (I fear a majority of them), on every wet or inclement Lord's day, is a severer reproach and works a severer damage to our Christianity than the ribald assault of a hundred Ingersolls. It practically means—"My religion will be worth heaven to me in eternity; but in this world it is not worth a little exposure and discomfort."

Brethren and sisters, we have but one journey to make through this world. Let us make it on foot, helping up other poor fellow-travellers as we go along. Jesus will walk with us over the ruggedest paths of self-denial, and sweeten every step. We shall have the best of company—home missionaries who wear old coats to teach men new hearts—poor needle-women who give hard-earned dollars to their Master—and rich men also who give Christ the key to their iron safes and cheque books. Let us be in no hurry to get to heaven, for "Our Beloved" is with us on the road and we are needed in this sin-cursed world. When we get to the celestial "station" we will not find many who came there in a palace-car.

DOVER SOLDIERS' HOME.

A friend, who recently visited this institution, writes:—

It is a Home in the strictest sense of the word, and not merely a soldiers' club or institute, where he can read his paper, write his letter, or enjoy innocent recreation. All these advantages are included, but its foremost object is to set before the men the great truths of Christ's redemption, and the call in Him to the true dignity of their manhood. Many a soldier can point to the little meeting-room in the Dover Home, and say, "There my eyes first saw the light of life."

The Bible-reading held each evening is the special feature of the Home work, and has proved a means of blessing. It has opened the door to much individual work, and, under God, has kept many from falling.

I invite the earnest interest and prayers of those who are anxious for the spiritual welfare of our soldiers, on behalf of Miss Wright's work in Dover, which has its peculiar difficulties. These, at times seem almost too great to struggle against.

PRAY! TRUST!

"Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in Him; and He shall bring it to pass."—Ps. xxxvii. 5.

Do manifold troubles distress thee,
And threaten thy peace to destroy?
Doth care like a nightmare oppress thee?
Do strivings and whispers annoy?

Confide not in human adviser,
Nor wield the worn weapons of might;
For "the children of this world are wiser," Outwitting the "children of light."

Though vain every carnal endeavour,
Nor scheming nor plotting avail,
The "arm of the Lord" faileth never;
Take counsel with Him and prevail.

Pray! pray! and the long night of sorrow
Shall prove his omnipotent strength;
Trust! trust Him! and God's fair to-morrow
Shall dawn on thy spirit at length.

Pray! pray! for the key of all treasure
E'en now in thine hand thou dost hold,
Trust! trust! and await the Lord's leisure
His purpose of love to unfold.

Lucy A. Bennett.

EFFECTIVE REPROOF.

In one of the numbers of The Christian Advocate, Rev. C. C. McCabe, D.D., calls the attention of Christians to the Scripture command: "Thou shalt in anywise rebuke thy neighbour, and not suffer sin upon him." He remarks: "How it would diminish profanity, for instance, if every time a man should swear on the streets, on the cars, or in depôts, he should be sure to call up some witness for Jesus"; and he mentions a case in which he says:—

I knew Bishop John H. Vincent to reprove a swearer so powerfully, and yet so tenderly, that he not only subdued him, but melted him to tears. It was in a railway station. The room was full of passengers waiting for a belated train. A man, probably slightly intoxicated, was shocking everybody with his profanity. Suddenly Dr. Vincent began to sing:—

Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly,
While the nearer waters roll,
While the tempest still is high!
Hide me, O my Saviour, hide,
Till the storm of life is past;
Safe into the haven guide,
O receive my soul at last!

The song ceased. Perfect silence reigned. The swearer was reproved. After a time he came to Dr. Vincent and said—

"Could I see you a moment outside?" They went out together. "How came you," said he, "to sing that hymn just now?"

The Doctor replied: "I heard you swearing, and I thought I would let you know there was somebody there who loved the name of Jesus."

"That's very strange," said the man. "My sister when she was dying sang that very hymn, and she made me promise to meet her in heaven. Could you pray for me?"

Down in the snow they knelt together, and the Doctor prayed for the penitent man, and asked that he might have grace and strength to keep his vow. The train came. They were separated, to meet no more, in all probability, till they meet in eternity.

Disciple of Jesus, stand up for your Master. Bear his reproach. Confess his name before men. The hour is rapidly approaching when a glance of recognition from Jesus will be more to you than all the wealth and honour of this world.

"SOME SCOTTISH MISSIONS."—Our seventh letter under this heading is unavoidably held over until our next issue.

The Missing Element in Evangelical Preaching.

"Every scribe instructed unto the Kingdom of Heaven is like unto a man that is a householder, who bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old."
JESUS CHRIST (Matt. xiii. 52.)

"Christ's kingdom is not a divided one, either as to men's relation to it, or the region to which its operations belong. While it has here pre-eminently and primarily to do with the inner man, yet it is by no means confined to this; it comprehends the external as well as the internal, and embraces alike time and eternity. From the moment of their believing upon Christ sinners are translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son; they become related to a heavenly citizenship; and, both as individuals and as members of particular churches, they are bound by their calling to strive after the realisation of a state or kingdom which stands in such affinity with the higher world. He has 'made us a kingdom, priests to God and our Father' (Rev. i. 6),—so it stands in the correct text—is the motto that every Christian church should take to itself, and which it should seek even now to have made good in the condition and character of all belonging to it.

"At the same time it will be understood that in the descriptions and exhortations of New Testament Scripture, reference is had under the expressions 'Kingdom of Heaven' and 'Kingdom of God,' sometimes more to the present, sometimes more to the future world. It is so especially in our Lord's parabolical representations respecting the kingdom. These delineate all the varied states and aspects of the kingdom, from its first apparently small and feeble beginnings, to its final issues in glory and condemnation; some embrace the whole compass of the history, while others are confined to a limited portion of it. But in none of them is the view presented that simply of an internal experience; there is always comprehended a state of things which the term KINGDOM, in its natural complex meaning, can quite fitly be applied to."—Dr. Patrick Fairbairn.

"Tholuck well observes that all the senses of Kingdom of God—or of Heaven, or of Christ—are only different sides of the same great idea—The subjection of all things to God in Christ."—Alford.

THE air is full of controversies. The trumpets from many pulpits are giving uncertain sounds; which are freely denounced as such by the evangelical: but from some cause or other the sounds from the latter are also deficient in the element of certainty. They lack the Apostolic ring. The Gospel as preached from evangelical pulpits often fails to grip the conscience or command the intellect; it does not prove itself to be the truth by setting free, to the extent we might expect, those who are led captive by the devil at his will.

We seem to have shifted our point of view from that of the Apostles. The truth of the Gospel comprehends many truths; as the breastplate of the high priest was composed of many precious stones. These truths, like the stones of the breastplate, are arranged in a divine order; and as the name "breastplate of the high priest" implies the worship of God, so the Gospel has a name, a title, a description, which implies that its chief purpose is to honour God. The stones of the breastplate or of the temple could not have been otherwise arranged without distorting the purpose and the plan of either; nor could a different name have been given to the breastplate of the high priest or to the temple, without putting some other idea in the forefront, instead of that which God intended. In like manner the Inspiring Spirit has attached one ruling idea to the Gospel, and no other of its truths can be substituted for this, without distorting its purpose and its plan.

The very term Gospel = Good Tidings, implies sorrow or disaster to which it brings relief or remedy. The disaster which befel the world was rebellion against God; and no gospel, no relief, no remedy, can come to it whose foundation and whose corner-stone are not the reinstatement of the authority of God. Therefore the Gospel which brings salvation to man must and can only be the Gospel of the Reign of God. We may demonstrate this by the briefest possible epitome of the facts of human history.

I.

In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth, and on the sixth day He made man and gave him dominion over all. "Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands: Thou hast put all things under his feet" (Ps. viii.). But man himself was under law to God, the Creator and the Great King.

Tempted by Satan, man rebelled against God and transgressed his law; and through believing Satan became impregnated with the Satanic nature—was "born again" in an evil sense—men became children of the wicked one.

The dominion—the kingdom—given by God to man was thus yielded to the tempter, who became the prince (John xiv. 30, xvi. 11) and god (2 Cor. iv. 4) of this world.

God in his wisdom permitted evil, thus introduced, to develop to the full, that its corrupting quality, its guilt, and its desert of condemnation, might be manifest to the angelic as well as to the human world.

Beginning in self-love and self-indulgence, it speedily brought forth hatred and murder; the earth was filled with violence; and the first period of human life ended in judgment by the Flood, and demonstrated what the condition of the creature must be when it has revolted from the rule of God. The first act of this great drama ends in the ruin which follows rebellion against the Great King.

II.

The second period begins with eight persons brought through the Flood into a new world.

The dominion is again committed to man, in Noah, with the additional responsibility of judging and punishing violence and bloodshed, which had been permitted to run riot unavenged in the previous period.

But sin had poisoned human nature at its source. Noah cannot rule himself; the repeopled earth breaks out into high-handed rebellion against God, and builds Babel to defy his will.

Two things have thus far been proved:—(1) That the dominion of Satan can only bring violence and confusion; and (2) that man's revolt from God at the instigation of Satan has so defiled and poisoned human nature, that such a drastic purge as the Flood destroying all but eight persons has had no effect in healing the disease.

III.

A third period begins with Abraham. God now separates a family to Himself—and schools the patriarch through fifty years to absolute trust and obedience, that he may be the progenitor of a kingly race.

He trains the nation through suffering, because it is good for a nation no less than for a man, to bear the yoke in its youth. He promises that if Israel will obey his voice indeed and keep his covenant they shall be to Him a kingdom of priests and a holy nation (Exod. xix. 6). But they rebel on the very day the Law is given which they are to obey and to administer. They reject God that He should not reign over them (1 Sam. viii. 7). And at last they are sent into captivity among the Gentiles.

It has thus been proved that a slip of the vine of the earth, taken out of the wood and planted in a very fruitful hill, and on which the all-wise Husbandman has exhausted all his skill, remains incapable of change, and manifests the most virulent qualities of the parent plant (Isa. v.). The most favoured nation, under the highest culture, exhibits to the uttermost the evil nature of the race. Instead of becoming a kingdom of priests, "just, and ruling in the fear of God," they have been brought back by their rebellion to national captivity, and oppression, and slavery.

IV.

God now entrusts rule to the nations whom He had left to their own wild ways while He was cultivating Israel. He confers upon their chief monarch (Nebuchadnezzar) the title of "a king of kings." But the royal prerogative in his and his successors' hands speedily degenerates from gold to iron—from kingly authority derived from God, to power, dreadful, terrible, and strong exceedingly, which regards the people as its source: "vox populi, vox Dei" (Dan. ii.).

Thus for four thousand years God has patiently endured the revolt and the rebellion of his creature man. He has given him, under every possible change of circumstance, the opportunity of recovering and of exercising the dominion which He conferred upon him at his creation. And He has proved by the exhaustive process of experiment that man born of Adam, and inheriting his fallen and rebellious nature, is incapable of rule; that Satan, who effected his ruin at the first, is the real power working through man, and that that power is and can be nothing but a violent and disastrous tyranny, producing crime and suffering and sorrow.

V.

Now (to adopt the language of the Psalmist's appeal to God), "it is time for Thee to work." "The time is fulfilled, and the Kingdom—the Reign—of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the glad tidings." God is manifested in flesh. Of the race of Adam, of the chosen nation, of the elect line of kings; Son of David, and Abraham, and Adam, and God, Jesus is born King of the Jews and Son of Man. His herald cries, "Repent! for the Kingdom of Heaven, the Kingdom of God, is at hand." The Kingdom of Heaven as contrasted with all the kingdoms of earth whether Jew or Gentile; the Kingdom of God, as distinguished from the rule of men, and of Satan their prince.

Will men receive their God and King? No: "He came into the world and the world knew Him not; He came unto his own possessions and his own people received Him not." Observe how the holy company of the Apostles set us the example which we have followed in this paper, of going back to the creation, when they pray concerning this:—"Lord, Thou art God, which hast made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all that in them is; who by the mouth of David hast said, Why did the heathen rage, and the peoples imagine vain things? The kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord, and against his Christ [his Anointed King]. For of a truth against thy holy Servant Jesus, whom Thou hast anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles and the people of Israel, were gathered together, for to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done" (Acts iv. 23—28).

The rejection and murder by Jew and Gentile (that is, by the race cultured and uncultured; by the vine growing wild in the wilderness, and by the pleasant plant in the very fruitful hill), their rejection and murder of the Son of David, the Son of Man, the Son of God, has demonstrated a more momentous truth than all the past: it has proved not only that man impregnated with the Satanic nature cannot reign; cannot under any circumstances wield the authority God gave him at the first: but has also proved that he cannot even be a member of that Kingdom in which God reigns by love over a willing and obedient people. "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God," because "corruption doth not inherit incorruption." Therefore, "except a man be born again he cannot see — except he be born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into—the Kingdom of God."

This necessity of a new birth in order to enter the Kingdom of God sufficiently accounts for passages in which the Kingdom is spoken of as present, inward, and experimental, and distinguishes them from those which speak of it as future, outward, and political.

The Kingdom of God, the Kingdom of Heaven, is mentioned about 140 times in the New Testament: sometimes the inward, sometimes the outward aspect of the Kingdom being the more prominent. But whether inward or outward, present or future, personal or political, the very kernel and essence of the Gospel is that God draws near to men; that, giving like a King, He gives his Only-begotten Son; that the Son gives Himself and gives his life, that He may redeem his people out of the hand of the enemy; pours out his soul unto death that He may put away their treasonous sin by the sacrifice of Himself; gives Himself for us that He may purify unto Himself a peculiar people zealous of good works. It is a King, against whom his subjects, deceived by a traitorous apostate, have revolted, expiating their crime by Himself suffering their penalty, and winning their hearts by his self-sacrificing love; thus casting out the treasonous disposition, the apostate nature, they had imbibed; making them partakers of his own divine nature, and raising them far higher than the height from which they fell.

VI.

Thus therefore does the New Age begin with the proclamation of the Reign of God.

This was what John the forerunner and baptizer preached—first as at hand; and then as being present in the person of the Son of God. This was what Jesus preached and taught in all the cities and villages of Galilee (Mark i. 14, 15; Matt. iv. 12, ix. 35). It was this that He commissioned first the Twelve and then the Seventy to go forth and preach (Luke ix. 1, 2, x. 1, 9, 11). The Kingdom of God was generally the direct, at other times the indirect, subject of all his parables, of all his miracles, of all his teachings. The seed, in the fundamental parable of the Sower, is "the word of the Kingdom" (Matt. xiii. 19). The Kingdom of God was the chief subject of discourse, and its principles were the lesson enforced by his example, at the Last Supper, on the night on which He was betrayed (Luke xxii.; John xiii. 1—17).

Because his Kingdom was not of this world He refused to be made a King by the people whom He had miraculously fed; and because the Jews and the Gentiles rejected the Kingdom of God the princes of this world crucified the Lord of glory. And after his resurrection it was of the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God that He spake throughout the forty days during which He showed Himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs.

VII.

The Pentecostal sermons of Peter had the King and the Kingdom for their text. "God hath made that same Jesus whom ye crucified both Lord and Christ." "Ye denied the Holy One and the Just, and killed the Prince of life." "Him hath God exalted a Prince and a Saviour." The Apostles preached to the chosen people the Kingdom of God, and healed the sick, and cast out devils, according to the commission which they at the first received (Matt. x. 7, 8).

Driven out of Jerusalem by persecution, and scattered abroad, the disciples went everywhere preaching the word of the Kingdom. Philip was one of them, whom the Samaritans believed when he preached the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. And when the Apostles heard that they had received the word of God they came down from Jerusalem and laid their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost (Acts viii.).

Paul, the chief speaker, and Barnabas full of the Holy Ghost, knew no other Gospel than that of the Kingdom of God; and when they returned to the cities to which they had preached that Gospel, they confirmed the souls of the disciples by exhorting them to continue in the faith, and by reminding them that we must through much tribulation enter into the Kingdom of God (Acts xiii., xiv.).

When Paul followed Apollos at Ephesus he spake boldly for the space of three months; and the things concerning the Kingdom of God were the subject of his discourse (Acts xix. 8).

Then he went on his third visit to Macedonia, and returning called at Miletus, whence he sent for the elders of Ephesus; and in his pathetic and tearful farewell he includes "the Gospel of the grace of God" in "the Kingdom of God," with which latter "all the counsel of God" is apparently an interchangeable term (Acts xx. 24—27).

When he had appealed to Cæsar and had been sent to Rome, he called the chief of the Jews together, and expounded and testified the Kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the Law of Moses, and out of the Prophets, from morning till evening. For the Law of Moses and the Prophets and the Psalms contain the things concerning Jesus (Luke xxiv.); and to persuade concerning Jesus is to testify the Kingdom of God. The Jews departed to dispute among themselves, but "Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house at Rome, and received all that came in unto him; preaching the Kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him." Well does Dean Howson say, "History has few stranger contrasts than when it shows us Paul preaching Christ [the King] under the shadow of Nero's palace" (Acts xxviii. 23, 30, 31).

Throughout the Epistles the "Kingdom of God" is the one comprehensive synonym for all that the Gospel contains (Rom. xiv. 17; 1 Cor. iv. 20, vi. 9, 10, xv. 50; Gal. v. 21; Eph. v. 5; Col. i. 13, iv. 11; 2 Thess. i. 5).

John the Divine sees One who sat upon the throne, encircled by the rainbow-symbol of his covenant with the earth. And in his Apocalyptic visions the oft-recurring designation of the Great King is "He that sitteth upon the throne." The mystery of God is finished when great voices in heaven say, "The kingdoms of this world are become the Kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ; and He shall reign for ever and ever." And the elders worship on their faces, saying "We give Thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come; because Thou hast taken to Thee thy great power and hast reigned" (Rev. x. 7, xi. 15—18).

VIII.

This, its characteristic element, the Gospel, as preached even by evangelical men in our day, has largely lost. The Gospel is sometimes described as "Salvation for lost and ruined sinners through 'Jesus Christ and Him crucified.'" It is this indeed; but it is salvation effected by God the King, asserting his claim and re-establishing his royal rights over his deceived and rebellious creature. He had winked at the times of their ignorance, but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent. Royally and generously his grace reigns through righteousness toward those who repent and turn to God; while with unflinching righteousness He puts in force inexorable law against him who being often reproved hardeneth his neck: he shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy.

The history of man is intelligible only in the light of the Kingdom of God. It is the story of a kingdom committed to man in Adam—lost by him to Satan—recovered by the second Adam, "through grief and pain extreme,"—and with infinite increase of majesty and glory rendered back by man in Christ to God (1 Cor. xv.).

It has recently been said that the message of the Twelve in the Gospels was different from that in the Acts. Certainly it was. "Jesus and the Resurrection" could not be preached until the resurrection had taken place. But before no less than after his resurrection Jesus was God's King. And the Gospel preached after the resurrection, no less than previous to it, was the Good Tidings of the Reign of God. Not even the salvation of sinners, but the glory of GOD, is the first object of the incarnation, death, resurrection, and return of the Lord Jesus. The definition of the Gospel as "Salvation for lost and ruined sinners through Jesus Christ, and Him crucified," leaves out its backbone, the Kingdom of God, unless, indeed, it be remembered that Jesus Christ is Jesus the Anointed King. The Gospel of Christ is the Gospel of God's Kingdom and his King. The Apostle terms it, "The Good Tidings of the Glory of the blessed God." The creature is blessed when and only when God is glorified. PETER STERRY'S remarkable sermons on Matt. xviii. 3—"Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the Kingdom of Heaven," bear this admirable title—"The Rise, Race, and Royalty of the Kingdom of God in the Soul of Man." That conception of the Gospel deserves the earnest study of all its preachers. Not forgetting also the sublime prophecy of Daniel vii. 27—"And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom; and all dominions shall serve and obey Him."

The First Epistle of Peter.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XI.—THE PRECIOUS CORNER-STONE.

1 PETER vi. 4—12.

PETER, "surnamed Cephas, which is by interpretation a stone," has much to say about his Master as the stone; and weaves together into a beautiful mosaic the many allusions, which convey this aspect of his character and work, sparkling as jewels on the page of Scripture.

In the hieroglyphed chamber in Egypt, where Jacob lay a-dying, his mind reverted to the massive stones which were strewn over his native land, and which on one occasion had figured so strangely in his dreams, and he spake of the coming Shepherd as being the "Stone of Israel." Moses, in his swansong, when bidding the people ascribe greatness to God, alleged as the reason, "He is the Rock." And David, in the last of his Psalms, opened his exquisite delineation of the true King by saying, "The Rock of Israel spake to me."

New interest was given to the same thought by an incident which is said to have occurred in the building of Solomon's Temple. The stones were shaped at a distance from the sacred site, that no sound of chisel or stone-saw might be heard during the building of that house for God.

As the palm of the desert, or the oak of the forest, grows noiselessly into perfect maturity and beauty, so did that noble pile crown the summit of Zion. But on one occasion a stone was brought up by the straining oxen, which refused to fit into any of the rising walls. And, after repeated attempts to dispose of it, it was placed by itself in a retired spot, and was soon forgotten, perhaps even covered by a luxuriant growth of weeds. At last, as the building neared completion, it was discovered that a stone of special form would be required to knit two walls, and fill a particular corner. The need suggested the forgotten and rejected bit of masonry, which was lying still where it had been discarded. "The stone which the builders refused became the head-stone of the corner." This incident is said to have suggested that reference of the venerable Psalm, which is quoted by the Lord as applying to Himself, and is referred to in at least two other places in the New Testament besides this (Ps. cxviii. 22; Matt. xxi. 42; Acts iv. 11; Eph. ii. 20).

In a slightly different form, the same thought re-appears in Isaiah. The men of his time were full of the project of a foreign alliance as the best means of bolstering up the kingdom, just then in dire peril of dissolution, through internal dissension and threatening invasion. God, by the mouth of his prophet, compared the attempt, and the peace it gave, to making a covenant with death, and a hiding-place of lies, and foretold the breaking of a storm, in which none of these devices should avail to shield their inventors. And then, in answer to the dread with which his own people foreboded the fury of that hail, and the overflowing of those waters, He said that He would lay in Zion, for a foundation, "a stone—a tried stone—a precious corner stone, a sure foundation;" and that he who believed should not make haste.

Daniel adds one further link to the chain of holy thought, when he likens the kingdom of God to the quarrying of a mighty stone in some lone mountain rent. Though no hands are engaged upon it, it assumes shape, disintegrates itself from its rocky home, and begins to roll down the mountain side crushing everything obstructing its path. If that stone is for a moment still, and a man falls over it, he is broken and maimed. It is "a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence." If, on the other hand, it falls on some passer-by it grinds him to powder. In many a highland valley, standing out amid the green grass, on which the sheep peacefully browse in summer, there are mighty masses of rock which have leapt from the face of the overhanging cliffs. Woe to any man who had been standing beneath at the moment of their fall! Battered—demolished—ground to powder. These are solemn words. But they are adapted from the prophecies of Daniel by the Master Himself (Dan. ii. 34; Matt. xxi. 44).

I. LET US TRY TO UNDERSTAND THE CONCEPTION OF THE PARAGRAPH.—It is full of changing metaphor; image piled on image; thought sliding into thought, and rising in noble sequence to a pitch of sublime magnificence. On a massive bed of Rock, there lies a stone, which is fitted to be a bond of union, joining lines of building, which had run in opposite directions, making "both one." It is not only a stone, it is a corner stone (Eph. ii. 20).

Behold that stone; God looks on it with his sevenfold omniscience, and his hands have engraved on it rare symbols of mystery and beauty, such as no skilled human hand could design (Zech. iii. 9). The carved lily work of Jachin and Boaz even could not vie with that heavenly workmanship. How manifestly is this stone both elect and precious. Jesus was elect before all worlds, as the organ of creation, the channel of redemption, the head of the new race, the foundation-stone of the Church. And as to his dignity and worth, He is beyond all price, the pearl of inestimable value, the Koh-i-noor of heaven, the fairest among ten thousand, the altogether lovely, the jewel of God's heart.

Next there might be imagined an altercation among the builders. Though it lies there ready to their hand, they deliberately reject God's prepared foundation. Some are inclined to admire the carving, or to praise the situation selected for it. But more criticise it, or deride it, or account it as only suitable to carry part of their scaffolding. And so after some discussion, the builders, wise in their own judgment, pass away. "Disallowed indeed of men"! And then, without foundations, they begin an erection, which is built on a seam of sand, and is destined to exist, an unfinished monument of their folly.

But God's purpose cannot be foiled. If men will not build on his foundation, yet there shall still stand on it a structure to his eternal praise. Here is a marvel indeed! For, lo! the stone lives. "A living stone." "It is full of eyes." Nay, more, it is attractive as magnetised iron; it draws to itself other stones, dead, heavy, hard, which are lying all around, and as one after another they slowly approach it, they also begin to live. "To whom coming, a living stone, ye also, as living stones." But even here the marvel does not stay. As in the prophet's vision, bone after bone disentangled itself from the heaps of the slain, and built itself up into the order and symmetry of the human frame, so here stone follows stone, as if gathered by unseen hands, and together they build up a house, the fabric of which is not material, but spiritual; because, as the stones have passed into life, they have dropped their grosser nature, and have become etherealised into a spirituality of essence, befitting to the constituent parts of "a spiritual house." God's home is not in the high and lofty place of the heavens, nor in any house built by man, but in the structure composed of saved and saintly spirits, once gross, material, dead as stones, but now, by contact with Jesus Christ, made pure, holy, and, in the deepest sense, spiritually-minded. "This is my rest for ever; here will I dwell; for I have desired it."

But in such a temple there must be priests; and in this also the Divine purpose cannot fail. Those who were once but as the rubble of the hillside, are not only constituted part of a spiritual fabric, but by a rapid change in the thought, they are represented as performing priestly functions, an holy priesthood, clad in the required garments, for holiness and beauty. And since a priesthood must have somewhat to offer, and these occupants of the true temple cannot appear before the altar or tread the inner shrine, with empty hands, there are sacrifices prepared; but (and the thought changes once more) these sacrifices are not material any more than they need to be propitiatory, since the one all-sufficient sacrifice for sin has been offered once for all; but they are spiritual, and consist in the consecrated lives and jubilant praises of those who have been raised from the dust to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God, by Jesus Christ.

Nor is that all; those who are thus associated with Christ are identified with Him in the esteem and love of God. In the one verse, we are told, that our Lord is precious in the esteem of the Father—his beloved; his darling; his only one. But in the original Greek of a following verse, correctly rendered in the R.V., this preciousness is assigned to us; for you therefore which believe is the preciousness. Not only is Jesus precious to us, as our beloved, and friend, but his worth and beauty in the mind of God are passed on to us who believe; so that our dull common natures flash in the excellence of his loveliness. Yes, and we are changed into his likeness from glory to glory. Thus the fishermen of Galilee are discovered in the lowest tier of the foundations of the New Jerusalem, as precious stones. And what is true of them is in a measure true of us all. Iron touches magnetised iron, and becomes magnetic. Stones touch the stone, and become jewels. Thus God manufactures his stores of precious stones, the facets of which, cut here in pain, shall flash for ever in the light of his own glory yonder.

And now, ere we turn away, let us look once more at the disobedient and disbelieving builders. Some of them have stumbled over the Divine preparation, and are hopelessly maimed; others wander out on to the dark mountains, where they will meet with many a disaster, falling down precipices, or otherwise overtaken with death. And their proud building shall stand as a second Babel, for the laughter of the world. They are confounded indeed, a fate which is impossible for those who believe on God's elect foundation. Alas! that men should abuse the very means which God had prepared for their salvation and blessedness?

II. THE PERSONAL APPLICATION. Ye are an elect race (R.V.).—There are elect races in the world, standing in the sunlit circle of civilisation, not for themselves only, but for others. The larger the privilege, the greater the responsibility. This is the Divine method of government through the selection of nations or races, which are specially gifted and endowed, that they may be better qualified to help and save their fellows. And the position of the Israelite nation, to whom pertained "the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants," was expressly entrusted to them, that through them God might bless all the nations of the earth. And during this period of rejection the Christian Church has been summoned to this glorious work of becoming the channel for the Divine blessing to mankind.

A royal priesthood.—These two offices were jealously kept apart in Israel, and when Uzzah attempted to combine them he was driven from the Temple with the brand of leprosy on his brow. But in Christ they blend. "He is a Priest upon his throne" (Zech. vi. 13). And all his followers are constituted priests and kings (Rev. i. 6). As priests we worship in near proximity to God; as kings we rule over men with a rule born of love, which blesses and saves.

An holy nation.—This expression, like the former, comes from the ancient covenant into which God entered with Israel at Sinai (Exod. xix. 2). The people failed in keeping it, and, as a nation, they have been temporarily cast aside; but the individuals, whether Jews or Greeks, who have accepted Christ, constitute in their vast hosts another nation, which outnumbers all others, and lives throughout the world, obeying a higher morality, the subjects of a loftier Monarch, citizens of the city which can never pass away.

A people for God's own possession.—Love yearns for proprietorship; nor can the heart of God be satisfied unless it can speak of some as its own. Oh, happy they who have obeyed his summons, and have made a complete surrender of themselves to God! He has already taken them for his own possession. Enclosed as a garden; tilled as a field; inhabited as a home; guarded, kept, used, loved, with an emphasis none others know. Nor is there anything in God Himself which is not at the disposal of those who hold nothing back from Him.

How can we repay Him for all that He has done for us? When we compare what we are, with what we were. Once in darkness, now in marvellous light. Once not included among the people of God, now accounted as part of them. Once without hope of mercy, now the happy recipients of untold mercy. What shall we say? Is it not our duty to praise Him, not only with our life, but in our lives, casting our crowns at his feet, and bearing our part in the song of adoration, which from all creation breaks around his throne. Let us show forth his praise!

Mr. Moody's New Plan.

IN a recent interview with a representative of the Chicago Tribune, concerning his new plan for Christian work, Mr. Moody said:—

"I find hundreds of families in cities like this never coming in contact with churches or their representatives. The bulk of our church members are taken up with their own household and business cares, and unless some persons are set apart and trained for this work I do not see how it can be done. It seems to me that we ought to have a corps of men and women who shall make this their business.

"My idea is not to originate new church enterprises, but rather to fill up the present churches. Men who frequent saloons and such places will never be reached by Sunday meetings. Even if they strayed into such meetings, any impression which is made is all dissipated before next Sunday. If we are going to reach these classes we must have some places open every day in the week. There is a class of people that practically have no homes, and they go out in the evening into some places where they have genial companions and amusement. This is a source of vice and crime. My thought has been to establish places of meeting open every night for these people, where they might find some up-lifting influence. Then they will find their way to the churches. There is far more demand for trained lay workers than is commonly apprehended. This morning's mail brought me eight applications for such workers, and I could place fifty if I had the proper persons to recommend."

"What studies do you propose shall be pursued in your training-school?" asked the reporter.

"Mainly three. First, I shall aim to have given a sufficient knowledge of the Bible; so far as may be, a practical mastery of it. Second, I would have workers trained in everything that will give them access practically to the souls of the people, especially the neglected classes. Third, I would give a great prominence to the study of music, both vocal and instrumental. I believe that music is one of the most powerful agents either for good or for evil."

"How are the workers to be maintained while they are in the school?"

"There are few people who have developed any fitness for Christian service who have not either some means of their own or some friends who would be glad to assist them in obtaining higher fitness, or whom the churches to which they belong would not willingly assist for a time by their gifts, in qualifying themselves for a life of service. I see no practical difficulty in the way of their support any more than in the way of trained nurses."

"What is your idea of affording women equal facilities with men for this work?"

"I have found women to be equally as effective workers as men. Women can only reach women in many cases. Besides this, a great many of these women will become the wives of Christian men, and be mothers of children, and can be, in their way, better helps to their husbands and better trainers of their children by the education for Christian work which they received in this school."

"What did you mean by saying that the 'ministers are often educated away from the people?'"

"That there is a large class of the community whom the ordinarily educated minister does not and cannot reach. For instance, there is a large class of mechanics; they are busy through the day, and cannot be seen except at their shops. In the evenings they go to the saloons and places of amusement. None of the churches reach them. Since they will not go into the churches, let us go into the highways and hedges, and so compel them to come in. Again, there is a large class of mothers in such a city as this, who, if they are to be reached at all, it must be by carrying the Gospel to them, and by cottage meetings in their homes."

"Did you mean any assault upon the educated ministers, as such?"

"Not at all. I believe they have their place, and are necessary to church life and growth. But there is a class of people whom no man can reach successfully except one of their own number. Let me give you a matter of my own experience. When I was in London I went by invitation, one Sunday, to what is known as the 'Bird Fair.' I had never been there before. When I was down there I was asked to preach. I found a great company of people with almost every kind of animal for sale. I spoke as best I could. I told them a lot of interesting stories. After I got through, one of their own number who had been converted took the stand and began to address them. He was familiar with their own dialect; he knew their habits; he had the inside track to their hearts. They stood there and shed tears while he spoke in his simple fashion."

"Are you trying to establish what is practically a new denomination?"

"No. On the other hand, I think we have too many denominations already, and my only effort has been rather to unite existing denominations than to make any new ones. I see no reason why the Presbyterian, and the Congregational to which I belong, should not be united; they hold the same doctrines and are separated only by a trifling matter of church government."

"Have you seen any workers actually developed by such methods as you are here putting into operation?"

"Yes; but not as if they had had such opportunities as are now proposed to furnish. For instance, in my school at Mount Hermon about forty or fifty efficient young men have been trained for service, and our great difficulty has been that there is such a demand for such workers in the churches that they are all tempted away from our training school before finishing their course, by the opportunities of immediate work and ample compensation."

"Have you any assurance that competent teachers will come to your aid?"

"Abundant. For instance, Dr. Gordon, a leading Baptist of Boston; Prof. Weidner, a leading Lutheran; Dr. Moorehead, United Presbyterian, of Xenia; and others."

"What provision have you in buildings?"

"We have already three good houses for women workers on La Salle Avenue. The buildings for men will be done by Dec. 1, and in the two we can then accommodate about 150."

"Has it been your experience that this kind of work alienates from the churches?"

"No. On the contrary, I believe I am myself proof that such work rather draws men to the churches. I believe I am of more value to them, as I have more experience in this kind of work."

BURTON-ON-TRENT Y.M.C.A.—The second annual report tells of cheering progress in the development of unsectarian spiritual agencies in the town. Hearty support has been received from friends of all denominations, and the mid-day prayer-meeting has been well sustained. Much of the prejudice by which the earliest efforts of the Association were hampered has now been overcome, while there is little doubt that its numerous organisations will be strengthened by the recent appointment of Mr. J. W. Wright as general secretary. That there is ample scope for the operations of the Association is patent to all who know Burton, and the third year's work is begun in prayerful hope of blessing on an ever-increasing scale. The Association rooms are at 32, Union-street.

MORE OF GOD.

"Wait on the Lord continually."—The Christian Foreign Missions' Motto.

IT is a healthy sign when those engaged in the prosecution of Foreign Missions are continually on their faces before God. Sad would it be if we were ever to become satisfied with the past, however successful; or were to think we had no mistakes to remedy, and that God had nothing more to teach us, however abundant the proofs that hitherto He had signally blessed us.

Doubtless, we can learn much from one another. If we will, from foes as well as from friends. The best medicine may be extracted from the bitterest herb. But after all, the main thing—the infinitely important thing—is to get on our faces before God—and stay there. Whatever we hear, whatever we read, let us bring it to God, and test it by his Word. There is danger, so it seems to me, lest we should be swayed too much merely by the opinions of men, and especially by phrases, which catch the ear, influence our thoughts, and possibly mould our lives, while they are, though well meant, very likely empty and misleading.

For example, as an argument against a missionary wearing the native dress, &c., one hears such a phrase as this: "I am an Englishman; I came to China, or India, as an Englishman; therefore let me be an Englishman." A fair sounding phrase. It catches the ear. It makes an impression. We say "Yes, that is a straightforward, common-sense line to take." From that moment it is the line we take—the thing is settled. "I am an Englishman; I came to China as an Englishman; and I will be an Englishman. No question about my being on the right ground here."

BUT AM I ON RIGHT GROUND?

Is it quite certain? I am an Englishman, it is true, but did I come to China as an Englishman? Did my Master send me with the precious Gospel as an Englishman; or did He send me as a man to my fellow men, as brother to brother? How did He come Himself when He came on earth? Surely the fact of my being an Englishman, and my brother a Chinaman, is a mere accident—to be lost sight of and forgotten. The very reasoning which, if I came as an Englishman, would require me to keep up a distinction, now, coming as brother to brother, pleads with me to break it down. Is not this the true ground to take? Yes, in spirit we are all agreed that it is; but in practice, too, as far as may be. I thank God for the gladness of soul it brings with it.

Again, we have a feeling that, perhaps, there is room for a little more self-denial—greater simplicity in the conduct of our missions. When the cry is raised "Cheap missions! I don't believe in cheap missions," it catches our ear. What if missions ought to be cheap? What if missionary stipends ought to be low? (for that is the point of the phrase). If missionaries and native agents are hirelings, the quality and quantity of whose work depends upon the amount of salary they are paid for doing it, then certainly the less we hear of cheap missions the better.

But if they are men, who do not work for pay; if they are men, who have given themselves freely to God for his service, and are quite content with nothing beyond the simple necessaries for life and for health, may not missions be effective, and yet be "cheap"? Nay, though it is quite true that God's people should give liberally, and count it an honour to minister abundantly to the missionary's needs, yet it behoves us, the whole staff of workers, whether at home or abroad, seeing the pressing immediate need of thousands more workers in these heathen lands, and knowing that the more simple we live, the larger will be the number who are able to come, whereas if we live expensively the number must be curtailed—I say it behoves us, and surely it is our privilege, without going to injurious extremes, to exercise a beneficent self-denial, whilst unnecessary indulgence would be our disgrace.

"CHEAP MISSIONS."

No one, with the Bible before him, can suppose that less souls will be won to Christ because his servants live too simply, and yet what have we in consequence? Why, "Cheap missions." "I don't believe in cheap missions." It sounds fair enough. Surely we are taking high ground here. And yet, perhaps, if, instead of adopting a popular cry, we really look into it; if we consider, on the one hand, how little it costs to procure good food and clothing, and all the missionary needs; and, on the other hand, how vast and numberless are the districts full of living dying souls; left, still left, because the money is lacking wherewith to send God's servants to them,—shall we not be startled and ashamed that such sad words as these escaped our lips? For do we not see that cheap missions—in other words, bands of missionary workers who are content to live inexpensively, in order that "more labourers" may come to these long-neglected fields—may be, in the present distress, the Church's glory, and that anything else would be her shame.

We do well, then, to be on our guard, and listen for the voice of God rather than to the voice of men.

But let us remember, too, that God does not lead all his servants in the same way; and that, whilst in our position and circumstances it may be right for us to do one thing, it may be right for our brother, in his position and circumstances, to do something else. Therefore, while it behoves us to take heed how we hear, it behoves us no less to take heed how we judge.

And now I had finished were it not that one other thought—the same with which I began—presses upon me. Missionary work (indeed all work for God) is beset with perplexities and difficulties; enemies entrench themselves in our midst and round about us. What are we to do? Get more of God. All we want is more of God. We have our congresses, and conferences, and committee meetings, wherein we discuss, and talk, and try to find solutions to the difficult questions that trouble us. But, after all, the solution—what is it? Is it not a very simple one? What is it we really want? Is it not more of God?

"THIS HAS BEEN SAID BEFORE."

But can we not do more than say? The people of old, when sorely pressed, and in utmost perplexity, "gathered themselves together," not to talk, but to "fast" and "to ask of the Lord." "Jehoshaphat...set himself to seek the Lord." King and people, there they stand, all of them, "before the Lord, with their little ones, their wives, and their children." Ah! that (in all humility I would suggest) is what we want to do. Missionary presidents, councils, committees, members, subscribers, gleaners, workers, missionaries, and native Christians, men and women, aye, and our children too—let us "proclaim a fast," and "set" ourselves to seek the Lord. "We have no might...neither know we what to do, BUT our eyes are unto Thee." That is enough. Only let us meet our difficulties, fight our opposers and traducers in this simple way; and lo, to the unerring eye of Faith they have become—the whole multitude of them—piles of "dead bodies fallen to the earth." Oh, after all, how powerless to hurt! But to help, powerful indeed. It will take us days to "carry away" our "spoil," and eternity to enjoy it. Ah! how true—perplexities, difficulties, trials, foes, when "we have no might;... but our eyes are unto Thee" become the Christians' greatest blessings. And it will not end there. "The fear of the Lord was on all the kingdoms of the countries, when they had heard."

Yes, when "the inhabitants of one [missionary society] shall go to another, saying, "Let us go speedily to intreat the face of the Lord, and to seek the Lord of Hosts"—"in those days" men "out of all languages of the nations" shall take hold of our skirts, saying, "We will go with you, for we have heard God is with you."

And whilst others are going to seek the Lord, and getting filled with joy and blessing—what about myself, individually? Shall I lag behind? Shall I be left out? Nay—and this is the main thing—"I will go also."

COLONIAL AND CONTINENTAL CHURCH SOCIETY.

THE Colonial and Continental Church Society has passed its sixty-fifth anniversary. Its record is as truly excellent as its age is mature. Founded for the purpose of evangelising in the colonies, it has been admirably developed with a view to meeting the spiritual needs of British tourists and residents on the Continent of Europe.

The annual report, recently published, gives a good idea of the important services which the Society renders to evangelical religion. Grants are made for the preservation of Gospel lightstands in many dark places. In the colonies, the hands are sustained of not a few labourers, whose spheres are hundreds of miles in extent. The Society holds, or largely influences, about 140 chaplaincies on the Continent, and 200 stations in the colonies. In Quebec the Society's grant goes to maintaining schools in places where Protestants would otherwise have to send their children to Romish schools. A varied work is supported in all parts of the Canadian Dominion, the western Indians not being neglected. Ever since the disestablishment of the Church in Jamaica, the Society has assisted in the support of missionary clergymen, besides continuing to assist the schools. Throughout Australia, also, the operations are such as are highly appreciated by the friends of pure religion.

Coming to the Continental work, we note that the Society's agents at Amsterdam, Bilbao, and other places, send home encouraging reports from time to time. Sailors in foreign ports reap considerable advantage. Rev. A. Rust, of Dunkirk, writes: "I trust the day is not far distant when all the paying-off ports between the Elbe and Brest may have Homes under Christian and British management to welcome and protect seamen coming from distant lands. Till this is the case, thousands of our seamen will be entirely deprived of the ministrations of the Gospel." The result of many a Continental holiday this summer has doubtless been, not only restored vigour of body and mind, but also renewed spiritual energy and comfort, through the activity of the Society's agents. The secretary, Rev. Canon Hurst, in a recent circular, says: "The Society never had a better opportunity of extending its operations and increasing its usefulness than at the present time. The committee are urgently requested to take up several new and most important stations, and nothing but want of means could justify them in hesitating." The offices of the Society are at 9, Serjeants' Inn, Fleet-street, E.C.

NURSES IN STOCKHOLM.—Last week's issue of The Queen contains an interesting account of the Sophia Home for Nurses, opened in Stockholm, under the fostering care of the good Queen of Sweden. The object of the Home is to give instruction to nurses who may serve in private houses, infirmaries, &c., and to provide a retreat for those suffering from ill-health or overwork. There is an infirmary attached, and the Home is described as in every respect a pattern establishment.

For the Young.

WHAT ITALIAN GIRLS DID.

ON March 29, 1888, there appeared in a well-known weekly paper an article by "Adelaide Rosa," written from Milan, Italy. I feel sure the extracts from that article will interest your young readers, and I hope encourage them to put their "brave, young shoulders to the wheel, and give a bit of help," as an old Scotchman put it. "Adelaide Rosa" says:—

In the January number for 1885 of Our Own Magazine, I read an account of what certain young girls did for poor children. It was as follows:—

"In December, 1879, two girls of ten years old agreed to spend some of their pocket money in buying some winsey and flannel, and to make petticoats for five poor children they knew, to be given at Christmas. In December, 1880, three other little girls joined them, and eleven petticoats and two little dresses were made. In 1881 four cousins of one of the girls, living in a distant town, heard of the plan, and each made two petticoats, so that year twenty-one petticoats were distributed, as well as seven pairs of knitted socks and five frocks. In 1882 girls in two other towns did the same thing, and forty-seven petticoats, twelve frocks, and nineteen pairs of socks were made by girls under fourteen, and all of them at school or working with a governess at home, so they had not much spare time. During the past year there have been girls in many places working in this way, and all from the idea of those two little girls in 1879. Don't you wonder how many will be made in 1885? N.B.—There will be one more at least, if you will adopt the same plan and set to work at once.—Fannie E. Turner."

This fact moved me, and I translated the brief account, and had it published in L' Amico dei Fanciulli, of Florence, with an appeal to the youthful Italians, in the hope that they might imitate the example of the English girls in doing good. At that time I had a Sunday-school of twelve scholars, to whom I regularly distributed L' Amico dei Fanciulli. When they read this account they were surprised, and, meditating on it for three months, one Sunday they said to me: "Teacher, we have read what the English girls did. Could we not also follow their example, and show in this way that your appeal has not been in vain?" Encouraged by what the English children did, they also wished to do something of the same kind.

Then we are told that in June, 1885, eight of these scholars met to organise and discuss a little union, which they named "The Benevolent Society of the Wesleyan Sunday-school." And the little Society was commenced with these eight members. At first, being quite poor themselves, they found it very difficult to get any money. But they persevered, and in a few weeks had collected several francs, with which they bought material to make small articles for children still poorer than themselves. In the first year this young society collected 72·53 francs, and in the second 101·35 francs. And we can well understand what charming little garments could be made by busy fingers, with material bought for that sum. Some of the clothing thus made was sent to the orphans who had lost their parents by cholera, at Messina, Palermo, and Cagliari.

The numbers of the Society are increasing, and every two or three months they have a special little meeting of their own. Some of the members can scarcely believe that their halfpennies have so multiplied as to form such a respectable sum, and greatly do they rejoice when they see the fruit of their many little sacrifices turned into useful garments!

The editor of the paper from which I quote says: "Ten years ago, in English soil, a little deed of love, or what we may call a seed grain, was sown by two little Christian children. Year by year it grew silently and secretly, until the wind which bloweth where it listeth wafted its fruit across the waters to a tiny Italian garden, in which, in like manner, it took root. And there to-day it is growing and flourishing!"

I think many of us will feel ashamed of ourselves when we read of what these poor little Italian girls have done, and remember how little we are doing for others. But why not set to work at once and see what we can do?

Let me, in closing, tell you a little incident that gave me much pleasure: Last autumn, a young girl was asking me how she could best make use of some clothing she had made for the poor, during some six or seven months spent at the seaside on account of her mother's health. Warm frocks of various sizes, strong petticoats, and comfortable well-knitted boys' socks, filled a good-sized travelling box.

"I know a busy clergyman's wife, in one of the very poorest parts of London," I said, "who will be charmed to give away these things, and will do it herself, so you may be sure they go to the right sort of people. But why do you always use brown material?" I asked, as I saw that all the things were made of some shade of brown, varying from bright russet brown, reddish brown, or dark sepia tones of brown.

My young show-woman laughed heartily, as she answered, "You would never guess, I am sure. But, to tell the truth, I have a sweet-tooth, and though I am nearly seventeen years old, I am a perfect baby for chocolate. About Easter, I heard Mr. Arrowsmith say in an address to young people, that it often grieved him to think how much the young spent on themselves, and how much of their pocket-money went for chocolate and other such things."

"And you felt that the cap fitted," I said.

"I did, indeed," she answered. "I cannot tell you the other things that Mr. Arrowsmith mentioned, for I was so struck by that one word, 'chocolate' in the list, and, remembering how much I spent on it, that I did not seem to hear the rest. But, as he told of some of the terrible suffering, last winter, amongst poor children in London, I determined to do something for them. Result—the material for these things is all bought out of what I call my 'chocolate money,' and it is my fancy to always use browns, that being the colour of chocolate, you know."

I wish you could have seen my young friend's bright face as she spoke; and then she merrily told me of her difficulty, at first, in denying herself the luxury in which she had so long indulged. "But I used to say to myself," she said, "'Brown chocolate versus brown wool and winseys, which shall it be?' and I am glad to say that the two w's gained the day."

I leave you to point the moral of this little story for yourselves, only begging that, if the cap fits, you will put it on. If you do so, I feel sure there will be "chocolate-money" and "sweet-money," spent where "the returns" will yield far more pleasure and profit.

TRUST.

Cling to thy Father's hand,
And like a child be led:
For 'tis thy Father's land
Thy happy footsteps tread.

Yes, He who ruleth all
Creation vast and fair,
Deems not thy cares too small
For his Almighty care.

Art thou not willing, then,
On such a Guide to rest;
Not asking how or when,
Because He knoweth best.

But this and that looks drear;
It may, to human sight:
Thy Father leads; don't fear,
With Him there is no night.

The foes that seek thy harm
Are under his control;
The ills that thee alarm
Are part of his great whole.

The plan of all my life,
Is marked by his design,
Enough; this ends all strife,
His will be done, not mine.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., Dec. 1, Rev. i. 1—8; Mon., Dec. 2, Rev. i. 9—20; Tues., Dec. 3, Rev. ii. 1—17; Wed., Dec. 4, Rev. ii. 18—29; Thurs., Dec. 5, Rev. iii. 1—13; Fri., Dec. 6, Rev. iii. 14—22; Sat., Dec. 7, Rev. iv. 1—11.

MR. NEWTON JONES, secretary of the Evangelistic Mission Children's Service Band, has completed a fourteen days' mission at Middlesboro', four of the largest churches having been thrown open for his use.

MR. T. LEWIS SAYER has been conducting a children's mission, extending from Nov. 11 to 22, at the York-road Chapel Sunday-school, Lambeth. The meetings have been well attended, and the interest has been sustained throughout.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. James Tyler. St. George's Free Church, to Nov. 30; Church Schools, Stocksteads, Dec. 1—8, at 7.30. Mr. T. Lewis Sayer, Middleton-road Congregational Church, Dalston, to Dec. 6; Athenæum, Camden-road, every Sun., at 3.15; Wimbledon, Dec. 11; Upminster, Dec. 13. Mr. E. Collier, Deptford Ragged School, to Dec. 1. Mr. H. Hutchinson, St. Paul's Church Schools, Burslem, to Dec. 2. Mr. Alfred Armitage, Congregational Lecture Hall, New Wandsworth, Dec. 1—4; Coatbridge, N.B., seven or ten days' mission, from Dec. 9.

A VITAL CHOICE.

AN INCIDENT OF DR. PENTECOST'S MISSION.

A YOUNG woman came to the meetings for several nights, and on one occasion remained behind talking with her Sabbath-school teacher who had seen her and detained her. Nearly everybody had left the church. Dr. Pentecost was leaving, but as he walked down the aisle toward the front door, he noticed these two in conversation and stopped to speak a word to the young woman. He asked if she were a Christian, to which she answered, "No." "Do you wish to be one?" "Yes." "Why do you not give yourself to Christ?" She said she couldn't. "Why not?" She didn't know. Then the Doctor said he was sure she was cleaving to something sinful, which she was not willing to surrender, for he perceived that she had an intelligent knowledge of the way of life. He asked her, "Is there not some one thing that you know to be standing between you and Christ, and which you are not willing to surrender?" At this pointed question the young woman, who had seemed much agitated during the interview, much to the surprise of her friends, who were present, turned deadly pale and fell into a dead faint. She was with some little trouble restored and taken home by her Sunday-school teacher.

The next night she was not back; the following night, however, she came again, but made no move. Again she came, and was the very first one to leave her seat and come forward in token of her surrender to Christ. The cause of her faint was told by her to a friend that night. She had been to the meeting and was deeply convicted of sin; but she was engaged to be married to an unconverted young man, and she was afraid that it would not be pleasing to him if she became a Christian, knowing that "he cared for none of these things." Another day passed but she was afraid to take the step and possibly imperil her earthly happiness.

That night she went to sleep and dreamed that she went to the meeting and that she lingered after all others had gone, and that Dr. Pentecost had come to her and charged her with keeping back from Christ out of regard to a human love. When therefore she saw Dr. Pentecost coming towards her, she said she almost fainted; but knowing that it was not his custom to go among the people in the audience she did not think he would speak to her. Imagine her surprise when he walked straight up to her, and practically asked her if she was not rejecting Jesus for the sake of a human love. So exactly was her dream fulfilled that she was overwhelmed with the coincidence, believing that it was God's hand. All the next day she struggled with this matter, and the second day decided to give up all for Christ. So she confessed Christ and then communicated with her friend, saying plainly that her choice of the Saviour was deliberate and for ever. She has become an active winner of souls since.

ISABELLA MACPHERSON:

The Story of a Devoted Life.

By her Brother, Rev. JOHN MACPHERSON, Dundee.

CHAPTER V.—LIFE IN THE SLUMS.

FOR a year after her conversion Isabella remained at home, mainly occupied in private teaching; while her leisure hours were spent either in household duties or in strenuous efforts to promote the cause of Christ. It was a brief but helpful apprenticeship for a wider sphere. A girlhood of more than common brightness, rendered doubly beautiful by the grace of God, was joyfully laid on the altar of the Lord; she was now well equipped for service.

In the summer of 1861, she removed to Dundee to keep house for her brother, the present writer. Leaving home for the first time, her parting with friends was an ordeal severely trying to her affectionate nature. Her father spoke as a dying man, and bade her farewell till the heavens should be no more. When, as from the brink of eternity, he counselled her to cleave to the Lord and serve the God of her fathers, and blessed her, saying she would never again see his face in life, the scene was one of indescribable tenderness. Weeping bitterly, she tore herself away from her dying father's presence, and the home of her affections; and, as he said, she saw his face no more.

The duties of her new position were discharged with admirable diligence, fidelity, and prudence. Her housekeeping she ever regarded as her first Christian work. Nor was she slow in putting her hand to the work of winning souls, especially in connection with the evangelistic and home mission efforts of our congregation.

One of our open-air preaching stations in Dundee was the corner of Hilltown and Rosebank Streets. Here, in 1861, I found

A PULPIT ON AN OUTSIDE STONE STAIR.

The poor people gathered to the preaching, the first effect of which was visible in the washed faces and mended garments of the hearers. By and by they pressed nearer, began to shake hands, and sometimes drop a tear, with the remark, "It's a grand thing to be saved, Sir." "It is. Are you saved?"

"That's a serious question, Sir," is the truly Scottish reply. "Have you not accepted Christ?"

"I canna say that, Sir." "What's the hindrance?" A shake of the head and a gush of warm tears make answer. The Holy Spirit was working, and souls were saved at that corner.

The recent religious awakening had provided us with plenty of workers, and we began a mission. A little weaving factory in the street was rented; the old looms were sold for firewood; and the room was fitted up for a meeting-house. Soon the place became too narrow for the work, and we purchased a piece of ground on which a mission-hall was built. Here we carried on a Sabbath-school, a day-school, evening classes, evangelistic services, a penny bank, and, in short, every kind of good and useful work. In the course of years we built a church, in which a congregation was gathered. Thus a thoroughly organised home mission was constituted and vigorously worked.

The field of labour was a wilderness full of briars and thorns. Poverty, squalor, drunkenness, vice of every kind, utter godlessness, reigned in many a court and lane. The vicissitudes and trials of the mission are too long a story to tell here: but the blessing of God rested on it. Begun in an outpouring of the Holy Spirit, it was eminently a soul-saving work; and a soul-saving work it has happily continued to be. It was on this field that Isabella Macpherson began her work in 1861: and here she continued to labour for seven-and-twenty years. Let us visit

THE SCENE OF ISABELLA'S LABOURS.

A single court will show the character of the district. A dying man, who claims me for his pastor, though I do not know him, desires to see me. Our visitor will show us the way. It is Saturday evening, and there is already an unusual stir: there is always something unusual in the air of the district on the last night of the week. There is a general cheeriness: the week's work is done; wages are in hand; comforts for the Day of Rest are to be procured: a genial, hilarious spirit prevails. Even the penniless are excited and hopefu ; they may share in the good that is going; in any case, they feel justified in making provision for the morrow by recourse to the pawnshop. Everybody is dramming, the first stage of which is marked by noisy jubilance, and a generous treating all round. The most besotted creature in the slums thinks that Saturday night, the Sabbath also if possible, should be a season of joy and goodwill. Alas! for the form and the fruit of it all. If you keep your eyes open you will be surprised at the sights you see—the incidents, curious, humorous, pathetic, you encounter in the course of an hour or two.

A trumpet-like voice sounds in our ears: "Gather out! gather out!" is the cry. Here is old Charlie with his barrow and "candy": the children are crowding around him with a rag or a bone to be exchanged for a small portion of the coveted sweet. Charlie is a picture: he might pass for a bishop; so solemn is his countenance, and so picturesque his dress. His sleeves long and loose; his chief garment gownlike and flowing; his legs curiously begirt; his shoes antique; his hat as like a shovel as it is like anything else in the world; while his rich, sonorous voice would make the aisles of a cathedral ring. To the slum child Charlie is a merchant prince, his barrow a grand bazaar.

The entrance to the close or court is by a narrow passage which we find blocked by two drunken men. They are shaking hands, and

SWEARING ETERNAL FRIENDSHIP.

In proof of his affection one says, "If God shpares me till the morn, I'll come doon and shee you." The other, not to be behind in generous regard, throws himself into an attitude, and laying the palm of his hand with force on the breast of his friend, responds with equal magnanimity, saying, "And if God does not spare ye till to-morrow, I'll releashe ye from y'r engagement." They part; and one of them with much plaiting of feet enters the passage. Again our way is blocked, the drunken man must have a rest. Leaning his back against the wall and stretching his legs across the passage he soliloquises in a pious strain. "Yes, as sh' hymn says, by George, there's no rest for the weary." He quotes from memory. At length he moves on, and we enter the court.

It is long, narrow, and dingy; the walls on either side are dilapidated and slimy; the gutters are full; doors and windows are sadly out of repair; doorsteps worn away; outside stone stairs ricketty and unsafe; gloomy cellars below; overhanging cabins like crows' nests above; clothes out drying on lines crossing in all directions like spiders' webs; and such strange garments, full, no doubt, of wonderful histories, but you need not eye them closely, except to keep your head from contact.

The court is lively, everybody is in motion: some very drunk, some very sober. A cloud of smoke rises from the gutter: a man on fire! As he rolls, dead drunk, in the mud, a quantity of matches in his pocket, crushed and kindled, send up a horrid smoke. His wife and a female friend are rolling him about and searching him. "Are ye burnin' afore your time, ye brute!" exclaims the wife, with a profane expression; adding, "Whar's your siller?" Raising him up, the women fix him against the wall, one holding his arms cross-like against the stones, while the other searches his pockets for what of the week's wages may have survived the public-house. The money secured, they let him go, and the sot tumbles over in a heap. "Ay, ye're a bonny man," says the wife, as she goes her way; "lie there till ye cool: ye're nae fit to be meat to the cats."

Being on hand-shaking terms with everybody in the court, we are hindered, and again fall in with the drunkard we met in the entry. Knowing that shaking hands with a drunken man is we hurry past him, while he cries after us, "There's the minister fleein', fleein', just like as if the deevil was at his heels."

"Ay, and the deevil is at your heels too, Wullie," says a little sharp-eyed, witch-like old woman, with a large beggar's basket on her arm; "but ye're no fleein' from him, and that is hoo he has trippit y'r heels, and gotten ye fairly intil his hands."

"Ay, but if Jesus Christ cam' doon the closs, Nanz, He would shak' hands wi' me!"

"If Jesus Christ cam' doon the closs, Wullie, ye would get a hecklin'. D'ye think He would lat you haud the bottle to y'r head that wye? Man, y're fechtin' wi' God, and y're sure to get your licks some day. The piper's aye to pay, ye gouk (fool); and he's a gey piper to pay, I'll warrant ye."

A pale-faced girl, of some thirteen years, rushes out of a house, and throws herself down on the stone stair, crying bitterly. She is a good girl, and gives her mother every penny of her wages, week by week. She has managed, in the course of months, to purchase for herself a jacket for the Sabbath-school and the meetings. Her mother bids her take the jacket to the pawnshop; she refuses, and is cruelly beaten—the mark of the poker being only too visible on her arms and shoulders. The poor child trusts in Jesus; but all the same the poker hurts her, and her mother's wrath is hard to bear. Out comes the mother, bound for the pawnshop, with the jacket and other articles of dress in a bundle. The girl sobs: I remonstrate, but in vain.

"How will you answer to God for this conduct?" I demand.

"I'll tak' God in my ain hands," is the graceless reply.

Up the steps from yon cellar comes a lad in company with a soldier, followed by a quiet-looking, decent woman, who is weeping aloud. The boy has enlisted; he her only son, she a widow. She throws her arms around her boy's neck; he struggles to tear himself away. "O my poor laddie! I'll maybe never see you again!" Poor mother! she has sudden visions of war, and wounds, a dying soldier, and much more. "O God, Ye took his father from me; Ye micht spare my laddie to me!"

"RAISING THE WIND."

Here comes a well-known character, with a tub on his head and a woman at his heels. "Ye villain, would ye tak' an' sell the verra tub I mak' my livin' wi'?" A sharp tussle: the man, his wife, and the tub, next moment are on the ground. Down the court rolls the tub, making straight for a child, whom it knocks over and imprisons against the wall. The screams of the little one bring upon the scene its mother, who, snatching up her bairn, breaks out in the strain customary on such occasions. Meanwhile our hero of the tub has got two or three smart blows from his wife, on whom he vows speedy vengeance, as he goes his way to seek some other means of raising the wind.

Suddenly there is a rush of children into the court, with a policeman in the midst of them. The man of the law strides along the alley, enters a house, and, in a twinkling, comes out again with a tall, dissipated, villainous man, whom he "rushes" along amidst the cries of the boys and girls, "That's him! that's him!"

Who is "him"? This is M——, a notorious drunkard, who for many years has been the curse and terror of his family. Up two stairs lies the dead body of his daughter, a godly girl, who has died of consumption; while another daughter, a sweet-looking girl, in her teens, lies dying of the same fell disease. The unnatural father has seized the occasion to return to the house, which he had laid waste, and from which his wickedness had banished him; but it is only to blackmail his wife. He demands money, threatening, if he is denied, to prevent the burial of his daughter. This fails, and he then threatens to cast the dead body of his child out of the window, into the street, and coolly proceeds to execute his purpose. A terrible scene follows—a struggle over the corpse. When we go in, the mother is swooning, a crowd of women are trying to restore her; the one daughter sleeps calmly enough in her shroud, while the other is crying, and coughing, and spitting blood—suffering an anguish of mind worse to bear than her fatal disorder.

FROM CELLAR TO GLORY.

Down a flight of stone steps and in a gloomy cellar, I found the man who sent for me. Enormously swollen with dropsy, sodden, panting for breath, the dying man sits in a corner of the wretched hovel all alone. He cannot lie down, night or day; he never sleeps, or, if he does, it is only for a minute, for he drops off his chair; and many a fall has made sleep a greater terror than the sufferings of his waking hours. But he is near his end, he says, and he does not mind. Can nothing be done? I search about, and find a rough deal table, the only thing approaching the nature of furniture in the room, and this I fix in front of the dying sufferer, so that he can lean upon it, and when he sleeps be kept from falling from his chair. The poor man is full of gratitude; he had never thought of it, and there was nobody to think for him. He tells me the rest of his story. He never saw the inside of a church or any religious meeting-house. One day he stopped and listened to the preaching in the open-air at the corner of Ann-street, where we usually held a meeting. There the Lord met him, opened his eyes, saved his soul. Poverty, bad health, misfortune, prevented him from realising the fondly-cherished desire to attend the church and join the fellowship of the saints.

Now he is dying, he is happy in Christ; his sins are forgiven; he is waiting to be called home; he will soon be in the presence of the Great Redeemer. He sent for me in order to bear his testimony to Christ, and to encourage us in our work. The common faith and hope made us warm friends and good fellows in a trice. After conversation, with reading the Word and prayer, we parted. It was our first meeting and our last; our first parting, and it will be our last. He had never seen a pulpit or a pew, a communion-table or a baptismal service; but He had seen the face of God, and is now in the presence of the King. From that dank cellar to glory; from poverty and dropsy, from solitude and sleeplessness, to being with the Lord—what a change! As we went up the stone steps out of that dingy cell, we could hear the voice of the dying man praising the Lord and praying a blessing on us; and we felt as if the angels of God were going down while we were coming up.

A BATTLE WITH DESPAIR.

See that little fellow, unwashed, unkempt, with rags enough to cover only the fifth part of his body, trundling his mother's pot-lid for a hoop up and down the court! His joy is full; he is as jubilant as the conquering hero of a great battle, as happy as any princeling in the royal nursery.

"What will your mother say to you, Tommy, about her pot-lid?"

"She's nae needin' 't, ye ken; there's nae tatties in the hoose."

"But you may break the lid."

"Oh, but I'll mak' a new ane when I'm big."

"You love your mother, Tommy?"

For a moment the child was silent, and then with a whispering voice replied, "When I grow to be a man, I'll no lat my mither greet. I'll big (build) a hoose for oorsel's, an' I'll buy meal an' tatties an' a' thing."

All this meant that the poor mother had been crying because she was summoned to leave the house, not being able to pay the rent. No food, no fire, no house—what a battle with despair! We have seen a decent widow with her two or three bairns standing at the close mouth beside a pitiful little heap of sticks and rags, her household gear; the rain pouring in torrents; the children crying; ordered out of the house by the landlord; ordered off the street by the policeman; ordered out of the world by its grand civilisation; and when her little daughter said, "O mither, would it no be better if we were a' dead an' awa' wi' father?"—do you wonder that the anguished mother's heart gave way, and she swooned and fell among the soaking heap of stuff, and seemed to the passers-by, as she lay there, only a bundle of rags?

WHAT A MIXTURE OF GOOD AND EVIL,

what a blending of light and shadow, one finds in a single lane or court! Heaven, earth, and hell, are strangely mixed up in the history of one slum. And yet it is much the same in the world's best society. The mahogany, upholstery, varnish, millinery, fine talk, skin-deep morality, make small difference in the sight of the heart-searching God. The essence of evil in the slum is sin; and, God knows, that ossence is not improved by being sweetly scented with the rosewater of refined manners and tastes. But the picture has another side. One is struck with the brave, kind, magnanimous spirit shown, often as a mere matter of course, in those miserable dens, where some of the finest elements of a noble character may now and then be found. One day I met on the street a little ragged boy, head bare, legs and feet bare, one arm exposed to the shoulder, the other partly covered, a few tatters about his loins—a too-familiar picture of squalor, a child of the slums. I did not know him; nor did he know me. He was making for the centre of the town. He had wandered into the country, probably the first time in his life, nature in him having somehow got a sniff of nature outside of him; and he had gathered in the ditches by the roadside some wild, garish things which he took for flowers, and these he held in his hand with a firm grasp and an admiring look. Seeing me looking, and thinking I was admiring his flowers, he stopped, selected the biggest and loudest of them, and, stepping up to me, presented it with all the grace of a perfect gentleman, and then bounded away, happy in the belief that he had made me as happy as himself. I was taken aback; no gift ever went so directly to my heart. As I stood looking after the poor child hastening home to some wretched hovel with his handful of ditch flowers to cheer a sick mother or a dying sister; when I reflected on his generosity and magnanimity, for he sought no reward but the joy of sharing his little all with others—my eyes grew dim, and I vainly strove to hide my emotion from the passers-by.

All around this district Isabella laboured. To her no court was too dingy; no house too disreputable; no family too hostile; no sinner too debased. With the light of the Gospel in her hand she often penetrated into a darkness that could be felt. There were dens of rowdies; dens of thieves; dens of infamy; dens of devilry; but with a firm step and a cheery voice she made her way into those hells, sometimes to be turned to the door by hands of violence and amidst a storm of imprecations; sometimes also to be received as an angel from heaven by a wretched creature sick of sin, a soul suffering from the terrible recoil of conscience. To pluck that one brand out of the fire was her business—a desperate work.

REVIVAL IN AUSTRALIA.

The Melbourne correspondent of The Baptist writes that God is graciously visiting the churches at the Antipodes with signs of a glorious revival. "For some time there has been mourning over the low state of spiritual life among us and the paucity of results from our labour. About six months ago a week was set apart by the churches for earnest supplication, one whole day in the week being given to united prayer. Ever since meetings for prayer have multiplied greatly. Meetings that were languishing were greatly revived, and many of the ministers, and some of the more earnest laymen, have been spending whole nights in prayer. The result has been a gracious awakening in a number of the city and suburban churches; many have been saved, and languid church members wonderfully quickened. Our principal Metropolitan Church, Collins-street, Melbourne, has experienced a large measure of blessing under the fervent and evangelical preaching of our beloved brother, Rev. S. Chapman. The churches at Fitzroy, North Carlton, Brunswick, Albert-street, and Hawthorn have had similarly glorious manifestations of Divine power and blessing.

"The churches in the country districts are catching the holy contagion, and from the other colonies, notably from South Australia and Tasmania, tidings of a kindred awakening have reached us. Our brethren of other denominations, being greatly stirred by the news of what the Lord is doing for our churches, have set themselves to seek the same blessing, and they have not sought in vain. Among the Presbyterians and Methodists there are glorious indications that 'the winter is over and gone, and blessed summer, with all its fruitful promise, nigh at hand.' Last week a great united all day of prayer was convened in Melbourne by leading ministers of the Baptist, Presbyterian, Methodist, and Episcopal communities. The subject of prayer was exclusively the Revival of the Church of God and the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. It was a day never to be forgotten; the power of God came upon the assembled multitude, and all hearts seemed fused by a common fire and moved by one impulse. The oldest ministers tell us they have never known such a moment in the Colony before, and all believe we are on the eve of a great Australian Revival. Every Thursday there is a meeting of ministers of all evangelical denominations held in the vestry of Collins-street Baptist Church to pray for this revival, and the brethren have entered into a solemn covenant to continue with one accord in prayer until the Lord shall arise and have mercy upon Zion."

MONTHLY TRACT SOCIETY. — Mr. J. R. Mackenzie, secretary, lately visited Wick. During his visit he was engaged doing good work in the community.

MISSIONS AND THEIR CRITICS.—A missionary in China, writing a letter of thanks for the receipt of The Christian, says:—"We workers in the vineyard, as we look up from our work for a moment, are amused at the remarks of would-be critics on Missions. Would not the critics do better if they left their comfortable positions and homes, as every ordinary missionary does, to come and help us? It is one thing to sit in an easy chair in a snug home, and advise how missionary work should be carried on, and another thing to come out and do the work. There is plenty of room in China for self-denial, and for suffering hardships, if necessary. There are in China to-day numbers of men and women who would be quite prepared to do and act as the workers who who have gone before, and whose lives are now chronicled. I admire the ladies who ventured first into the inland cities of China, and first faced a Chinese crowd. The courage and bravery manifested by them exceeds that of the bravest men who have lived and died in Africa or India."

Dark Deptford.

By reason of its overwhelming vastness, London is at once the monarch of modern cities and the despair of the social or religious reformer. Among its "dark" spots we do not know that there are any which have better earned the appellation than the region to the south of the Thames which embraces Bermondsey, Rotherhithe, and Deptford. Of these, perhaps the last is the poorest and darkest of all. Taking High-street, Deptford, as a centre, the explorer may find, within an easy walk, league upon league of narrow unlovely streets, where the conditions of life appear to be such that it must be next to impossible for dwellers in them to be cleanly, healthy, or good.

In the middle of this sunken region of sordid poverty, a Medical Mission has lately been planted by Dr. Pring, who for some years worked in a similar capacity in St. Giles. The other Sunday evening one of our representatives paid a visit to Dr. Pring, and accompanied him over a part of his gigantic "parish." Of recent years the Medical Mission—that ideal form of Christian effort—has developed throughout London to a considerable extent. But Dr. Pring says that the whole of South-East London was without such a mission till he was enabled to break ground in dark Deptford some five or six months ago. With respect to his visit our reporter says:—

I wish I could paint in realistic colours the aspect of this human warren; for such it really seems to be. In the Broadway and the High-street there were ample breathing space and plenty of light—too much of the latter coming from the glaring gas jets of the gin palaces that are planted at nearly every street corner. But the side streets, of which we traversed a perfect labyrinth, are narrow and dark; the roadways seem to be the receptacle for vegetable and other refuse. The houses are of the most approved "Jerry" pattern—row upon row of mean-looking brick boxes. The Doctor looked in upon a patient, and we found husband, wife, and some five or six children occupying one small room. The air was foul and stuffy; the children were as dirty as an average pig, and though the parents appeared to be respectable and well-intentioned, it was impossible to conceive how a family could be brought up to habits of decency and self-respect under such circumstances. This single-room arrangement, Dr. Pring assured me, is largely prevalent in Deptford; it is one of the worst ulcers in our social system, and it is time that our "City Fathers" devised some plan by which the great army of London's poor can pay some small regard to the elementary principles of a rational human existence. It is probable that a great part of all this squalor and wretchedness is self-inflicted, but with so little to elevate and so much to depress the spirit, it is small wonder that the warmth and light and false cheer of the corner pub. are resorted to. The casual labour of the docks constitutes a large factor in the industry of Deptford. The importation of live sheep is at present prohibited at the Deptford cattle market, owing to disease, and this has thrown thousands out of employment. Dr. Pring told me that the trade of the High-street is mostly divided between publicans, doctors, and undertakers—a terribly ominous trinity.

The Medical Mission premises are well situated, towards the lower or river end of High-street. Entering from the street the visitor finds himself in a cheerful and comfortable hall. At the time of my visit, early on the Sunday evening, a well-attended children's service was in progress, conducted in Dr. Pring's temporary absence by one of the City missionaries of the district. Later in the evening there was a Gospel service for adults; to a full and attentive congregation, the Doctor gave a vigorous and eminently sensible address on the claims of Jesus Christ to be the Saviour of the world, especially of the poor, and his power to make good that claim. Into this room two days a week the medical patients gather, and are supplied with advice and medicines; at the same time a short, bright, Gospel service is held, so that the Divine order of healing and preaching is observed, after the primitive and perfect model. On Saturday evening Dr. Pring has a meeting in which temperance advocacy is judiciously mingled with an elevating musical entertainment. He is a sworn foe to the trade of the publican; and with good cause, for he says that many of the ailments for which he has to prescribe are those induced by indulgence in strong liquor. As I have indicated, Deptford is no exception to the rest of London in the matter of drink-shops. Within a stone's throw of the Medical Mission, and within view of each other, there is a regular nest of these centres of moral and physical contamination.

In our evening walk, Dr. Pring and I came across a few rays of light amid the prevailing darkness. Mill-lane, a narrow thoroughfare abutting on the Broadway, seems to be a congerie of common lodging-houses. Into one of these we went, and found the large kitchen tenanted by some scores of men, women, and children, all of whom where listening quietly, and more or less intently, while a Gospel service was being conducted by some members of Mr. J. W. Jordan's evangelistic band. We peeped into a Church of England, situated in a back street, where there was a sparse congregation. A little further on we found a chapel curiously calling itself "General Baptist Unitarian"; here also there was a small muster of hearers, at which we were in no way surprised. At another spot we chanced on a little three-cornered shanty of a place that is doing duty as a "slum post" of the Salvation Army. It was crowded by some forty odd people, the most of whom were Army "soldiers." During the brief time we stayed, the praying was very fervid and the singing equally so. I understood from my companion that the Army has not in the past been much of a success in Deptford, owing to the sheer indifference of the masses. A large barracks has, however, been secured, and will soon be opened. Though the places of worship were so poorly patronised, there is not church accommodation for more than a very small proportion of the dense population.

This same stolid indifference and utter disregard of things spiritual are the most appalling fact that meets the Christian worker in such a neighbourhood. The City missionary of whom I spoke (a very earnest man, born and brought up in the district, and who worked for years in a factory) told me how he had been set upon and knocked down by a band of roughs in the High-street a few weeks before. As a rule, however, the denizens of Deptford do not seem to care enough about religious work to oppose it openly. That Sunday evening the main thoroughfare in which the Medical Mission stands swarmed with loafers, for whom the brightly illuminated and attractive gin-shops kept their doors on the swing.

Dr. Pring imparted to me some most distressing facts as to the prevalence of foul language and unblushing vice, even among the very young. On these matters it is not needful that I should expatiate. I hope I have written enough to show the reader that this Deptford Medical Mission is a thing desperately needed, and an agency that is certain to do an untold amount of good, alike to bodies and souls, if a sympathetic Christian public will give it a sufficient backing. This brave young doctor, who is heartily aided by his partner in life, appears to me to have entered on a work as heroic and self-abnegating as that of any missionary to the fever-stricken regions of the Congo. He ought to be upheld and encouraged by the constant intercessions of his fellow Christians, and the adequate aid that wealthy London is so well able to bestow. His address is 259, Lewisham High-road, S.E.

RESCUE WORK IN ALDERSHOT.

Dear Sir,—A noble work of rescue is carried on by Miss Tummon and Miss Dale, 21, Wolseley-road, Aldershot. Among those who have been helped by these heroic, Christlike workers (especially by the former, who has been engaged in this self-denying work from the first) are daughters who have been ruined by their own fathers; girls who have been decoyed from their homes in various parts of the kingdom, by villainous, smiling tempters belonging to the British Army; girls who have been trained in the town, by their unnatural mothers, to a life of sin; soldiers' wives who have married "off the strength," and who resort to this shameful sinning in order to eke out a living—which is but a dying death; and professional, hardened harlots from other quarters, who come here thinking to find a more fruitful field in which to ply their nefarious life-and-soul-destroying traffic.

Some of these are rescued out of the sin and shame, and sent to Homes; some are restored to their sorrowing parents, or respectable service; some are assisted to marry, rather than live in sin; some are delivered from the sin into which they were on the point of falling; and some, praise God, have been savingly won to Christ.

Not long ago, a soldier's wife had been supplied with drink in a public-house until she was hopelessly intoxicated. Ten o'clock came; she was then thrown out into the middle of the road as if a dead dog. A crowd gathered round the helpless, wretched woman. In the crowd was a man of kindly heart and sympathetic spirit. He put the poor creature in a cab, and drove off with all speed to Miss Tummon's. Then, with loving hands and hearts, Miss Tummon and her helper ministered to this mother's daughter, who was insensible for hours. After she was recovered, rested, and refreshed, she was kindly counselled, and left a sadder, and we may hope, a wiser woman.

A fortnight ago Miss Tummon and Miss Dale were enjoying the holy calm and quiet of the sweet Sabbath afternoon, when they were rudely roused by the appearance of a poor creature, the wreck and refuse and cast-off thing of fallen men, who was brought from North Camp in a fearful condition, more dead than alive, with absolutely only two rags on to cover her nakedness and shame. It was a sight before which scores would have been dumb with helpless grief and sorrow. But not so these two ladies. They welcomed, washed, and waited upon this poor thing, and have now, by God's grace, won her back to life and hope, some sense of respectability, and desire for a better life. Will your readers help this noble work, which is hindered in its more effectual operations by lack of means?

Gifts of women's clothing and money would be thankfully received, and that such may be forthcoming is the earnest prayer of (Pastor) Jesse Aubrey.

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.—Commander W. Dawson, R.N. (secretary), and Rev. T. S. Hatfield, Acomb, York (association secretary), recently addressed enthusiastic meetings at Newcastle-on-Tyne, Edinburgh, Harrogate, Bradford, Sheffield, and Derby.

BIBLE FLOWER MISSION.—Sir,—May I be allowed to plead for this Mission (110, Cannon-street, E.C.), which every week in the year brings the pure "milk of the Word" to our sick and suffering people in the hospitals and lodging-houses of our great city. We need more workers, more flowers, and more money to carry on the work efficiently. The Lord does give gracious tokens of his blessing, and some remarkable cases of conversion have taken place through the texts that always accompany the flowers given, and through the words spoken by the workers.—Yours faithfully, F. A. Bevan, Treasurer.

Rev. WILLIAM TYLER, D.D.,

Congregational Minister, Mile End New Town, E.

COMPARATIVELY few workers in the Lord's vineyard are permitted to look back upon so long a period of successful labour as the subject of our present sketch. Though well advanced in years, he is still engaged heart and soul in the service he so much loves, and his activities are as numerous and varied as Christian ingenuity and sanctified common-sense can suggest, for the effective commendation of the Gospel to the toiling thousands of East London.

Born in 1812, William Tyler came of a good stock. Both parents and grandparents were Christian people, whose influence was not lost upon those among whom they moved. Eldest of a family of five, William enjoyed the privileges, as well as laboured under the disadvantages, of firstborn. He received a good education, and in early years came under decided religious impressions. A means of grace to him in his young days was afforded by the request of his great-grandmother that he should read to her the Scriptures and Mason's "Spiritual Treasury" on Lord's Day afternoons. A blessing attended this kindly service, as well as the exercise which his mother encouraged of learning many of the hymns which we still cherish as constituting a very precious poetic heritage of the Church of Christ.

The Tyler family attended the Tabernacle in Moorfields, and there William's spiritual life began, the ministrations of Rev. Dr. Andrew Reed being specially blessed to him. When about seventeen or eighteen years of age he became a teacher in the Sabbath-school, and anxiety for the welfare of the young speedily enlarged into solicitude for the rapidly increasing adult population of Spitalfields. Multitudes were then, as now, living in religious indifference, and the question was how to reach them. This question weighed heavily upon the mind of young Mr. Tyler, who kept eyes and ears open for instruction as to how to promote its solution. About this time Rev. H. Naylor, Wesleyan minister, called an open-air prayer-meeting for seven o'clock on a Sunday morning. The object was to get at persons quite outside the Christian Church, and Mr. Tyler attended. What he saw led him to determine upon definite personal effort to evangelise the people. This was in 1834, and, being in circumstances which enabled him to give most of his time to this kind of service, he made resolve, in the words of the Apostle, "This one thing I do." The meetings he called for Sabbath afternoons drew together a considerable number of hearers. Other young men rallied to his side, and a good work was soon in full swing.

After a course of study, Mr. Tyler took a closed chapel in Hope-street, where he laboured hard for some years. In 1844 his church united with one in Mile End New Town. Then developments were numerous and important. The young were looked after with due vigilance, and a day-school was established. Mr. Tyler also lent a hand in founding a Ragged Church. Everything was done on the principle of helping the poor to help themselves. The various new institutions became feeders of the church, for the people assembled readily on Sundays to worship with those who evidently cared for them during the week. While these operations were meeting with encouraging success, a great disappointment was experienced by pastor and people. The old chapel, with a lease of forty years yet to run, was reported to the local authorities as being in an unsafe condition; and, on being surveyed, it was condemned. A new building had then to be erected, and it still stands in Hanbury-street, affording accommodation for a thousand persons. On the second anniversary the entire cost of structure and freehold, £8000, had been paid. In addition to chapel and vestries, a girls' school and infant nursery were built. On the London School Board being formed, Mr. Tyler's educational occupation was practically gone. He readily gave up his school premises as necessity arose, and has since co-operated right heartily with the Board. Moreover, as one of the managers of the Bethnal Green group of schools, he still finds educational work much to his mind.

(From a Photograph by Messrs. Russell & Son, London.)

The Ragged Church, which has already been mentioned, was about the first building of its kind in London, in King Edward-street, Spitalfields, where an important work has now been carried on for more than thirty years. Dr. Tyler has superintended many important building works. One of these is the Memorial Hall of the Christian Community in London-street, Bethnal Green. This old and well-known society for evangelising the poor of London had existed for over a century, but never had a home of its own. The want of a central place for its use had long been felt and much talked about. On the hundredth anniversary of the Society, occasion arose for special effort, but great difficulty was experiencedin getting a suitable site. Dr. Tyler was one of the committee formed for the purpose, and when it seemed that the scheme must be abandoned, he produced plans of a site he had just bought from the Great Eastern Railway Company, in order to erect thereon a Sunday-school. He offered the land to the committee on condition that the much-needed Sabbath-school accommodation should be provided, and his offer was gladly accepted. Dr. Tyler was elected honorary secretary of the building committee, and, setting to work with his customary vigour, he saw the entire structure completed in four years, and dedicated to the service of God in January, 1876. The Society has now a very valuable home and centre, providing for school and mission work, with library and class-rooms, also a block of model dwellings. The whole forms an imposing structure, crowned by a lofty tower with an illuminated clock, the gift of Sir James Tyler, who is the brother of the subject of our sketch.

Another institution with which Dr. Tyler's name is honourably associated is the Bethnal Green Free Library. Of this he may be said to be the founder, inasmuch as it was at his suggestion that Mr. G. F Hilcken, the present secretary and librarian, set about establishing it. The library has its home under the same roof as the Memorial Hall of the Christian Community. About thirteen years ago the borough refused for the third time to adopt the provisions of the Public Libraries Act. This was a disappointment to many friends of progress, and the signal for the opening of an institution providing the various advantages of a free library without entailing the customary charge upon local rates. From small beginnings the Library has grown to its present very useful dimensions, and abundant proof has been afforded of its great value as a civilising and Christianising agency in the neighbourhood. The Library is no longer an experiment, but an agency returning large interest to the souls of those of its supporters who are acquainted with its excellent working. The development has been cheering all along, and to-day the need for enlarged and more suitable premises is pressing itself with urgency upon the committee. Dr. Tyler is, therefore, exerting himself to raise £20,000, in order to provide what is required, and place the institution on a good working basis. He certainly does well to set his heart upon such a grand work, and we trust he will be enabled to carry through this crowning endeavour of a life spent for the benefit of East London. The last building scheme with which he was associated is the Working Lads' Institute in Whitechapel-road, in the affairs of which Mr. Henry Hill has shown such praiseworthy interest. Dr. Tyler superintended the erection with architectural skill, as well as fatherly care.

Dr. Tyler is on a large number of committees and boards, and is, perhaps, the best-known man in the East-end. He is widely styled "the Bishop of East London," and a good and true bishop he is, although not so described in ecclesiastical lists. He is an ardent tract distributor; in fact, he is rarely seen about the streets without a handful of tracts or publications for free distribution. It is long since he began the career of an open-air preacher. Outside Spitalfields Market, and in front of St. John's Church, on Bethnal Green, he has proclaimed the unsearchable riches of Christ. Hence, he is a firm friend of the Open-air Mission. The Sabbath question is a vital one in East London, and the various Societies having for their object the preservation of the sanctity of the Lord's Day, include Dr. Tyler among their warmest supporters. Few stories have been more frequently told than that of a young man who, on beginning business in East London, acted upon Dr. Tyler's advice, and put up a notice: "This shop will not be open on Sundays." While all the tradesmen in the district who were in the habit of desecrating the Lord's Day came to poverty and wretchedness, that young man succeeded, and set to other small tradesmen an example which was enforced by the encouragement of such prosperity as he personally achieved.

Dr. Tyler originated the Widows' Fund for ministers belonging to the Congregational Board of London, from which £100 is paid on the death of a member; as treasurer, Dr. Tyler has so far paid sums amounting in the aggregate to about £4000. Among the many other institutions in which he is interested is Hackney College, now at Hampstead. In this well-known academy, Dr. Tyler received his theological training. It is over fifty years since, with that educational equipment, he began to build on the good foundation. Some three years ago, on the occasion of his pastoral jubilee, an American University conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Divinity, in recognition of his varied and extensive labours in East London.

As a preacher, Dr. Tyler is simple and earnest. His theme is Christ crucified, the Lord our Righteousness, and Christ our Life. In front of his chapel is the motto, "Be ye reconciled to God." He does not give to his people discourses that cost him nothing; but, nevertheless, he finds in evangelical themes an all-sufficient and powerfully attractive source and subject of instruction and appeal. He goes among all classes of the people, and is held in high esteem alike by needy neighbours and well-to-do friends, the latter more or less distant from his sphere. In times of want and suffering, the worthy poor never hesitate to confide in this truly kind-hearted pastor, for they know that his means of commanding succour has often proved sufficient to meet extraordinary pressure of want. Though now seventy-seven years of age, Dr. Tyler is wonderfully active. He is assisted in his pastoral work by Rev. G. C. Dalgleish. We trust he will long be spared to the Church of Christ in the region to which he has devoted his life in the service of God.

ORPHAN HOMES OF SCOTLAND.

In the large hall of the Christian Institute, Glasgow, a crowded meeting was held last week, to hear Mr. William Quarrier submit his report of the work accomplished during the past year. Since the beginning of this truly Christian enterprise, 3000 children have been placed in different situations throughout Scotland, and are doing well. An equal number have been sent to Canada, and are comfortably settled there, whilst there are at present in the Homes 614. The subscriptions last year amounted to over £17,000, but this year Mr. Quarrier asks for £20,000, as he aims at being able to accommodate 1200 children.

Dr. Cameron, who presided, expressed his high admiration of the strong faith with which Mr. Quarrier expended the money as it came in, and relied on the never-failing goodness of God for further supplies. This was, he thought, the best plan to go on, as the repeated calls stimulated them to greater and more frequent exercises of Christian benevolence.

"THE HEAVENLY TREASURE."

"Partakers of the heavenly treasure."—Collect, 11th Sunday after Trinity.
"A peculiar treasure unto Me."—Exodus xix. 5.

The Lord my treasure is!
I have none else beside.
Whate'er my soul betide,
He doth for aye abide;
Jesus my treasure is!

The Lord my treasure is!
What need I more than this?
What can give greater bliss?
Now nothing comes amiss!
Jesus my treasure is!

The Lord my treasure is!
How perfect is his love;
'Tis wide as heaven above,
Gentler than tender dove;
Jesus my treasure is!

His Church his treasure is!
He gave for her his life;
He fought in bitter strife,
That she might be his wife;
His heavenly Bride she is!

His Church his treasure is!
His voice she will obey,
His power her trust and stay,
His love her rest alway;
Jesus her treasure is!

His Church his treasure is!
Nought loves He more beside,
Than his most precious Bride.
In Him she doth abide;
Jesus her treasure is!

"Peculiar Treasure" this.
Thou, Christian, ever art
Engraven on his heart;
Thou ne'er from Him canst part;
Jesus thy treasure is!

UNITED MISSIONS.

I have read with interest the "notes of an address on special missions" at Brighton. We have had just such a mission at New Southgate and district. The Railway Mission have a branch here, and at the close of their open-air season it was laid on their hearts to do something to try and get the careless and indifferent to meetings indoors. A committee was appointed to wait upon the various ministers and clergy, with the result that a grand committee of about twenty was formed, composed of one churchwarden and three working men from the Church, four Baptists, five Methodists, four from the Brunswick Mission-hall, and the remainder from the railway-men.

For five weeks this work has been carried on at the various mission-halls and chapels in and around Southgate, with much blessing to many, finishing up with a grand thanksgiving service in the church, and a tea in the Baptist church, when nearly two hundred, including the converts, sat down together. The vicar and other ministers took part. Could not others follow this example? H. T. L.

BRITISH WOMEN'S TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.—In connection with the Finsbury Park Branch of this Association an interesting drawing-room meeting was lately held at the Home of Rest, Ebenezer-house, Hanley-road. After some practical remarks from the president, Mrs. Priest Peek, Rev. Henry Bright spoke, and was followed by Mrs. Brayne, of St. John's Wood, who cited striking instances of the evils of drinking. It is hoped that through similar meetings the army of women abstainers will be largely increased, and zealous helpers added to those who carry on a work that calls forth much sacrifice of ease and comfort, but brings its own reward.

Major Whittle in Woolwich.

NOTHING could have been more appropriate than that Major Whittle should begin his Metropolitan campaign in Woolwich, for there, during the past five years, his name has been a household word. In Woolwich there was five years ago, as there is now, an almost complete unanimity of feeling among the earnest Christians, clerical as well as laity, as to the importance of evangelistic work; and the wave of blessing which then received an impulse under the Major's preaching has until the present time been unmistakably felt. One congregation alone received an addition of about sixty members, and its pastor gladly testifies to-day that he has no heartier helpers than those who then accepted salvation.

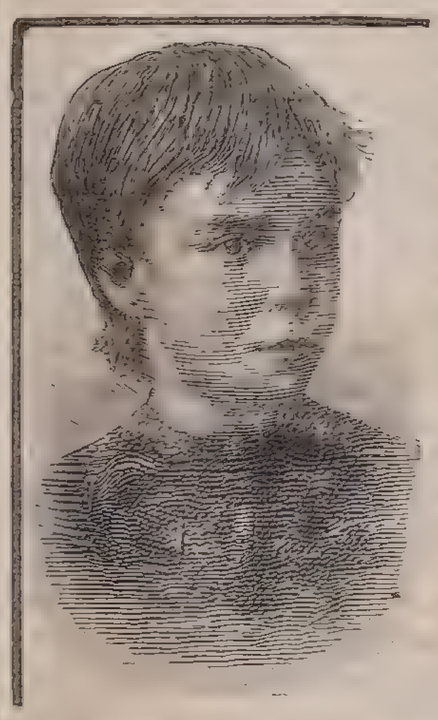
On this occasion the meetings take place at the most central point, the New-road Presbyterian Church, and Dr. Raitt, with his office-bearers, have their hands full of work to welcome the people, and see that no seat is left unoccupied. Among the Episcopal clergy who gladly assist are Rev. Sillon Henning, and Rev. J. C. Elliot, of Plumstead, Hon. and Rev. Talbot Rice, of All Saints', and Rev. J. W. Horsley, of Trinity. Rev. John Wilson and Rev. Thomas Jones represent the Baptists; for the Wesleyans there are Rev. Wesley Wolmer and Rev. T. Chope; and there is Rev. I. B. Vanstone for the Bible Christians. Dr. Raitt has also the kind assistance of his Presbyterian brother, Rev. W. R. Thompson, and of Capt. Mandeville.

Thus it may be seen how united have been the prayers that God would visit them with an overflowing blessing. And the prayers have been heard. Night after night from the beginning of the services the responses to the offer of salvation have been extremely ready and numerous, and it is no exaggeration to say that hundreds have professed to find salvation. The military element of the population is well represented at the gatherings, and those who do not know how tender a heart lies beneath a red coat are surprised to see many in uniform seeking for assistance in order that they may enlist with King Jesus. There are a dozen of young cadets, Christians, who find much pleasure in this work.

Old friends of Major Whittle profess to see a mellowing in his addresses—a more tender touch as he deals with the intellect, the will, the affections, and even the fears of his hearers. "You will not become Christians," said he one night, "until you are willing to be Christians. Some men and women seem to be quietly waiting till God thrusts salvation upon them. Do not make any mistake; you will not be dragged into the kingdom of heaven as a prisoner is by a chain. 'Wilt thou be made whole?' that is the question for you to-night; are you willing? You know the life you are leading. You are trying to get all the pleasure you can out of it. It may be some appetite controls you—money may be your God—a selfish sinful, godless life is yours. Let there be no vain trust that church-going, or baptism, or confirmation will change the heart. God's testimony of it is true, that it is desperately wicked. He alone can help you.

"Some there are who desire to be saved from the results of their sin, but not the sin itself. Do not be deceived; the odour of sanctity and the odour of whisky are not companions. No; a perfect deliverance and a full salvation go together. It is the most glorious thing on earth to be an out-and-out soldier of Jesus Christ.

"And there are some here to-night who mean to enlist. I believe that, by God's grace, praise his name, there are some here with whom the devil has had his last fling. Never mind your feelings. Mine tell me that I am a sinner, so I cannot forget my need of a Saviour. God's law condemns all who have sinned; but there is now no condemnation to those who are in Christ Jesus. You cannot go wrong by doing what God tells you: 'Look unto me and be ye saved.' And as He now gives you the command, He gives sight to see at the same time." Then came the tender appeal for immediate acceptance.



On Friday evening, during the closing appeal, Major Whittle told how he was forty-nine years of age that day, and his prayer had been that at least that number should respond to the Gospel call that evening. His request was more than answered. Some incidents of his late Scottish experiences were listened to with much attention.

Major Whittle is accompanied by his daughter, and the meetings are the more attractive by her beautiful singing of the hymns of her father's composition. The work continues during all this week.

RESCUED FOR LIFE.

BY T. J. BARNARDO.

LITTLE ESTHER is but nine years old, and has not been many days under my care. One of my co-workers came across her a few weeks ago in company with her mother and sister. The three were homeless and quite destitute, the mother and elder sister (who by the way is only sixteen) belonging to that unhappy class among whom the dreadful atrocities of Whitechapel were enacted. All such poor defenceless creatures are really homeless, trusting each night only to the precarious shelter which a lodging-house affords, and are meanwhile the prey of the vilest creatures in London.

Will Christian ladies who read this look at her face, and try to imagine the result to poor little Esther of constant association with such a life, without a home, always hearing converse of the worst description, and often without food, shelter, or resting-place for the night? Think of her as frequently half-famished, and glad to pick up a bit of garbage from the streets, and eat it. Will our Lord's servants and handmaidens think of all that, and remember further that the only life which lay before poor little Esther was that which her sixteen-year-old sister had already begun? How can one know of such things, and hear of them, without crying out against a state of society that permits these little children, nay, that compels them, by its cruel neglect, to enter upon such vicious courses!

It did not need very much persuasion to induce the unhappy mother to surrender poor little Esther to my care. A few days afterwards that mother disappeared, and I have not since been able to trace her whereabouts. Meanwhile little Esther is one more amidst numbers of defenceless young creatures gathered safely, through God's infinite mercy, within the haven of our Village Home, asking by their mute helplessness for loving sympathy and a place in someone's heart.

ABERDEEN LADIES' UNION.—The annual meeting of this admirable organisation was held in the Queen's Rooms, Aberdeen, last week, Lord Aberdeen presiding. Encouraging reports of the work amongst girls and young women were submitted. About two hundred and seventy young women attend the Training Home every week. Rev. W. Hay Aitken, who was one of the speakers, urged the workers ever to keep in view the winning of souls to Christ. They could not always be preaching to the girls, but they could weave around them the spell of a healthy Christian influence, and sooner or later they would come to listen to the Gospel message.

BRITISH SYRIAN SCHOOLS.

BIBLE-WOMAN'S WORK, BEYROUT.

WORK amongst the Moslems grows more and more difficult, and the opposition to it stronger. Many doors have been closed against us this year, unless we would visit without "that Book"; for its teachings, say they, turn their religion upside down. In one part of the district they were prepared to give the Bible-woman a beating if she had gone on a certain day, but the Lord prevented her going. Another day the Bible was snatched from her hand as she was reading, and was about to be torn in pieces, when one of the women present rescued it.

But we know some who, we trust, have accepted Jesus as the Saviour. One poor woman told me that she looks forward with longing to the weekly visit of the Bible-woman, that she may read and pray with her. She said: "The words I hear comfort me, rest me, cool my heart, when I am in trouble or sorrow. I do love Jesus Christ; He is the Saviour, and I believe there is no other." A. A. BARKER.

THE BIBLE IN BENGAL.

SIR,—In your issue of September 27, under the heading, "Englishmen in India," you speak of a visit paid by me to Pubna (Bengal), some time back, and of my having received nearly thirty applications for Bibles from Babus, after delivering a lecture on "The Influence of the Bible on Character," in the Town Hall of that place. Your readers will be pleased to know that the number has grown to upwards of 100. The applicants have sent stamps for postage, and through the generous aid of the Society for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures, the Bibles have been sent as gifts. Since then, the Australian Baptists have sent a missionary to Pubna. It is encouraging to know that, before his arrival, so many Bibles were in circulation in the town and district.

By the time this appears, if the Lord will, I shall be commencing my ninth winter tour in connection with the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society, chiefly amongst the scattered tea-planters of this land. Will your readers bear me up in their prayers?

I cannot sign this without thanking you very warmly for your valuable and helpful paper, which I eagerly look for week by week.—Yours in Gospel bonds, H. RYLANDS BROWN.

THE KOLAR MISSION.

IN a recent letter, Miss Anstey speaks hopefully of the educational progress of the children under her care. The services of Mr. Garthwaite, retired inspector of schools, who is now superintending this department of the Mission work, are highly appreciated. It is fully expected that at the end of a year the girls will be able to read and understand books like the "Pilgrim's Progress." Miss Anstey writes:—

"Work here is very heavy, for the labourers are few. We want an English certificated teacher for our girls' school. A lady has been highly recommended for the work, but I have no funds to pay for her passage and outfit.

"The gold mines here seem to be in some instances a great success. We are as anxious as ever to keep our Christian young men from obtaining employment there, for, though the labour is lucrative, the influences are most evil, alike to soul and body. Bowring Pitt, or Kolar Road, is the railway station to all the mines. It was a mere village a few years ago, but now it is rapidly becoming a very important place. We want to open a preaching station there; but the difficulty has been to obtain a site for a Gospel-hall, &c. While on a visit to the place, a few days ago, I saw a splendidly situated site, which I trust the Lord will give us, for I long to see vigorous Gospel work going on."

CENTRAL AFRICA.

EVENTS are moving so rapidly in Central Africa—events of serious importance to the kingdom of Christ—that we propose to give our readers occasional notes condensing and explaining the letters and telegrams almost daily arriving in this country.

NYASSA LAND.

Letters have come from nearly all the missionaries on the west side of the great lake, those connected with the Scottish churches. Dr. HENRY writes hopefully concerning spiritual progress; the attendance at school and on the Lord's-day becoming larger and more regular. His station is towards the south end of the lake, that out of which the Shirè flows to the Zambesi.

Dr. LAWS, writing from Bandawé, which is just midway up the lake, speaks of intercourse with the brethren of the Universities' Mission on the east side, and of hearing from them about a proposal of assigning a portion of the territory to the Portuguese. This, however, was written on September 9, and Consul H. H. Johnson was expected to visit Nyassa within a few days; so that it will be safe to await another mail before forming an opinion on that matter.

Farther north, at Karanga, where the fighting for bare life against the Arab man-stealers has gone on so long, there is no considerable improvement reported. Dr. KERR CROSS is indeed able to tell of a tour among the mission stations, and of his being cordially received by the natives, but he needed a bodyguard of twenty armed men; and the slaving work goes on with heartrending brutality. Here is one extract from his long letter:—

> On July 24 last we we regreatly shocked to learn of the Arabs having committed another atrocity not many miles from us. On that day a large band of Arab robbers, headed by a man called Funde, attacked the village of Mdoko, on the shores of the lake, and at the mouth of the Mvinva river. They attacked the village at midday, and killed eight men and captured all the women, boys, and girls. Two of the men rushed into the lake and were drowned. That night at midnight we learned of this atrocity, and sent out a band of men to intercept them. Next afternoon our men came on their path, and followed it up. When the Arabs saw them they bolted, one man cutting the rope which bound all the women from the neck of a young girl, and throwing her over his shoulder made off. The chase was too keen, however, and he was forced to throw her down and bolt. Twenty-nine women were thus rescued. All of them were tied and were bearing loads of food to Kopakopa's village. On being released the women told our men that on the early part of the day the Arabs had thrown three of the sucking children into the bush because the women could not carry the grain and the infants too. Being guided by the mothers the men went to the spot, and found the three infants still alive.

Another case is reported thus, as occurring about August 23 last:—

> It seems that a large band of Wawemba crept up to Nyondo's village in the darkness of night, and got their guns through the piles of the wooden stockade, and that at the first streak of dawn they fired volley after volley into the houses. Then ensued a panic: every man was butchered, every woman, boy, girl, and cow captured and marched off. In the language of the bearers of the sad news, the village is "wiped out." Now, this happened quite near to the mission station at Mwenewandas. It is the village of my personal servant Sande. To hear the wail of grief that arose from the friends of these unhappy people, to know that some of the people that you spoke to, that brought you flour and fowls and potatoes when at Mwenewandas three weeks ago, are now butchered, and the women and girls dragged off to the Arab slave market, is saddening, and might well cast a gloom over one's heart. But more; to have these people cast themselves on their knees and plead for you to help them, and for you to know that you can do little, is harassing. I would urge you to let these things be known. You have sent me here, and these are the scenes that over and over I have to report. When these men went on their knees in my little house here, and pleaded with me and with the white men to help them, I saw Ethiopia on her knees stretching forth her hands to Great Britain. Surely you cannot turn a deaf ear to their cry for help!

Such appeals go right to the heart, of statesmen, called by King Leopold at the instance of our Queen, began its sittings at Brussels on November 18. The prayers of God's people should be very earnest and unceasing, that some effective means may be devised for checking a traffic so monstrous as that which the above extracts describe.

THE ANTI-SLAVERY CONFERENCE

THE CONGO FREE STATE

reports a condition of peace at Stanley Falls, and efforts of a somewhat hopeful character are being made to strengthen its stations on the long course of the river, more than a thousand miles. The railway from the Atlantic at Boma to Stanley Pool, by which travellers will be carried quickly over the malarious region near the coast, is being pushed forward. Nothing of a material kind is more promising than such work; and a beginning will be made within three months of similar work on the opposite side of the Dark Continent, in the opening of a railway to run forty miles inland from Mombasa.

Meanwhile the Lord of the harvest is thrusting forth more and more labourers into the field; a party of right-hearted men are just on their way to Bolobo, near the Equator, and they carry with them another missionary steamer, the Pioneer. The Congo will thus have three such vessels, the Peace and the Henry Reed having already become familiar with its waters. "God has respect unto his covenant, for the dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty" (Psa. lxxiv. 20).

THE LIVINGSTONIA MISSION.

In a recently received communication from Dr. GEORGE HENRY, medical missionary in connection with this Central African Mission, some interesting details are given as to the progress of the work. He reports the building of a church, and a growing feeling of friendliness on the part of chiefs and people. The slave-trading propensities of some of the natives are still to some extent indulged in. Dr. Henry describes a journey he made to a chief Chikuse, when many native villages were visited en route, and medical help rendered to those in need of it. On the work generally, he says:—

"Regarding our work here, I consider it satisfactory. Our school children (though some of them are young men) amount to 44, who have attended very regularly for some time. These are in all stages of development. The most advanced are eight or nine boys who have been under instruction for about eight months. All these can read the Gospels fluently—that is, intelligently—and are not quite ignorant of their contents when questioned. They also write fairly well on slates, and are highly delighted when we make out their elementary efforts. Arithmetic is rather a sore task, and is at the best a slow and laborious business. A good point in all is that they sing heartily; not always correctly, it is true, but always with much pith and enjoyment. Thanks to the kind friends who lately assisted us, we have been enabled to work on a more ambitious scale than I at one time dared to hope. We are now able to keep ten or twelve boys on the station, but I should gladly see double that number under daily supervision and instruction. About 30s. a year would keep one boy. Above all, we earnestly desire the prayers of all Christian friends that God may send his Spirit to work mightily in these poor heathen hearts, so that his Word and its precious truths may take the place of those silly, childish superstitions which, nevertheless—or it may be by reason of their very silliness and simplicity—have such a strong hold on, and have fixed their roots so deeply and firmly in, their minds and affections."

CONGO BALOLO MISSION.

There was a goodly gathering of friends of mission work in Central Africa, at the meeting held in Exeter Hall on Tuesday evening last week, when leave was taken of several missionaries about to start for labour in connection with the Congo Balolo Mission. This marks a very interesting forward movement in connection with the Mission.

In the course of an explanatory address, Dr. GUINNESS, Jun., said that a few weeks ago a letter came to hand from Mrs. McKittrick, from the Equator station, saying there was great need for practical helpers. The three brethren now about to leave are: Mr. Adamson, an engineer, who will take out and reconstruct the steamer Pioneer; Mr. Luff, who will help in the erection of stations; and Mr. Coles, a gardener, who will, it is hoped, do much to enhance the temporal welfare of the various other brethren. Thus reinforced by practical men, the Mission party will, it is hoped, help in the work of civilisation, as well as bear a more effective testimony for Christ. The first company was made up of preachers, and such as are able to do medical work; this company is made up of business men. The steamer will be the most rapid on the Congo river, going at a rate of nearly eleven miles an hour. It will cost upwards of £1000 to transport, in pieces, from England to Central Africa, to be put together at a station above the cataracts of the Congo.

Mr. H. RICHARD gave a narrative of his experiences at Bansa Manteke. He found very much of common humanity in the inhabitants. First he preached the law of Moses, and urged the people to keep it. This was in vain. Then, realising that this was not the true mission of Christians, he preached the Gospel of Christ. He prayed for the Spirit, alike to empower him for work, and to convince the darkened population of sin against God. All at once an interest was aroused; difficulties were one by one removed, and whereas the people previously ran away from him, now they crowded around him. There was no excitement, but an earnest determination to know something of the Saviour. One by one the natives put away their idols, and took upon themselves the yoke of Christ, and in the end over a thousand disciples were enrolled. In course of time, an effort was made to introduce rum at Bansa Manteke, but the people would not have it. So it appears that the Gospel gives the victory over the drink demon.

The meeting was presided over by Mr. T. A. Denny. The outgoing brethren were commended to God in prayer. In the course of the evening a number of lime-light views were given of scenes in the Dark Continent. It is hoped that the good influence of the proceedings will be lasting, as well as immediately helpful to the Congo Balolo Mission.

CHRISTIAN WORK AMONG LEPERS.—The increased interest of Christian people in the poor lepers, of whom until recently but little was heard, has led to many inquiries regarding the work of the Moravian missionaries, who for seventy years have been engaged in this work of self-denying love. We are glad to learn that Bishop La Trobe, whose pamphlet on this subject we recently noticed (to be had from Rev. B. La Trobe, 29, Ely-place, E.C.), is still living; he is in his eighty-seventh year, and bringing forth fruit in his old age.

RAILWAY MISSION AT CAMBRIDGE.—Work full of hope is in progress, thanks mainly to the exertions of several consecrated ladies. The waiting room at the station having become too small for the Bible-class meetings conducted by Mrs. Brown, a hall has been built, capable of accommodating 350 persons. This was opened last week, the inaugural proceedings being presided over by Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard. The assemblage included gentlemen high up in the railway ranks, and friends holding important positions in the University. We rejoice to learn that many of the railway men are engaged in earnest and varied Christian work in the villages surrounding Cambridge.

Mr. Stanley's Letters.

There has come to hand the first instalment of those letters in which the intrepid explorer furnishes details of the events which were briefly summarised in his telegram published on November 5. The principal letter is dated August 5, and was written at Kafurro, an Arab settlement in the district of Central Africa called Karagwé. It occupies four and a half columns of The Times. Another letter, addressed to Mr. Marston, the publisher, bears date September 3, and is written from the C.M.S. station at the south end of the Victoria Nyanza. There is also a brief and pathetic letter from Emin Pasha, which the same mail has brought to his friend Dr. Schweinfurth. From these, but chiefly from the first, we gather the following facts:—

Sixteen months ago, Stanley, having gone back and gathered up the remains of his rear column, desolated by the murder of Major Barttelot, set forth on his third march through the Aruhwimi Forest, to return to Emin. It must be kept in mind that he had arranged with the Pasha and Mr. Jephson, whom he left with him, that they were to start from the Albert Nyanza about July 26, take up the stores and men he had placed at Fort Bodo, and form a new camp at the south end of the Lake, on high ground, at a place named Kavallis, to be in readiness for a march to the sea.

In the return march from Banalya, his expedition and himself were in very great straits for want of food, and he touched the lowest point of depression his undaunted spirit has ever known in all his journeyings. What was more trying, when he did get back to Fort Bodo, on December 20, 1888, he found Lieutenant Stairs and his fifty-one men still there, no word having been heard of Emin or Jephson, although they were months overdue.

In three days he gathered all up, abandoned Fort Bodo, and made direct for the Albert Nyanza. On January 11 (this year), growing anxious as to the position of his friends, he started in advance of his main caravan, and pushed forward. On the 16th, a messenger met him bearing letters from Jephson and Emin, also giving good reason for having failed to carry out the arrangements. They had been prisoners in Dufflé—one of the towns in Emin's province; the soldiers had mutinied; the Mahdist forces, 1500 strong, had come up the Nile to Lados, the most northerly station; the mutinous soldiers, alarmed by the ruthless slaughter committed by the Dervishes, set their governor free, and clung to him for succour; the Mahdists (Dervishes) were beaten back in one place, and went down to Khartoum for reinforcements; and now Emin and Jephson were at a spot called Tunguru on December 11, anxiously awaiting whatever succour Stanley could bring them.

Such is a meagre summary of the long and well-written letter handed to Stanley at Gaviras on January 16. On the 18th he sent back an answer, in which the supreme value of decision appears. He writes cheerily about himself, saying, "If it is to be a war of wits, why then I am ready for the cunningest Arab alive;" but he puts before Emin, very excusably irresolute, the imperative necessity of making up his mind. "Come, I am ready to end him all my strength and wit to assist him. But this time there must be no hesitation, but positive yea or nay, and home we go."

After quoting in full the letter of which this is the close, Stanley goes on to give reasons for feeling "a little put out" on finding that Jephson and Emin, instead of carrying out their arrangements with him, had "allowed themselves to be made prisoners on or about the very day they were expected by the garrison at Fort Bodo to reach them." Three weeks later, February 6, Jephson came to the camp Stanley had by that time established at Kavallis, and explained all by saying, "Sentiment is the Pasha's worst enemy; no one keeps Emin Pasha back but Emin Pasha himself." True words, no doubt; but all will allow that it was a noble sort of sentiment which prompted the faithful man to cling by the people whom his personal influence during twelve years had lifted so far up out of a state of barbarism that even while he was a prisoner in the hands of some of the soldiers no one dared to injure his person. Every consideration of a personal kind was strongly on the side of his leaving; the motives that might have detained him were motives of singular goodwill toward those to whose elevation he had given the last years of his life.

Mr. Stanley sent another message forthwith to the Pasha; but before there was time for it to reach him the camp at Kavallis was "electrified," on February 13, by a native courier bringing up a formal letter announcing that the Governor of the Equator Province was on the lake below with twelve officers and forty soldiers, who had come to put themselves in Stanley's hands, and to beg him to give them time to bring on "their brothers." The two steamers which had brought them were starting back for Wadelai to carry these fugitives to Kavallis; and we must suppose that the time on till May or later was occupied in thus waiting for relays of those who wished to go with their banished ruler. The letter gives no detail as to that. It proceeds to quote important passages from a formal report he had caused Mr. Jephson to write of his nine months' residence with Emin, showing that his authority was hopelessly gone, but bearing the very highest testimony to his character and the manner in which he had administered the Province. It would seem as if, after waiting till May 8, Stanley must have left the Lake without Emin, for in his great telegram he says it was on May 8 he started "homeward bound"; yet this letter, dated August 5, concludes thus: "Meantime you will have the satisfaction to know that Emin Pasha, after all, is close to our camp at the Lake shore; that carriers have been sent to him to bring up his luggage and assist his people." A junction must, however, have been formed; for Emin mentions in his letter the same interesting geographical discoveries as Stanley's telegrams have told about. Of these, however, the detailed accounts are not yet published while we write; though they are, doubtless, or soon will be, in the hands of Sir William Mackinnon. Poor Emin seems to be coming home "half blind."

We have no space to write about the other letter, that to Mr. Marston, which, indeed, rather exhibits the big, strong heart of the man than adds much to our information. It tells of a month's collapse after the long strain was past, during which he was lovingly nursed by Surgeon Parkes. In it, also, speaking of the manner in which the traitors who rebelled against Emin were suddenly crushed by the Mahdists, he says, "Was it Providence or luck? Let those who love to analyse such matters reflect on it. Traitors without the camp and traitors within were watched, and the most active conspirator was discovered, tried, and hung: the traitors without fell foul of one another and ruined themselves. If not luck, then it is surely Providence, in answer to good men's prayers far away." So let our readers feel that the man whose heroic work is filling the eye of Europe just now was not without thoughts of their prayers; and let the Lord's remembrancers give Him no rest until the light and liberty of the Gospel have supplanted the hideous darkness and oppression that now reign in Central Africa.

Another letter from Mr. Stanley appears in the morning papers of Tuesday, in which further details are given of the events connected with the release of Emin Pacha from his perilous position and the journey towards the sea. Now that the long silence has been fairly broken, we may expect to get ample accounts of this latest achievement of Mr. Stanley and its bearing on the future of the mysterious continent.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

It was a wise arrangement of Mr. Spurgeon's to introduce his evangelists, Messrs. Fullerton and Smith, for a week's mission, on the day he bade farewell to his congregation for his annual sojourn at Mentone. The people were ready for a united effort, as, for several weeks, the plan of campaign had been drawn and commended to the Lord in special prayer. The entire neighbourhood, mapped into convenient districts, had been visited, and personal invitations given to all residents. "Come yourself! Come often! Each time bring some two or more strangers. The more strange they are the better; for then they are not Gospel hardened! I shall be far away: but my heart will be with you at every service, and I shall be hungering to hear that you have a blessing!" These sentences are from a letter which Mr. Spurgeon sent by the visitors, and the earnest words told with great effect upon many.

At the first service the Tabernacle was crowded in every part with the scholars of neighbouring Sunday-schools, and each took away a hymn sheet with a list of the succeeding services printed on the margin—an effective way of getting a notice into 6000 homes at least. From Monday to Friday the congregations filled the Tabernacle, and Mr. Fullerton's addresses were of a high order. The gifts and graces of our brother are laid upon the altar of his ministry, and everything at his command is brought under tribute to his supreme aim as a soul-winner. On Tuesday and Thursday afternoons he gave Bible-readings, and on Wednesday addressed a congregation of about 2500 women. On Saturday evening the building was filled with an interested audience, and a song service was given, entitled "Homeward Bound." At all these meetings Mr. Marston Smith proved a worthy co-worker, and his addresses told with marked effect: his solos will not soon be forgotten, and in many a home and workshop the words will linger, and thus extend the scope of his ministry.

Last Lord's Day the interest reached a climax, and three services were held, Mr. Fullerton preaching morning and evening, and in the afternoon addressing a company of upwards of 2000 working men. One of the oldest members of the church remarked that it was one of the grandest days he had ever known at the Tabernacle.

It is too early to chronicle results, perhaps, but every service witnessed the confession of Christ by numbers who raised their hand, stood in silent testimony in their places, or entered the inquiry-room, where the workers were kept busy to a late hour. How many went away resolved to turn to the Lord, only the judgment day will reveal.

The Illustrated London News has published its sumptuously pictorial Christmas Number, which seems quite up to the mark of former years; but we strongly object to the countenance that two of its full-page pictures give to the drinking customs so common at this festive season. (1s.)

That established favourite, the Christmas Graphic (1s.), will be in the hands of the public on December 2. We have received an advance copy, which contains the usual features of pictorial and literary interest. The picture "Jessica" that forms a supplement is a fine specimen of English colour printing. (1s.)

The Christmas issues of The Boy's Own Paper, and its companion serial The Girl's Own Paper, are such as will be acceptable to their special clientèle. To plenty of pictures the former adds many narratives of the adventurous or frolicsome sort; the latter is, of course, much more chastened in tone, but equally attractive. The December part of The Girl's Own Paper gives some desirable information about the London Society for the Extension of University Teaching, and has a very appreciative account of the work of Mrs. Bickerdyke, the American "Sister Dora."

The Young Churchman's Seeking and Finding Almanac. 1d. Kirby & Co. This almanac meets the needs of a special and large class. To fix the attention on the Psalms and Lessons selected for Sunday throughout the year, six texts are printed in clear type for each day of the week. In a column opposite each verse the young searcher is expected to put chapter and verse. The proceeds of these almanacs are devoted to an excellent work among factory girls. M. A. E. W., River-hill, Bramford, Ipswich, will receive orders, and send specimen copy to intending purchasers.

A MISSION IN LIVERPOOL.

REV. J. F. T. HALLOWES has concluded a series of services in Stanley Congregational Church, Liverpool, and in the branch church at Knotty Ash, with the happiest results. The interest deepened from day to day, and the impression made in the large assemblies was of the most sacred kind. Many who were already Christians have testified to the rekindling of their joy, and have felt that, with a more intelligent apprehension of the work of Christ, they have been led to a new consecration of body, soul, and spirit to his service. Numbers who had been living without God and without hope in the world have been led to recognise the love that died to save them, and that bends from heaven to bless.

Mr. Hallowes' method, alike of instruction and appeal, has won the unqualified sympathy and co-operation of all who have been his helpers in the mission. In reading the lesson of the evening he always expounds, and not only with scholarly precision, but with great spiritual force; and in every address he has a message for the various classes of his hearers. Every night there has been a deep impression produced, and this has been created, not simply by appeals that stir the emotional nature, but by the presentation of truth commending itself to the understanding and the will.

There has been comparatively little inquiry-room work, such as is common at mission services, but many persons have received and returned with their name and address the cards of consecration given at the close of each service. Every evening Mr. Hallowes has invited all who wished for further light and help to remain, and some have done so. That the good seed is growing and bearing fruit we have abundant proof. In addition to the evening services, Mr. Hallowes held four meetings for children, which were largely attended, and were very attractive and impressive.

THE "MATHER FUND."

IN March last Mr. E. J. Mather, the founder of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, offered to collect a sum of £50,000 in aid of the Royal Provident Fund for Sea Fishermen, and the matter having been taken into consideration, Mr. Mather in August last was authorised by the Committee of Management of the Royal Provident Fund (Chairman, Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.) to undertake such collection. The £50,000 which Mr. Mather was to endeavour to raise (giving his services gratuitously) was to be called the "Mather Fund."

In connection with this matter the Committee of Management now desire publicity to be given to the following facts:—

On October 30 last, the November number of Toilers of the Deep (the official organ of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen) was issued containing a paragraph intimating the severance of Mr. Mather's connection with the Mission.

On the same day the Secretary of the Royal Provident Fund received a letter from Mr. Mather containing the following statement:—

"In view of the paragraph published in to-day's issue of Toilers of the Deep, I feel it would be an injustice to your committee and yourself for me to remain another day associated with the Royal Provident Fund, gladly as I would continue to collect until the £50,000 is reached."

The matter was immediately taken into consideration by the Committee of the Royal Provident Fund, and by their direction a letter was addressed to Mr. Mather on November 5 accepting his resignation and determining his connection with the Fund.

Mr. Mather, therefore, no longer represents the Fund for the purpose of receiving subscriptions, which in future should be sent to the bankers of the Fund, Messrs. Coutts & Co., 59, Strand, W.C.; or to the Secretary, 4, The Sanctuary, Westminster, S.W.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Douglas Russell, who recently went on a visit to America, conducted a fortnight's Gospel mission in Baltimore. After a visit to Philadelphia and New York, he proceeded west.

Falkirk, N.B.—From November 3 to 15 evangelistic services were held here, conducted by Mr. J. W. Moodie. During the series it is believed that many accepted Christ as their Saviour.

Dr. Munhall has met with many gratifying results of his earnest evangelical labours in a mission at York City, Pa. As at other places, he was specially helped in dealing with young men, and the temptations to which they are exposed.

Rev. F. C. Spurr, of Cardiff, held a short mission in Burnham, Somerset, last week. Services were held twice daily, and all largely attended by people of various denominations. Six addresses were delivered to believers, who received much help. Mr. Spurr has promised to visit Burnham in the summer season, and hold services for children, and Bible-readings for Christians.

Mr. E. P. Telford, whose departure for America we recently announced, is in the full swing of evangelistic work on the other side of the Atlantic. A week after landing he began in New Hampshire, and was enabled to see much blessing. Then he went to Troy, in New York State, where he worked in connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church. Later on he expects to conduct missions in Boston and New York city.

Mr. W. R. Lane during last week conducted a series of Gospel services in connection with the Ryde Y.M.C.A., which proved a great blessing to many young men and others. The meetings grew in interest night after night, and at the closing service, on Friday, the large chapel where the services were held was filled. Numbers stood up to make public confession of Christ as their Saviour, and others to ask for prayer.

High Barnet.—The work of the united Gospel mission begun last month under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. is continued. A special service for converts is held on Thursday evenings, in Mr. Terry's schoolroom, and is well attended. These services have been conducted by Bishop William Taylor (of Africa), Messrs. G. E. Morgan, John Wood, and W. Hind Smith. A spirit of Christian unity and true fellowship has been one of the most gratifying results of Mr. Henry Thorne's mission.

G. H. BENSON.

Huddersfield.—A mission has just been held in thirteen churches in the borough of Huddersfield. At the parish church, Rev. R. B. Ransford was the missioner, and at Mold Green, Rev. Dr. Morris. At St. John's, Rev. Dr. Morgan and his wife were working. Mrs. Morgan held meetings for women every afternoon in the parish schoolroom, which was crowded, and much blessing resulted from the effort. In the church Dr. Morgan held services for men and for children, as well as the ordinary mission services. The attendance was very large, and the after-meetings were very solemn times.

Sunderland.—The various ministers of this town have been working with one heart and soul in the promotion of a Gospel mission. Dr. H. Grattan Guinness, Jun., of London, took part during several days, and there was a great stirring of conscience. The Christians, who at first crowded the meetings, afterwards realised their duty and privilege to bring up the unbelievers, and the result was a large ingathering. There was much preparation for the effort, and already prayer is being offered by friends of the Established Church for blessing on another mission which it intends to hold by and by.

Elgin, N.B.—A very interesting mission is being carried on here in connection with the Y.W.C.A. The meetings have been held for the past two weeks, and have been largely attended by both sexes. A large number have been savingly awakened, and many of the Christians have got a fresh quickening. The meetings have been addressed by Mr. and Mrs. Davidson, of Inchmarlo; Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Oswald, of Aigas; Mrs. Stewart, of Logie; Mr. Anderson, of the Gordon Mission; and Mr. Butland, of H.M.S. Brilliant. The earnestness and happy enthusiasm of these ladies and gentlemen are very marked, and, although the ministers unhappily have not countenanced the mission, many Christians have been hearty in their support. The meetings are being carried on this week.

JOHN SCOTT.

Bath.—A series of evangelistic services, conducted by Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Harrison, have been held at Hay Hill Chapel. The meetings extended over a fortnight, and much spiritual blessing was realised.

Totnes, South Devon.—A united mission in connection with the Congregational, Baptist, and Wesleyan Churches, has been held here. Rev. R. Balgarnie was the missioner. On Sunday morning, a united communion service was held in the Baptist Chapel, and in the evening the three congregations met in the Congregational Chapel. All the week-evening services were crowded. Revs. J. Johns, W. R. Bowman, and J. Whincup took part in the mission.

Loanhead, Midlothian.—Evangelistic meetings, extending over three weeks, have concluded here. The attendances were, perhaps, unprecedented in the district. Conversions, sometimes many, occurred every night. The attendance steadily increased, there being over 600 present the last night. Singers from Carrubber's-close Mission, Edinburgh, assisted the local choirs Indeed, the self-sacrificing efforts of these friends, speakers, and singers, and the "unity of brethren," have, with God's blessing, been the means of untold good.

Rev. W. A. Meaton, of the Christian Instruction Society, has conducted a three weeks' mission at Oakhill and Nettlebridge. The usual blessed results of concerted effort were enjoyed. Christians were quickened and backsliders restored. Children were brought to Jesus and sinners saved. At Nettlebridge, the men who attend the mission-hall are mostly miners. Mr. F. Spencer, J.P., who owns the mines, employs an evangelist, Mr. Gabe, to labour among the people, and himself takes a practical interest in the spiritual welfare of his workpeople.

Doncaster.—Mr. Arrowsmith, of the Children's Special Service Mission, had wonderful blessing vouchsafed to him in his work at Doncaster, from Nov. 9 to 19. Many of the children stayed to the after-meetings, and showed, by their earnest answers to questions put to them, that they really longed to find the way to Jesus. Many young ladies from the boarding-schools were deeply impressed; while the meetings for parents and guardians and for Sunday-school teachers roused those who attended them to a greater sense of responsibility. Nor were the boys and young men left out; so that many have started along the heavenly road during Mr. Arrowsmith's visit.

Mr. Herbert R. Francis on Sunday last concluded a most successful ten days' mission in the Parish of St. John, Chelsea, S.W., of which Rev. F. W. A. Wilkinson is vicar. The services were held in the large mission-hall at the World's End, King's-road, and resulted in great blessing to many who attended. Every night there were some inquiring the way of salvation. In the afternoons, Mr. Francis gave most interesting lectures on the Tabernacle in the Wilderness, illustrated by his beautiful model. The mission was closed by a special thanksgiving service in the church, when the Lord's Supper was observed. The service was conducted by the Vicar, and an address was given to the converts by Mr. Francis.

SALVATION ARMY HOLINESS CONVENTION.—On Monday and Tuesday a Holiness Convention was held by the Salvation Army at Exeter Hall, in view of a special effort just commenced for the salvation of 100,000 souls before the end of the winter. Meetings were held in the morning, afternoon, and evening on both days, General Booth presiding. "Victorious Religion" formed the subject of brief talks by a number of officers and soldiers, the addresses being interspersed with singing and prayer. At the evening meeting on Monday General Booth read from the third chapter of Revelation, in which the Church of Laodicea is reprobated for being lukewarm, neither cold nor hot. He made running comments as he read, being very emphatic on the fact of God's displeasure with Christians who were neither cold nor hot, representing them as half saved and half unsaved. To be half-and-half was to be in a wretched state, and it offended God. Proceeding, Mr. Booth made an appeal to come right over to the side of Christ, who would assist and give power over all evil propensities. There were three main things needed for victory—first, they were to aim at complete victory by getting a clean heart and the baptism of the Holy Ghost; secondly, they must be willing to pay the price; thirdly, they must trust in the living God to do all for them.

UNION HALL MISSION.

GOD is blessing the work of our Mission. Sixteen days' Gospel services have been held at Queen's Park Hall, Kilburn-lane. Many families were visited, and a band went out nightly, singing and preaching the Gospel in the open-air. The indoor services were fairly well attended. We know that some have been led to the Saviour.

The work at Union Hall has been revived, and souls won for Christ. At Kensal Hall the work is now being prospered of God. In Brentford, also, we have had encouraging results from the word preached. We hope soon to erect an iron room in this place. A new iron room, the Shaftesbury Hall, was opened on Tuesday, last week, at Dorothy-road, Lavender-hill. It is a most comfortable one, and will seat over three hundred persons. Special services follow the opening.

The expenses of the work are always greater in the winter season, and there are many poor to whom we shall be thankful to be able to minister some temporal help.

THROUGH SOUTH AFRICA.

MRS. OSBORN has lately returned to Cape Town, after a lengthened mission journey. Not the least important feature was the consolidating of the South African Railway Mission, which now extends over the Cape Colony and Natal. The railway employés were the first object on this journey. Most successful meetings were held; many professed to decide for Christ. Mrs. Osborn and her workers travelled over thirteen thousand miles to hold these services; one time, with icicles hanging from the carriage roof, at others, under a broiling African sun. One man, a Jew, said, "I do not believe in their Christ: but, if it enables ladies to bear a day like this [it was summer] to tell men about Him, I'll never mock his name again." The railway officials have been exceedingly kind. A special saloon was given to Mrs. Osborn for her and her workers' future use. They have also given free use of waiting-rooms and goods-sheds for meetings.

Kimberley was visited, to see what openings there were for work in the compounds. The Cape General Mission is making this a branch of its work.

Passing over the Eastern Province of the Cape Colony, Mrs. Osborn found thousands of "Red Kaffirs," as dark and ignorant of God as any in Central Africa. The Wesleyan, Congregationalist, Church of England, and London Missionary Societies have a few stations. But there are thousands unreached. The people are accessible enough. The journey extended to Natal and Zululand. There are many interesting missions in Natal.

DOVER.—Four simultaneous special efforts have been carried on here during a part of this month. The first to commence was conducted in Christ Church parish, by Mr. Skinner, of the Evangelisation Society. Then Mr. and Mrs. Somerset Gardner began a ten days' mission in Salem Chapel. During the week of their services, Rev. John Wilkinson, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, held three meetings on consecutive days, on neutral ground, in behalf of Israel, speaking of their "Past," "Present," and "Future." Many of the resident Jews were moved to attend to hear his addresses. And just as the Christ Church and Salem missions were closing, the Salvation Army had a special campaign for two days. These several efforts did not appreciably interfere with each other, and from all of them good has resulted. The hand of the Lord has been with his people.

Mrs. Meredith's Work.

I SHOULD like to corroborate the evidence of Dr. Barnardo as to the parentage of the children rescued by such institutions as ours. The cases received at the Princess Mary Village Homes from the deepest moral and physical degradation, are generally children of Roman Catholic parents. The prisoners, whose little ones are sent to us, are, as a rule, members of the Roman Catholic Church, who profess to be Protestants when they enter our prisons. By this action of theirs they put it out of their power to claim the direction of their children's religion. They are committed to us as not belonging to the Church of Rome, and we bring them up in the Established Church; and I desire to state that its Scriptural doctrines, by the power of the Holy Spirit, are blessed to the salvation of many of them.

We are privileged to see the results of our work in the lives and deaths of the girls we have taught, and can testify that not one of them joins the Church of Rome, either at home or abroad. I have recently seen many of our children in the United States, and they are all Protestants, and connected with various Scriptural churches. In no case had any of them been led to accept the false doctrines that are unhappily so freely circulated in these days among us. With great thankfulness I bear witness to the truth of the promise, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

"There's a lot of this spiritualism about here," said one of our "old girls;" "and I always say I won't stay in the house with one of those clairvoying people, whether they are employers or fellow servants. One of them said to me, 'Your brother wants to speak to you.' 'Where is he?' I asked. 'He is in heaven,' was the answer. 'Tell him to stay there,' said I; 'he'd better not mind me till I get there.' 'He can't be happy,' said my friend, 'without he hears from you.' 'Then he isn't in heaven,' I said, 'or he'd be satisfied; I know more about him than you do.'

"They had found out I had a brother, and they are always making out that people's dead relations want to send them messages; and if people are badly taught, and don't know their Bible, they may give in to them. But I know it is dreadful sin to have anything to do with the devil, and it is he that gets up spirits to meddle with us; and they do interfere sometimes, and do awful things to people; but I never listen, for fear they might injure me. I was taught to 'renounce the devil and all his works.'"

Earnestly praying that all the sinful "lusts of the flesh" may be as truly resisted, I rejoiced in this testimony to the blessing that attends our labours in the Lord.

THE IMPORTANCE OF OUR POSITION

as a Church of England certified industrial school for the training of girls is very great. We have the legal guardianship of them until they are sixteen years old, and practically for life. None of our girls willingly go back to their relations. In fact, they go abroad of their own accord, and we have correspondence with them all over the world. The business of this correspondence is large, and like all our work, now becoming extensive. We greatly need increased help to carry it on adequately. We always keep 200 girls in the Village Homes, but we have now scattered about an ever-increasing number of the young whom we are rescuing from crime, and seeking to train in the way of eternal life.

There is, it is true, a decrease in the number of women in our gaols, but there is an increase of evil among children and young persons that presages future trouble if we do not forestall its grasp. Daily we have applications, from persons of all classes, the refined and educated not excepted, for aid to restrain girls who are manifesting vicious tendencies. We are, therefore, extending our work in the direction required, to meet this terrible mischief. I am sure that our want of money to do it well only needs to be known. It is now so many years since I began this work, which has been so blessed and owned of God, and has been granted such visible success, that I know He will command the supply for us, and that his servants will send us all we require for thepresent distress.

IN THE PRISON MISSION

we receive all sorts of sinners, and speak to them only of the salvation of Christ, without reference to their religious profession. As a rule, the poor, sad women who come to us for help are Roman Catholics. They avoid the ministrations of their own church from their dread of the discipline they have incurred. It is our joy that many find peace in the Lord Jesus Christ without the office of priest or church. This is all we have to do. We bring them to the Saviour, and He pardons their sin. We leave them free to attend any other church services besides ours that they choose. They seldom return to the communion which offers them salvation only at the end of a life of penitence and penance. It is an error to suppose that the Church of Rome gives absolution to all who confess deadly sins, whenever they apply for it. The final blessing is postponed until this life is passing away, and the spirit is entering on the new phase of existence; then the viaticum is administered, and the work of the Church is done.

Our Prison Mission, conducted without controversy, is thus doing a silent Protestant work, which is rescuing souls and bringing them to the fold of the Good Shepherd, in larger numbers than we dare mention. It disgraces our Christian name to do so much of our "charity," "without interfering with the religion." If we added courage to our faith, and honestly and openly worked for the Saviour whom we profess to serve, our hospitals and other institutions, now sunk under the cognomen of philanthropic, would be supported by God, and showing forth his praise. Nor would there be occasion to beg for the means of perpetuating the agencies that proclaim Scriptural and Protestant truths in our midst.

The department of our work, which has a special claim on Christians, is

THE MEDICAL MISSION.

It labours among the families who worship with us, and who, when "sick and needy," are gathered into our missions for prayer, and medicine to heal their diseases, and to deliver them from temporary distress. These are silent sufferers, who do not seek relief from the union, and whose homes we are bound to preserve for them. While we aid the discharged prisoners of various religious professions, we must not forget the members of our own church, but provide forthose of the "household of faith," and by bearing each other's burdens fulfil the law of Christ.

Not less than £2000 will clear our current expenses off at the end of the present year. For several months a very small amount has been contributed by the public. The maintenance of the institution has depended during this time on my own resources. These are at an end.

SUSANNA MEREDITH.

143, Clapham-road, London, S.W.

[We trust the significance of these last ominous words will not be overlooked.—ED.]

REGULATED VICE IN INDIA.—Mr. Maurice Gregory contributes to The Banner of Asia for November some startling facts on the disregard, by the military authorities at Lucknow, of the mandate of the House of Commons with reference to the licensing of vice. These facts are likely to excite considerable surprise among the members of that House.

THE ANTI-SLAVERY CONFERENCE.—At the meeting of this Conference in Brussels, the Belgian King said he felt hopeful in regard to the steps now being taken for the suppression of the slave trade; he was firmly determined to suppress it in the Congo States. He relied on the support of British public opinion to assist his efforts. He feared that domestic slavery in Africa would not be done away with for many years. Mr. F. W. Fox read an address from the Aborigines' Protection Society, expressing the hope that the Powers would take measures to destroy the legal status of slavery, and prohibit the trade in alcoholic liquors and firearms.

MR. HENRY COOK'S WORK.—The mission ship Herald of Mercy was recently at Folkestone, where Gospel services were held among the fishermen and their wives. One evening about a hundred persons, after partaking of tea on board, listened to a faithful address by Rev. W. Haslam. At the close a prayer-meeting was held, at which some of the people joyously confessed Christ as their Saviour. The vessel has since returned to Normandy, where of late so much truly blessed work has been done. Her recent voyages have not, however, been by any means comfortable. Caught in a heavy sea, the Herald nearly rolled over, for want of thirty or forty tons of iron ballast. Mr. Cook's address is 47, Stoke-road, Gosport.

The Book World.

A new edition has been published of Miss von Finkelstein's vividly interesting sketch of "Child Life in Jerusalem"—LULU. (1s. Authors' Co-operative Publishing Co.)

Those who appreciate the peculiar flavour of the northern speech will find in THE WAVERLEY PROVERBIAL BIRTHDAY BOOK a capital collection of wise saws and pregnant utterances cast in the proverbial mould. (Remington & Co.)

MORE THAN KIN: By Mrs. Emma Hornibrook. Wesleyan Book-room, 66, Paternoster-row. An interesting tale well told. The pride of the haughty squire, the fine Christian manliness of Aaron Hett, the quiet but real piety of Lena Brough, and the several characteristics of the other leading personages of the story are conceived and worked out with insight and ability.

WOMEN OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. By E. M. Dewhurst. 1s. 4d. Marshall Brothers. An excellent companion to "Women of the Gospels," by the same author. From Scripture notices of Eve, Sarah, Hagar, Jochebed, &c., among matrons, and such maidens as Miriam, Ruth, &c., the writer draws most profitable lessons for Christian wives and mothers. Her style is pithy, but never pedantic—full of feeling, yet never sentimental or fanciful. We strongly commend the book, not only for mothers' meetings, but for teachers of senior classes, Y.W.C.A. secretaries, and Christian mistresses for household use.

THE BIBLICAL ILLUSTRATOR: ST. LUKE. Vol. ii. 7s. 6d. Nisbet. This is a book displaying marvellous industry on the part of its editor, Rev. J. S. Exell. Anecdotes, emblems, and illustrations, expository, scientific, historical, and homiletic, have been gathered from a wide field of literature, and the result is a work which, to the ordinary reader, will be more useful than a Commentary; while to preachers who have good libraries it cannot but prove of great service as admirably combining many essentially practical features. This volume carries forward the elucidation of Luke's Gospel to the end of chapter xiii.

THE SERMON BIBLE: ISAIAH TO MALACHI. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. As a guide to the sermon literature of the day, and a mine of homiletic wealth, the "Sermon Bible" occupies a place of usefulness peculiarly its own. Hundreds of preachers are quoted, and outlines given of many valuable discourses and expositions. There are contributions from representatives of various churches, and on the whole the selection may be commended as displaying excellent judgment. Undoubtedly this work will provide much suggestion for hard-worked preachers. By this, the fourth volume, the survey of the Old Testament is admirably completed.

THE STOCKWELL RECITER. Rev. Vernon J. Charlesworth, head master of the Stockwell Orphanage, has compiled a collection of old and new favourites, for which he will doubtless be thanked in many a home, school, and Band of Hope. As a bound volume (380 pages) it is a capital book; the whole may also be had in two sixpenny parts, and in twelve penny numbers. The collection embraces every variety of composition suited for juvenile recitation and dialogue of an interesting and instructive character, and we trust it will secure that popular reception which its high character so justly merits. Mr. Charlesworth set himself to supply a distinct want in modern educational literature, and unquestionably he has supplied it well. (Passmore & Alabaster.)

THE NEW POPULAR EDUCATOR. Vol. ii. 5s. Cassell & Co. This is truly called "a complete encyclopædia of elementary and advanced education." Close upon twenty subjects, including several languages and a number of sciences, are dealt with in the present stage of the work. The "new" Educator is in many ways a great advance upon previous editions. The treatment is modernised; the articles are in many cases more thorough and clear; and the form of the book is much more convenient. Coloured plates and maps are given, as well as engravings, when required to elucidate the studies. Only a firm of immense resources could produce such an extremely useful work. Undoubtedly, the past issues have proved of great service to many thousands of people. We trust that, in this vastly improved form, the Educator will be more than ever helpful, alike in promoting intelligence in youth, and advancing culture in persons of riper years.

THE BOY HUNTERS OF KENTUCKY, by Edward S. Ellis (Cassell & Co.), is a thrilling narrative of veritable adventures in the American pioneering days of fifty years ago.

A PRESENT SALVATION. By Rev. T. Lyte, M.A. Nisbet & Co. When self-salvation, salvation by works and ceremonies, is so widely taught by pulpit and press, it is refreshing to light on such a sound, vigorous exposition. The book deserves a place on every soul-seeker's bookshelf.

THERE GO THE SHIPS. John Haddon & Co. These chatty, rollicking recollections of "an old sea dog," edited by his son, give us glimpses of doughty deeds of prowess done by our naval commanders at the beginning of the century. With his record of facts our seafaring friend mingles many excellent Christian reflections.

LIFE'S STAGES. By James Stark. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier. Without exhibiting any great originality of treatment, Mr. Stark appears in this series of discourses on family relations and duties, as a fresh, plainspoken, and practical teacher. He looks at life from its true standpoint, and he is at once sound and sensible as a monitor.

DAVID LIVINGSTONE. By Arthur Montefiore. (1s. 6d. S. W. Partridge & Co.) An admirably-condensed account of the lifework of the great African missionary explorer. The references to Stanley are of peculiar interest at a time when that adventurous traveller is again emerging into public view, after such a long absence.

RUSSIAN PICTURES. By Thomas Michell. 5s. Religious Tract Society. This is a welcome addition to the fine national series of descriptive and pictorial works issued by this Society. Perhaps no European country is so little known in England as Russia, and certainly no country ought to be better known amongst us, considering the political relations that must ever exist between the two peoples. We thank Mr. Michell for his deeply interesting and informing work, which is, of course, profusely and splendidly illustrated.

LA MISSION AU ZAMBÈZE. Par Théophile Jousse. (5 francs. Paris: Librairie Fischbacher, 33, Rue de Seine.) It is intensely gratifying to note the lively interest of French Christians in the work of missions in Africa. This volume, by a former missionary, tells the story of the most recent African undertaking of the Paris Society of Evangelical Missions. Copious extracts are given from the correspondence of M. Coillard, always lucid, and often very rich in incident; and the result is an important contribution to the history of evangelistic endeavour in the Dark Continent.

SIXTY FOLK TALES. Translated by A. H. Wratislaw. (7s. 6d. Elliot Stock.) This is an extremely curious collection of Selavonic folk lore, embracing a host of apocryphal and allegorical stories current among the peoples of Bohemia, Moravia, Hungary, Poland, Russia, Servia, Bulgaria, Croatia, and other sections of the Slav race. The stories, as a rule, are as coherent as the nursery rhymes and tales of our childhood; but they are much more elaborate, and more pregnant with hidden meanings and applications. The industrious translator has produced a singular and entertaining volume.

WAYS AND MEANS. By Isabella Fyvie Mayo. (5s. Religious Tract Society). In the guise of familiar talks between a thoughtful Scotch country doctor, his wife, and their neighbours, we have here very edifying, sensible, and practical expositions of how to train boys and girls, the claims of home life, social gossip, the ethics of housebuilding, hurry and overwork, town life versus country life, recreations, family hospitality, and other cognate topics. Mrs. Mayo's attractive literary style is well known, and her method of sermonising is calculated to hold the attention of the reader. Her judgments will be found to accord fully with the fundamental doctrines of the Christian faith.

SELF-DISCIPLINE: A Memoir of Percy Clabon Glover, M.A. By his father, Vicar of St. Luke's, Holloway. Nisbet & Co. The story of a short but noble life, nobly told. Though the affection of a parent mellows the narrative, there is no favouritism. Fault and virtue, victory and defeat, are faithfully recorded. As a boy, Percy Glover must have been winning; as a young man, most attractive. Successful both in mental and physical competitions, he shines yet more in things spiritual. The account of his travels in Australia and America is most interesting. Though mysteriously cut off in his prime, "he being dead, yet speaketh." As a Christmas gift for young men, or a prize, it would be hard to find a better book.

BABYHOOD. Vol. v. 10s. 6d. R. J. Bush, 92 and 93, Fleet-street, E.C. This monthly magazine appeals to a very large proportion of the population, and its appeal is as strong as the claims of babydom are universally imperious. The aim is to help parents and nurses, by indicating the means and methods whereby the health and comfort of the younger children may best be assured. The bound volume is an extremely useful and interesting body of nursery information.

THE MAIDEN PREACHER. By S. L. Thorne. 1s. 6d. Partridge. These pages give a good deal besides a story of the life of Miss Mary O'Bryon (afterwards Mrs. Samuel Thorne), for many years a devoted member of the Bible Christian community. Her fame as a preacher was specially great in the West of England. The book is largely made up of extracts from her journal. If these extracts had been fewer, the interest would have been more sustained. It is unfortunate that the pages should have been weighted with matters of ephemeral importance.

THE CHILDREN'S ANGEL: A Year's Sermons and Parables for the Young. By Rev. J. Reid Howatt. 2s. 6d. Nisbet. The author has a peculiar faculty for reaching the hearts of the little ones. These addresses are as pointed in purpose as they are homely in form; and they are likely to assist Sunday-school teachers as well as prove very attractive to the young. The volume receives its title from the first address, which is founded on Rev. xxi. 12, in which allusion is happily made to the words of our Lord: "Their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven" (Matt. xviii. 10).

SACRIFICE AS SET FORTH IN SCRIPTURE: The Carey Lecture for 1888. By James Murphy, D.D. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. A series of seven lectures designed to illustrate the propitiation made for the sins of the world by the Lord Jesus Christ. The treatment is sound and lucid. The thoughtful reader cannot but be struck with the strong testimony that such a volume as this bears to the inspiration of the Bible. The occasion of the earliest typical sacrifices inevitably links the book of Genesis with Christ, the heavenly antitype; as also the redemption that was wrought by the Real Sacrifice presupposes the fall of our first parents with the narration of which the Bible opens. As the subject runs all through Scripture, and is of capital importance, the value of a good expository work, such as this unquestionably is, cannot be over-estimated.

IMAGO CHRISTI: THE EXAMPLE OF JESUS CHRIST. By Rev. James Stalker. (5s. Hodder & Stoughton.) This work supplies a real desideratum in theological literature. Dividing the circle of human life into segments, each of which represents an extensive sphere of experience and duty, the author follows our Lord through them one after another, and shows us how He conducted Himself in each. The pages are beacon lights, guiding us in our life's journey; and no one can peruse them without being profoundly impressed with the wealth of the Gospels in counsels of perfection as to human conduct. This work is, however, no cold statement of ethical appearances, nor is it an external imitation of Christ which it points. In the new birth Christ's own nature is communicated to us, and as we abide in Him, and his Word abides in us, we shall live out the life which these helpful pages show to have been that of the Son of God in the days of his tabernacling among us.

FACTS AND THEORIES AS TO A FUTURE STATE. By F. W. Grant. Holness. This is the second edition, enlarged, of an able American work, having for its purpose a consideration of the Scripture doctrine with reference to current denials of eternal punishment. The author is strong at argument and exceptionally capable in debate. He not only examines the contentions of men of known piety and learning, but also dissects the mischievous views of sects and parties which have come but little before the religious public. It is a weak point of the book that so much attention is given to a disproof of the obviously extreme statements of men whose aim has been to make the Bible support their peculiar philosophy. The author has left untouched some of the main arguments for the views which he opposes. We could well have dispensed with the exposure of some of the speculations which the author brings under his sledge-hammer criticism, but surely the doctrine known as "the larger hope" should have been exposed as based on the sandy foundation of what men have chosen to call "the fatherhood of God." We regret to add that the tone by no means corresponds in gravity with the sublime subject of the book.

OOD MEN AND TRUE. By Alexander H. Japp. T. Fisher Unwin.) The "workers in the of beneficence and benevolence" sketched his bulky volume by Mr. Japp, are Norman leod, Edward Denison, Arnold Toynbee, John ington, Charles Kingsley, James Hannington, n Stanley and his father, Thomas Guthrie, Titus Salt, and Samuel Plimsoll. A hetero- ous list, some readers will think, but all "good and true," according to their lights. In mending the book as a fresh and stimulating rd of benevolent deeds honestly done for the ering of mankind, we must not be supposed to orse all the author says in explanation of the logical or ecclesiastical views of some of his oes.

MESSRS. T. NELSON & SONS.

he publications of this firm are got up with arkable artistic taste and typographical beauty.

MITTEN AND SLAIN, by A.V.V., is a very power- y written tale of modern social life in China, strating the fatal fascinations of the opium it. "I hate you English; go, and leave us in misery." These startling words from the last e of the book ought to awaken, in our national rt and conscience, feelings of remorse and entance for our share in an awful crime. (2s. 6d.)

-OING ON PILGRIMAGE. By Lucy Taylor. This k is intended to be "a companion to the Pil- n's Progress, for young pilgrims"; and the idea ell worked out. A short sketch of Bunyan's is given, with the circumstances that led him to his immortal work. The rest of the book is a atement and exposition of the allegory, in a n well fitted to impress its meaning on youthful ds. (2s.)

wo very readable, instructive, and entertaining ies for the young are MARGIE AT THE HAR- R LIGHT, by Rev. E. A. Rand (2s. 6d.); TIMOTHY TATTERS, by T. M. Callwell (1s. 6d.). first is an American tale, showing what good oung woman in humble life can accomplish by d and influence. The other is an Irish story, capitally sets forth the vivacious character of youthful scions of that sprightly branch of human family; its evident bearing on present- events in the sister isle lends to it an added erest.

BEYOND THE BLACK WATERS. By A.L.O.E. ale of love and tragedy, the scene of which is tly laid in India, and which reveals the prac- d hand of the well-known authoress. In- ectly, the story throws a very interesting light the history of the Karen race, among whom the spel has achieved such wonderful triumphs. e reader is also introduced to the Indian penal lement at the Andaman Islands, where, Miss cker informs us, there are 13,000 convicts. The nful features of the narrative are balanced by evidence it affords of the power of the Chris- n faith to uphold in times of supreme and over- elming trial. (2s. 6d.)

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

EARLY DAYS for 1889. 1s. 6d. Wesleyan Metho- t Book Room. These full pages are instructive well as entertaining. There are many illustra- ns. Among the articles of an historical character, several entitled "Doing and Bearing for Christ's ke," some of them excellent alike in tone and bstance.

Rev. Charles Bullock's monthly magazines all ke very attractive volumes. THE FIRESIDE AGAZINE (7s. 6d.) has completed its twenty-sixth ar. It is a periodical with several excellent tures, prominent among which is the attention en to the many subjects of common life. We quire to be familiar with the things that touch most closely, though, strange to say, such homely ics are but slightly considered by us. In these autiful pages, this class of literature is abun- ntly supplied, written in a decidedly Christian ne. In a word, the magazine is the welcome est which its homely name implies, and, there- re, deserves an enlarging circle of readers. The ny illustrations of the volume are fully up to the ndard of art, and the contributions entertaining d instructive. HAND AND HEART (2s.) deserves wide circle of readers. Its pages are fully strated, and the contents delightfully varied. HE DAY OF DAYS (2s) is bright, and always eresting to young and old alike. "The Leaves Christian Biography" are a specially attrac- e feature. HOME WORDS (2s.) is also a capital ok, and we shall be glad to hear of its great efulness in serial form being supplemented by nore general adoption of the volume in village raries.

Obituary.

REV. HENRY POPE.

ON the last day of October, in a quiet village in Devonshire, there passed away a man whose career had been truly remarkable. Rev. Henry Pope, of Sandford, near Exeter, died at the good old age of seventy-three. He had held the post of pastor of the Congregational Church of his native parish for nearly forty years, and for the whole of that time had worked neither for gain nor reward. He was the son of a farmer in the parish, and was brought up as an adherent of the Established Church. On attaining to manhood's estate he was led to connect himself with the Congregationalists at the neighbouring town of Crediton. His father was so enraged at this change in the ecclesiastical views of his son that he cut him off from any family property, and forbad him to come under the parental roof.

Mr. Pope, who at this time was nearly thirty years of age, gained the sympathy of many Christian friends in Devonshire, and with their help was the means of building a Congregational Chapel at Sandford, towards which he himself contributed £150 out of his own private means. The chapel was opened in 1848, and Mr. Baker acted as minister for a few years, Mr. Pope residing in the village as voluntary evangelist. On the death of Mr. Baker in 1852, Mr. Pope was requested to become the minister, as he had so lovingly and devotedly worked as evangelist among them for so long.

For more than thirty years he lived and worked among his people, giving his time, services, and money for the good of Christ's cause. He was instrumental in starting cottage services in three hamlets in the parish, and these have regularly been supplied with preachers of the Gospel for many years. Three years ago increasing bodily infirmity compelled him to greatly relinquish work, but this has been well carried on by means of lay preachers from Exeter.

MRS. HERMANS.

We are sorry to announce the death on Saturday, Nov. 16, at Glasgow, of Emmeline Smith, wife of Mr. Francis Hermans. Until her marriage, she was a much-used and devoted worker at the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff-highway, London. For five years she has worked at Honfleur and Havre, in France, and latterly in Glasgow. She will be greatly missed and mourned by many sailors in all parts of the world.

DR. FANNY BUTLER.

The death is announced of Miss Fanny Jane Butler, at Srinagar, Kashmir. Having passed very high examinations in medicine and earned her diploma, Dr. Fanny Butler was sent out by the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society to Jabalpur in the autumn of 1880. In 1883 she was transferred to Bhagalpur in Bengal, where she laboured as a Medical Missionary till the spring of 1887, when she returned to England on furlough. In the spring of last year she was sent, in response to the invitation of the C.M.S, to Kashmir, to take up medical missionary work among the women in that country.

MR. THOMAS A. WALKER.

The death occurred on Monday morning, at his residence, Mount Baron, near Chepstow, of Mr. T. A. Walker, the well-known contractor of the Manchester Ship Canal and other large engineering concerns. Mr. Walker had worked his way up from the ranks, until he had become one of the largest contractors in the country. Being himself a Christian man, he took deep interest in the welfare of the thousands of men in his service. In the excavation of the Manchester Ship Canal, which is still far from completion, some 13,000 navvies are engaged. Mr. Walker not only displayed a solicitude for the bodies of his men, but his provision of mission-halls evidenced that he cared also for their spiritual necessities. Fourteen mission-halls are in active operation along the canal, with a missionary attached to each, the cost of their maintenance being personally provided by Mr. Walker. In these halls services are regularly held, and the ministrations of the missionaries have proved very beneficial.

MR. JAMES BUNYAN.

Last week the grave closed over the mortal remains of Mr. James Bunyan, one of the early pioneers of the temperance reformation in Dalkeith, who for many years was actively engaged in Christian and temperance work in Manchester. For several years past he was an indefatigable worker in connection with the visitation work of the Gospel temperance organisation of Carrubber's Close Mission, and among the young people of that Mission. He also had done much service for the Edinburgh Band of Hope Union, and his efforts in the Millerhill district and at Newton range will long be remembered. He was one of the happiest of men, and carried sunshine with him wherever he went. Many Christian organisations in the city will miss his kindly help, and the inmates of such institutions as the House of Refuge, in whom he took a great interest, will specially miss his kindly counsels and his warm-hearted endeavours in their behalf. Mr. Bunyan was brother-in-law to Mr. James Darling, of the Regent Hotel, with whom he heartily co-operated in all Christian enterprises in which he and his family are interested. Deceased was seventy-four years of age.

REV. DR. MACFADYEN.

The Congregational churches have sustained a great loss by the death of Rev. Dr. Macfadyen, of Manchester, which occurred on Thursday week. Last year he and his congregation celebrated their "silver wedding." As a pastor Dr. Macfadyen occupied a unique position, and was generally regarded as having approached nearest to the ideal of a Congregational minister. He made it a point of visiting the families of his large congregation of 1400 persons at least once a year, while the Sunday schools were no less systematically visited. These were a special feature of his church work, there being about 3000 scholars on the roll of Chorlton-road school and its branches. These schools are open every night in the week, attractions of one kind or another being provided for the young people, so that their schools have almost become their clubs. One of his last public services was rendered to the cause of temperance, for he was a selected preacher for the National Temperance Congress, recently held in Birmingham. On Sunday, October 20, he preached in the morning at Edgbaston; in the afternoon he spoke in the Town Hall, Birmingham; and at night he preached with remarkable power in Carr's-lane Chapel (Dr. R. W. Dale's) to an immense congregation, the doors having to be closed to prevent others trying to enter the building. A fortnight later, on Monday, 4th inst., he was to have presided at a meeting in the Mission House, Blomfield-street, London, but the sickness was upon him which has ended fatally.

M. EUGENE BERSIER, PARIS.

The Reformed Churches of France are in mourning, consequent upon the death of this renowned orator and pastor. M. Bersier had for some short time suffered from a chest affection, but until a few hours before his end he was hard at work. On Monday evening last week he delivered an address in one of the McAll mission-rooms; at two o'clock on Tuesday morning he succumbed to an apoplectic seisure. Descended from Huguenot refugees, he was born in the Canton Vaud in 1831. He settled in Paris at the age of twenty, and formed a close friendship with the celebrated M. de Pressensé. As pastor of the Free Church, he soon commanded high public esteem. In 1875 a large church was built for him near the Arc de Triomphe, which drew the largest and most influential Protestant congregation in Paris. M. Bersier ultimately connected this congregation with the Reformed, or Calvinistic body, though, unlike other pastors of that community, he accepted no stipend from the State. The statue of Coligny, which was recently unveiled in Paris, would probably never have been erected but for his warm interest. Some of M. Bersier's sermons have been translated into various languages. The sentiment of the religious press of France is in tune with the words of Le Signal: "M. Bersier's name carried authority in the Reformed Church; but it was equally well known in the Catholic world and the republic of letters."

IRELAND.—Gospel missions have been held by Rev. G. Mahaffy at Drumgooland; by Rev. James Stewart at Newtonwards; by Rev. A. Fullerton at Castlecaulfield; by Rev. J. Kirkwood in various parts of the South; by Mr. Robinson and Rev. Wesley Guard in Belfast; and by Rev. J. Potter at Stranorlar.

King Edward-street Ragged School.

SPITALFIELDS has proved a good field for ragged school enterprise. The comprehensive as well as eminently successful work superintended by Mr. Charles Montague is an excellent illustration of how such endeavours can bless the poor. Mr. Montague is a typical example of ragged school teachers who work con amore. He has been identified with the King Edward-street schools for nearly forty-four years, and has held the position of honorary superintendent for upwards of a quarter of a century.

Begun in a disused cowshed or stable, the school so prospered that in time it boasted of spacious and convenient buildings in more than one centre. It has now so outgrown its original dimensions that thousands of the poor of all ages come within its influences. In principle, spiritual endeavour occupies the first place in the work, but in times of sorrow and distress among the poor, efforts of a practical and merciful character are more visibly to the front. In the course of the winter something like 10,000 dinners are given to famishing school children, while widows and orphans in large numbers are helped in hard times to secure the necessaries of life. During the winter months women are employed in making garments, and men in repairing boots for children and the very poor.

Though it gives attention to the poorest of the people, irrespective of age, the Ragged School still looks first to the children. The extended accommodation enjoyed, through taking over buildings in Albert-street formerly used for industrial school purposes, has proved of great benefit. Supplementary to the Sunday-school are the meetings of the Working Lads' Christian Association, and the Bible-classes for youths and elder girls. The attendance in all numbers about 1500. The Free Night School deals in more secular knowledge, and its classes are more needed than ever. Many children who have left the Board schools attend in order to further their improvement. The industrial classes for girls offer to young women valuable opportunities of domestic education. It is worthy of note that all the officials and between sixty and seventy teachers give their services gratuitously. There are many other beneficial agencies and societies clustering round the institution. The purely spiritual work, which always maintains the chief place, is best represented by the Gospel services held three times every Lord's Day, and by the Bible-classes, the evangelistic and prayer-meetings of the week evenings. Since the acquisition of the fine pile of buildings in Albert-street, the school has entered on a new era; but, before the benefits can be enjoyed to the full, an outlay of £2500 will be necessary. Nearly £2000 of this sum has already been contributed. We cordially commend the work which Mr. Montague has so close at heart, to the practical sympathy of the friends of the London poor.

THE McALL MISSION.—This Mission has sustained a heavy loss in the death of Professor Elmslie and Pastor Bersier; the latter was one of its most active and able helpers. We hope new friends will be raised up to fill the places of those taken away. Rev. S. R. Brown, The Limes, 15, Twisden-road, Highgate-road, N., is now in this country, advocating the claims of the work.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.—PRAISE: For great blessing on a ten days' mission at Red Hill.——PRAYER: For blessing on services to be conducted by Rev. Thomas Waugh, on Sunday next, in the Great Bridgewater-street Wesleyan Chapel, Deansgate, Manchester.——For blessing on an eight days' mission, Nov. 30 to Dec. 8, at Greatford and Wilsthorpe, Lincolnshire, by Rev. I. Sinclair Moore.——For blessing on a mission to be held in the late Salvation Barracks, Hardman-street, Liverpool, from Dec. 1 to Dec. 8.——For blessing on a mission being held at Hadleigh, Suffolk, by Gipsy Smith and his wife, until Dec. 1. ——For the manifestation of the Holy Spirit in the garrison and town of Windsor.——For a mission to be conducted at Loughboro' Park, by Rev. W. A. Meaton, Dec. 2 to 8.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Bishop of Liverpool (Dr. Ryle) has recently stated that he has no intention of resigning his see so long as he has strength and energy to perform the duties of his office.

In connection with the meetings on behalf of the London Mission in Cheltenham on December 17, Rev. Canon Bell will take the chair at the convention in the Assembly Rooms in the afternoon. The London Mission, says The Methodist Times, has no sectarian object in view, and there is no reason why ministers of the Church of England should not follow the admirable example of Canon Bell, and exhibit to this movement the same sympathy which it receives from every other section of the Church of God.

PRESBYTERIAN.

This week is being observed in the English Presbyterian Church as a week of special prayer on behalf of foreign missions.

Rev. John Thompson, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, has been selected for the Moderatorship of the next English Presbyterian Synod.

Arrangements have been made whereby the whole of the congregations of the U.P. Presbytery of Paisley shall be visited during the months of November and December. The object of this visitation is to foster and deepen the interest of the church in evangelistic work, and to arouse it "to a profounder sense of its inalienable responsibility for ceaseless aggressive work at home and abroad."

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. D. Burford Hooke has been appointed assistant secretary of the Congregational Union for a term of three years.

Rev. Wm. Pierce, late of Soho-hill, Birmingham, was recognised as pastor of New-court Chapel, Tollington Park, N., at a special meeting held last week.

During this month Rev. Frank W. Collyer has been conducting a series of special Sunday evening services in the Assembly Hall, Daventry, which have been very largely attended.

At Bedford Chapel, N.W., a mission has been held by Rev. W. A. Meaton, under the auspices of the Christian Instruction Society. As a result of the services for children, a boys' prayer-meeting has been started, and a Christian band numbering between thirty and forty children has been formed.

There is considerable anxiety in relation to the future of Old Finsbury Chapel. The chapel stands on ground belonging to the city estate. The original ground rent was about £39 a year. For a renewal of the lease the city asks £700 a year, which, of course, no congregation would be justified in giving. The London Congregational Union is intent upon seeing what can be done to preserve it.

BAPTIST.

Thursday, January 2, is suggested as a day of special prayer throughout the United Kingdom for the outpouring of the Spirit of God upon all members of churches.

At Soar Chapel, Llwynhendy, Mon., Rev. J. R. Evans recently baptized by immersion no less than forty-eight converts. The service was attended by crowds from all parts of the district.

On Monday week Rev. William Cuff celebrated the seventeenth anniversary of his entering upon the pastorate of Shoreditch Tabernacle. At the public meeting in the evening Mr. Cuff said the whole seventeen years had been one triumph for the Gospel. If there was one place above another on earth in which the Gospel had been put to the test, it was in that Tabernacle, but he was still doggedly determined to have nothing else. The people wanted nothing else, and where the Gospel was plainly preached there they would go. They had grown their own working material; all the young people who engaged in the mission work of the church were of its own rearing. They had developed work, and had taught their own people to do it. On Sundays they had 200 of their number in the neighbourhood engaged in various kinds of service of a definite character, and each mission-station was a feeder of the church.

METHODIST.

At Islington Wesleyan Chapel, Birmingham, a series of sermons on current theological questions, to be given monthly, has been commenced. The first of the series was preached by Rev. Dinsdale T. Young on the subject, "Is there a God?"

Rev. J. H. Hopkins has for some time been anxiously looking around for a lay agent to help him in the work of the Southwark branch of the London Wesleyan Mission. Mr. Meaking, who has held a position on the Midland Railway at Derby, worth £700 a year, with a prospect of a speedy advance to £1000 a year, has accepted the post at a salary of £200 a year.

A missionary meeting of an unusual character was lately held in the Wesleyan Chapel, Porthleven, Cornwall, for the special benefit of the fishermen who are usually debarred from attending the annual missionary meeting by absence at sea. Mr. Bickford-Smith, M.P., presided, and greatly interested the large audience by giving a series of brief sketches of the various mission stations he had visited in his tour round the world. Rev. H. Williams (Helston), who has laboured in Sierra Leone, and Rev. George Marris (Truro), who has laboured in China, also addressed the meeting, each speaker giving the result of his personal experience in the mission-field.

The Primitive Methodist Mission at Lower C under the superintendence of Rev. T. Jackson, g activity and usefulness. Rev. T. Jackson is succ in his earnest efforts to make the mission a real of evangelistic enterprise, temperance influen social helpfulness. The workers visit some four sand families each month; the open-air worker five services every week; there is a literary and r room, a Good Samaritan Society for poor people, kitchen is in full work, free dinners are provid poor children, and there is a centre of informati those seeking work.

SUNDAY, DEC. 1.—2 Kings VI.

The lost axe head (1—7).—It was wonderful that e college became so strait in days of persecu-on. Yet this is the general experience of the urch (Exod. i. 12). True religion is not above rsonal exertion. And every man ought to take beam (Mark xiii. 34). How often does the Lord ep in, by a personal exercise of his power to gain the losses caused by our blunders. If He n make dead metal float, He can surely make ad hearts live.

The all-seeing eye (8—14).—God knows the secret ottings of his foes, and He will either counter-rk them, or deliver his own (2 Pet. ii. 9). The icked may well be sore troubled, as they learn at the whispers even of the bedchamber are eard in heaven. How foolish to think that the ophet could discover plottings against the king, t not against himself.

The environing host (15—18).—These hosts of inistering spirits are round us still (Ps. xxxiv. 7). owever lonely or assailed, we are encompassed by cordon of angelic sentries; and before a bolt can ite us, it must pass through the enclosure of the ivine presence. How safe we are. And what-er touches us must be only by God's permission.

The enemy foiled (19—23).—The man whom they ught was not the prophet, but the king (19). he palace was not in Dothan, but in Samaria. He o opens eyes, can shut them. Elisha treated his es on New Testament principles (Pro. xxv. , 22).

The siege of Samaria (24—33).—What a literal lfilment of Deut. xxviii. 53—57. Dove's dung is kind of pulse or vetch. The king lamented the lamity, but did not repent of the sin which caused The truth which he enunciated was right, that punishment is of the Lord, but the inference as wrong (33). We must learn to bow our heads the Divine dealings, and to accept his chastise-ent (Lam. iii. 39, 40).

MONDAY, DEC. 2.—2 Kings VII.

The prophet's assurance (1, 2).—These were the ices of peace. The gate was the market-place. eers are not infallible, and those who are most customed to rely on large material resources are metimes least able to believe the unseen and ernal. The poor are rich in faith. How unwil-ng is man to believe that God can or will do as e says! Dare to believe even to the opening of e heavens (Mark xi. 23). Unbelief shuts a man it of the enjoyment of the greatest abundance; d makes a famine amid harvest plenty.

A welcome discovery (3—11).—What compensa-ons there are in life! Shut out from the city, e lepers are the first in the deserted camp. This undance was waiting there for the whole cityful, t only a few outcasts partook of it. Thus there salvation for all the world, though in its fulness mparatively few, and these accounted "lost," joy it. But those who find are immediately en-ched. They come in for unsearchable riches. hey have only to take just what they will. We are essed with all spiritual blessings in Christ (Eph. 3). Happy are they who appropriate all they ed. But they have no right to be monopolists; me mischief will befall them if they are (9). here is enough for all; and to scatter is to crease.

Samaria supplied (12—20).—Though this had en predicted, it was too good to be believed. ow little had Israel expected to be supplied thus! od can feed his people with the treasures of the icked, fleeing though no man pursues. The reatenings of God are as certain as his promises. the latter are fulfilled (18), so shall the former (20). May we never be in this plight of seeing hers included at the Divine banquet, and our-lves shut out (Luke xiii. 28). Men's unbelief es not invalidate God's promises, but it excludes em from the land of promise to die in the wil-rness.

TUESDAY, DEC. 3.—2 Kings VIII.

The Shunammite, to whom Elisha owed so much, pears again in the sacred story (1—6).—That ndness of hers was remembered long after. What blessing it is to have a man of God for a friend; d how wise to follow his advice. It was because rael was under the Divine rule that it suffered so much from famines brought on by sins (Amos iii. 2). This conversation with Gehazi, so opportune for her purpose, might have seemed an accident, but it was a providence. If we abide in the will of God, our life will be sown with Divine coincidences.

Hazael (7—15).—Here is an instance; Elisha comes to Damascus, evidently at the Divine bidding, just when Benhadad is sick. The sickness was not in itself mortal, yet he would die from another cause. Not on the face of the rough soldier only, but in the thought of God, the prophet read his destiny, as the ruthless destroyer of his people. Would that men of God to-day had more of the gift of weeping over the miseries of men. How little do we know what we shall be! We think crimes impossible which we shall begin to perpetrate to-morrow (15). There is unceasing necessity to cry to Him who alone can keep us from breaking out into some disgraceful sin.

Jehoram and Ahaziah, kings of Judah (16—29).—Joram gives a terrible example of how a woman may mar a man's life. He had a good father, but a bad wife. And the latter influenced him more than the former did (2 Chron. xxi.). The lamp was kept burning for David's sake (19, and Ps. cxxxii. 17). Surely that same grace can keep the fire burning in your heart. Ahaziah, who succeeded him, was no better. Misled by his mother, he followed in the dreary steps of Ahab. The close intimacy between the two houses led to alliance in war, and to a common fate.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 4.—2 Kings IX.

Jehu anointed king (1—10).—Youth must work, and endure hardships, and make haste. God has his appointed instruments to carry out his plan, and to avenge the blood of his servants (7). It is a great opportunity when God lays his hand on any as a chosen vessel (Acts ix. 15). But it is a terrible responsibility. May He never be compelled by our sins to lay us down, as those whom He can no longer employ.

Jehu's revolt (11—20).—God's servants are often accounted mad. These measures were taken with great precaution, and since Ramoth-Gilead was at some distance from Samaria, and no one was allowed to bear the tidings, the revolt had gained great importance before the least suspicion reached the metropolis. How often does the impious soul send out scouts, at the least commotion, with only one inquiry, "Is it peace?" The question of what is right, or the Divine will, hardly enters into the calculation, but only what makes for peace (Isa. xlviii. 22). There is a false peace, as well as a true one (Luke xi. 21). Peace is impossible so long as there is no repentance and putting away of sin. God is too good to give peace where there is not health (Isa. lvii. 21).

Jehu's punishment of Ahab's house (21—37).—Read also 2 Chron. xxii.—"In some sense Ahab's blood was licked by dogs, as it flowed from the gaping wounds of his son." God's mills are here seen grinding, though slowly, yet to powder. Jezebel's heart was proud and unbroken. She thought to make the conqueror the slave of her power or charms. But she could not avert her fate. How often does truth ask: "Who is on my side?" Let us heed the summons, and dare to look out in answer (32).

THURSDAY, DEC. 5.—2 Kings X.

The extermination of Ahab's family (1—17).—This was a very terrible act of vengeance. Yet for the well-being of the race, God is sometimes obliged to cut off evil-doers, lest the plague spread with its contagion, till there be no health or safety left. The brethren of Ahaziah were slain by the Arabians (2 Chron. xxii. 1), but these were cousins or acquaintances, as the margin renders it. The word brethren is a wide one, covering many degrees of consanguinity. The elders of Jezreel had been Jezebel's tools against Naboth, now they are Jehu's tools against her own house. Jehonadab was a man of unusual strength of character (1 Chron. ii. 55; Jer. xxxv). Jehu boasted of his zeal, and such boasting generally covers insincerity. The really earnest man has no need to advertise himself. God was no party to the deceit and fraud of his behaviour. He might have achieved the same result by unobjectionable methods. God still cuts off the persons and families of notorious evil livers, though by more unobtrusive processes (Ps. xvi. 4).

Jehu's reign (18—32).—Jehu was earnest enough in uprooting all traces of Baal-worship, but he permitted the calf-worship, and he was careless in the matter of personal religion (31). How much easier it is to see and rebuke the sins of others, than to take heed to our own ways. An external reformation may be effected in others by the energy of a man, not himself really religious.

Israel's decay (32—36).—They were short in their duty to God, therefore God cut them short in their extent, wealth, and power. Hazael was the cause of this, fulfilling Elisha's anticipations (2 Kings viii. 12). Those tribes suffered first whose choice had been determined by the attractions of the land. Those who choose for this life only are often the first to suffer the loss of all, as Lot did.

FRIDAY, DEC. 6.—2 Kings XI.

Athaliah (1—3) well deserves the title given her in 2 Chron. xxiv. 7. She usurped the throne, and played the part of her mother, Jezebel, in Judah. Though Joram had been a wicked man and a bad king, he seems to have been able to recognise the value of piety in others, and so he had secured, as a husband to his daughter, the good priest Jehoiada. The husband influenced the wife, and in the general massacre which Athaliah perpetrated, Jehosheba rescued the youngest child of Ahaziah, who was, in fact, her nephew. His nurse and he were hidden in a room where the mattresses were kept, used perhaps for some sudden influx of priests at festal times. Is not this hidden prince a type of the hiding of the true Prince in the recesses of our hearts, whilst some Athaliah occupies too large a share of the government?

The boy king (4—12).—It was a joyful moment, that manifestation of the hidden prince. Many loyal hearts must have renounced all hope of such a thing as seeing again a scion of David's line. But God kept his word. The Word of God was a befitting gift (12, and Deut. xvii. 18, 19). But what a revelation that will be when Jesus assumes the government of the universe! "He shall be manifested" (Col. iii. 4).

Reformation (13—21).—The death of Athaliah led the way to a thorough change throughout the kingdom. There was a double covenant: the demolition of the Baal-house, which had sadly profaned the holy city; regulations for the proper performance of the worship of God. Then came joy and quiet, as there always must when evil is cast out, and the life adjusted with the holy law of the Most High.

SATURDAY, DEC. 7.—2 Kings XII.

An auspicious beginning (1—3).—So long as the good priest lived, the young king did well. How much do we owe to the presence of strong, wise men to advise and assist us. But neither king nor priest dared to go to the furthest limit of reform. And this bore disastrous fruits in after years. It is a mistake to leave the stump of a tree in the ground. It will sprout again and give endless trouble.

The renovation of the Temple (4—16).—The sacred structure had suffered terribly under Athaliah (2 Chron. xxiv. 7). The king might well take an interest in the building where he had spent his earliest years. The first attempt at raising a fund was a failure. It was in the wrong hands; surely the priests were not the proper parties to receive or collect monies, which were dwindled away in their own maintenance. But when once an opportunity was given to the people to give their free-will offerings, the sum soon told up to a large amount, which enabled the workmen to proceed. Certainly the promptness and integrity of the men who did the work might put to shame the lethargy and peculation of the priests. Not the last time that non-professors have read professors a lesson.

Invasion and assassination (17—21) followed close on each other. Joash revolted from God, and the hand of the Lord was against him (2 Chron. xxiv.). The reign began in sunshine, but was sadly overcast. How much we need to ask that He who has begun the good work in us may perform it to the end.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.—On Thursday, November 14, Mr. and Mrs. Nicoll left for China, accompanied by five lady missionaries going out for the first time. On Thursday, Nov. 28, Mrs. Stott left England, accompanied by six lady missionaries also going out for the first time.

THE BANGOR-STREET RAGGED SCHOOL celebrates in December its second anniversary. The class is held every Sunday afternoon from 3 to 4, when the little ones hear the Gospel of the grace of God, and are pointed to Him "who came to seek and to save that which was lost." The scholars number just upon 100. The school is not connected with any particular denomination, but depends for support upon voluntary contributions. Mr. J. J. Bristow, 1, Castle-terrace, Notting-hill, W., is one of the conductors.

SOLOMON AND THE QUEEN OF SHEBA.—1 KINGS x. 1—13.

GOLDEN TEXT: MATT. xii. 42.

THE Golden Text guides us in the practical application of this incident. Let the teacher endeavour to use it as the Lord there directs. Study the example of the Queen of Sheba, and imitate her, lest she rise up in judgment against us.

I. Solomon's fame.—(1) This was wide spread (iv. 34). All the then-known world had heard of it. His fame was connected with "the name of the Lord." Possibly, God's appearance to him, and his wise choice (iii. 5—15) had been made known; and his unexampled wisdom was attributed to this. The gorgeous temple, and the impressive dedication service, had helped to extend the knowledge of the name of the Lord (viii. 41, 42, 60). It was this that excited the wonder and the interest of this heathen queen.

Speaking of Himself, Jesus says, "A greater than Solomon is here." A king more glorious; possessing a mightier and more enduring kingdom; far exceeding Solomon in wisdom, and riches, and honour (Prov. viii.); inasmuch, as he was the source of all that Solomon possessed. Has He not a stronger claim to our interest and attention?

II. The visit of the Queen (1—2).—Note (1) She heeded the report. In this she is a reproof to many. For no messengers authorised to declare Solomon's glory and to invite her to hear his wisdom had been sent to her. How many of the qualified messengers of the Greater than Solomon speak their message to deaf ears! (Isa. liii. 1). (2) She came to verify the report. It was a long, and difficult, and dangerous journey. Sheba was in Southern Arabia, and embraced the greater part of Arabia Felix. Our Lord describes this queen as the "queen of the south," and as coming from "the utmost part of the earth" (Luke xi. 31). It is estimated that she was 1500 miles from Jerusalem, and that in those days of slow travelling the journey must have occupied about seventy-five days. She was willing not only to suffer great inconvenience, but to run great risks, in order to hear the wisdom of Solomon. No such difficult journey is needed in approaching Jesus. He has come down to us, is by our side, bids us learn of Him, and all may ask of Him (Matt. xi. 29; Jas. i. 5). (3) Her reason for coming (1, 2).—"Hard questions" were probably the enigmas and riddles so common in the East (Josh. xiv. 12). But if she tested his reputation for wisdom thus, it was in order that other questions "in her heart" might be answered. Have we not all heart questions to which we need an answer? Who can answer them except Him who is "the truth," "the wisdom of God"? We need to come, not merely for the sake of verifying a report, but in order to get the soul's greatest need satisfied (John vi. 68). The queen came with costly presents (2, 10). We need bring nothing to Jesus except ourselves. Our emptiness and need are all He requires (Isa. lv. 1). Let this visit of the queen be our example. Each one must make a definite personal application to Jesus.

III. The effect of the visit (3—9).—This was manifold in its characters, and feebly foreshadows what will be the certain effect of the inquirer's approach to Jesus. (1) Her heart questions were answered.—What they were we do not know, nor need we enquire; but Solomon told her everything. Is not this just the fact that made men wonder at Jesus? Nathaniel under the fig tree (John i. 48); Nicodemus hardly daring to ask what his heart really yearned to know (John iii. 2, 3); the woman of Samaria (John iv. 29). Similarly our Lord knows each one, and can answer every heart yearning. (2) She found the report more than verified.—The splendour of Solomon's household and servants took "all the spirit out of her" (5). And his wisdom exceeded all she had heard (7). The same result surely follows a personal application to Jesus. If the report seems too good to be true, come and verify it, as the people of Sychar did. When we see ourselves blessed with all spiritual blessings in Christ, we shall begin to say "Blessed be God" (Eph. i. 3). (3) She got all her requests granted (13).—"Whatsoever she asked," and even more than that did Solomon give "of his royal bounty." The Greater than Solomon exceeds even such munificence (John xv. 7, Eph. iii. 20, 21).

Letters to the Editor.

REV. THOMAS CONNELLAN.

DEAR SIR,—While thanking you for the too complimentary references to me in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN, I wish to correct one small mistake. I am not working at Athlone. I am living in my father's house, and working in the parish in which I was born. This is situated in county Sligo, in which neighbourhood I lived and laboured for four years as a Roman Catholic priest.

Since the notice in your paper, I have received a shower of letters, most of them having been forwarded here from Athlone. I could not possibly find time to reply to even a tithe of my correspondents, and must take this opportunity of returning my thanks. Should any person have any real necessity for corresponding with me, a line to my publisher (Mr. G. Herbert, 117, Grafton-street, Dublin) will always find me.—Very sincerely yours,

THOMAS CONNELLAN.

TRAVELLING ON THE LORD'S DAY.

DEAR SIR,—Long observation and wide experience have brought me to the conviction that as much true Gospel work can be done in conformity with the Sabbath law of God as is possible in the way of neglect of that law. "Dietenik," in your issue of November 15, proposes that "Holiness to the Lord" should be written on the very bells of our horses, and on every railway train. If his wish be fulfilled, the Lord's people will no longer use these things, for they will remember the vast multitudes connected with locomotion whose whole life is rendered unholy by traffic which shuts them out from the influences of the Gospel, and, in unnumbered instances, hardens their heart against God and his people.

I would remove the stumbling-block by a proposition more possible than that suggested. Let there be consultation among Christians, and more unity of action. Let this be arranged in London and Paris so as to prevent the movement of scores of workers from east to west, while other scores are crossing them from west to east. I am fully assured that within six months not one discourse the less would be preached, and all would be done within walking distance. "Dietenik" admits that some officials may be limited in their enjoyment of the day of rest. Mark the words, "some," "limited," "enjoyment." The truth is that hundreds of thousands are deprived of the use of the day of rest. Why is this to continue? Have not these men souls as precious as the souls to whom, at their expense, the Gospel is taken?

I have tried to give as much force to the various pleas for Lord's Day locomotion which "Dietenik" sets down as they will bear, and it seems to me, after all, that our brother has been deceived by the necessity of defending an indefensible line of conduct.

I judge this because of the absolutely inconclusive use he makes of various Scriptures and of certain analogies. The argument from "abuse" of a thing is valueless. There is no parallel between the work of the priests in the Temple and the degrading, demoralising, and soul-destroying labour of hundreds of thousands of Sunday toilers. Why does he write "dragging his bed" when speaking of the healed one at Bethesda, except to make the very most of the act there, that he may minimise to the utmost the terrible and unbroken toil of those whom Sunday travelling of evangelists helps to bind to their slavery? Where is the overmuch righteousness against which "Dietenik" warns us? I dare not so stigmatise conduct which is limited and directed by intense desire for the salvation of vast multitudes who serve us in locomotion.

We are in great danger, both here and on the Continent, of doing great evil in the vain hope of working a great good.—Very truly, &c.,

JOHN GRITTON, D.D.

THE TREASURY OF SACRED SONG.

Selected from the English Lyrical Poetry of Four Centuries. With Notes, Explanatory and Biographical. By FRANCIS T. PALGRAVE, Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford.

"To offer Poetry for Poetry's sake has been the Editor's first aim in Compiling this Selection, which is intended to be representative of the entire range of English Sacred Poetry. The brief biographies inserted will, it is hoped, satisfy the natural desire for some acquaintance with the main facts in the lives of those whose best and deepest thoughts are here presented."—FROM THE PREFACE.

"A more delightful collection it would be difficult to conceive, and the fascination of infinite variety carries us forward from page to page. Mr. Palgrave's anthology is a triumphant vindication of sacred poetry."—Times.

"Mr. Palgrave's anthology will at once become a standard volume."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"An admirable representation of all that is best in the field of literature which it covers."—Globe.

"The work adds another to the few books which are prized almost as personal friends by lovers of poetry."
Scotsman.

"Will be for many readers THE gift-book of the season."—Record.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The drink revenue, unhappily, shows a tendency to increase. Temperance workers everywhere should hear in this a fresh summons to the fight.

At Reigate recently two sons refused partnership in their father's business because he held a grocer's licence. As the result, the drink went out and the sons went in.

The Irish Temperance League has been doing much vigorous work for the past couple of months, during which time its agents have addressed meetings in many cities and towns of Ireland.

Last Lord's Day was observed as "Temperance Sunday" by most of the Nonconformist churches, and special sermons bearing upon the subject were preached all over the country.

The Manchester Guardian recently observed: "The Manchester magistrates are making a serious and praiseworthy effort to purify the liquor trade, and the county magistrates are apparently straining every nerve to prevent them from doing so."

At a recent meeting of the temperance party, Liverpool, Rev. Charles Garrett, Mr. S. Smith, M.P., and others present, the action of the county magistrates in reversing the decision of the city justices with regard to certain licences was strongly condemned. A vigilance committee was formed.

FOREIGN.

The consumption of opium and how to prevent it is occupying the attention of the Government of Victoria, Australia.

The charter of the British South African Company binds it to prevent as far as possible the drink traffic with natives.

Dr. Talmage speaks of the state of affairs in New York as "a corrupt legislature, a rotten judiciary, and a whisky ring."

Mr. H. W. Hardy, ex-Mayor of Lincoln, Nebraska, and who helped to introduce high licence, says he made a great mistake; "high licence is a whisky devil in temperance garb."

A United Temperance Congress has been held at Cradock, Grahamstown, S.A. Chief Khama and one of his headmen, Job Simes, were among the speakers. The congress was heartily in favour of prohibition.

Notices.

A CORRESPONDENT inquires if any of our readers can give the name and publishers of a tract published some years ago, the principal point of which was the conversion of a young lady during the singing, by herself, of a sacred song at an evening party or entertainment.

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most desirable that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

Pastor O. Tidman, 39, Park-street, Blaenavon, appeals for books, tracts, and Gospel literature for distribution among young people. Gospel texts, &c., for mission work and sick visitation will also be thankfully received.

Lady Violet Greville appeals for help for the Maternity House, Glamis-road, Shadwell, E., a comfortable Home in which during last year over three hundred married women of the poorer classes were carefully nursed. By the cultivation of the "home feeling," each woman having during her stay a tidily furnished little room to herself, many women are taught to reform their habits of life. £2000 is required for the purchase of large house in Commercial-road, and for its furniture and fittings.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN FINLAND.—The Daily News correspondent at Helsingfors writes:—"A long-looked-for law relative to religious liberty has come into force. Christians of any sect will be permitted to combine to teach their own children, although prohibited from teaching those of members of the State Church, and marriages contracted by members of acknowledged sects will in future be legal. Further than this, different views of Christianity will no longer make any difference in the privileges and duties of the citizen, and these prerogatives are moreover extended so far as to give Christians of any sect the right of entering into Government service. On the other hand, religious demonstrations and processions are prohibited, and the Government itself has undertaken to examine into the doctrines and beliefs of every Dissenting sect, and also to keep a close account of them."

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1889.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and full the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders not by stamps.

ROMANISM IN SPAIN.—Though the prospects of Protestantism in Spain have never been brighter than at the present day, the forces against which it has to contend are still extremely formidable. In addition to the regular parochial priesthood, the country contains 221 monasteries with 4000 inmates, and 1100 nunneries with 25,000 sisters. About 200 new convents were established during the last twelve years.

Paralysed and Epileptic.—SIR,—A committee has been formed for founding a pension for the incurable in memory of the late Dr. Radcliffe and in connection with the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, in Queen-square, W.C., with which institution Dr. Radcliffe's name has been long associated. Communications for the honorary treasurer of the fund, Lady TAUNTON, may be addressed to her at the hospital.

Valuable help would be afforded if donors of gifts of hina, foreign goods, articles of vertu, &c., would kindly mark on them their value, or indicate the price which is likely e obtained. The SALE will this year be of the SAME CHARACTER as for the LAST FEW YEARS; that is to say, tead of holding a Public Bazaar at the West End of London during the month of December, as formerly, all the goods received will be made up into

£5 and £10 Boxes. These Boxes will each contain a very excellent selection, of at least the value of £6 and £12 respectively, and will be sent to any part of the country on receipt of P.O. Order or Cheque made payable to Mr. J. T. Page.

ies willing to order these Boxes confer a great benefit on the "Homes"; for by this easy method all the articles received may be disposed of without any loss in the way of such expenses as are usually incurred by holding a Bazaar at the West End. Many kind-hearted sympathisers have repeatedly expressed warm approval of this plan, and have promised to purchase Boxes, with the contents of which they propose to hold

in their own houses, towhich their personal friends can be invited during the winter season. If there be many articles left over unsold, they can be disposed of in the last week of January (D.V.), in the Large Gymnasium of the Boys' Home in Stepney, E. DR. BARNARDO earnestly invites all who love poor children to co-operate with him in this effective plan to increase the funds of the "Homes," by which, too, all the wearying, disappointing, and expensive drawbacks of a public Bazaar may be avoided. The Boxes, carefully lined and packed ready for transmission, can be despatched on receipt of remittance to any railway station in the Kingdom. Applications (PREPAID), with full instructions as to conveyance, &c., should be sent in as soon as possible, addressed to

A MOST ATTRACTIVE AND ACCEPTABLE GIFT-BOOK FOR THE SEASON.

The Christian Portrait Gallery:

Consisting of OVER ONE HUNDRED well-executed Portraits of well-known Christian Men and Women of the present day. Each Portrait is accompanied by a well-written Biographic Sketch.

Over 400 pages of Letterpress, Demy Quarto, Attractively Bound, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 10s. 6d

"Messrs. Morgan & Scott have just published a superb book. It is entitled The Christian Portrait Gallery, and contains portraits and biographical sketches of one hundred present-day Christian workers, a selection from those that have been appearing in THE CHRISTIAN during recent years. All sections of the Church are represented, and the foreign work as well as the home work. The whole get-up of the book is first-class, and it is full of matter that will be highly valued by all who account an enlarged sympathy with the work of Jesus Christ in the world as one of the chief joys of life."

Divine Life, November, 1889.

REDUCED FAC-SIMILE.
(Actual size of the Volume, 11 inches by 9 inches.)

"The portraits are well-engraved and well-printed, and the biographical sketches are brief but concise. The production of the volume in paper, print, binding, and general appearance is very satisfactory. It is, in truth, a handsome volnme, and would form a very attractive gift-book for those interested in such lives and work as are here set forth."—The Nonconformist, November 14, 1889.

"This handsomely-bound volume possesses peculiar value interest for all who follow with prayer and sympathy the life labours of these men and women whom God has honoured in our times. It contains over one hundred admirable portraits and biographic sketches of Christian workers in all ranks of life, and in departments of service, both at home and abroad. Nearly third of those whose personal histories are presented have alre passed to their rest and reward; many others are aged veterans, have already borne the burden and heat of day; while not a few still in the front rank of devoted labour. All who can afford to the volume to their library will find it pregnant with stimulation encouragement to follow these examples as they have follo Christ."—Word and Work, November 22, 1889.

"A volume which will be welcomed in many a household is Christian Portrait Gallery, consisting of over one hundred portr and biographies of eminent preachers and missionaries. In respec truthful portraiture nothing could be more desirable than the sket here presented, many of the faces familiar to the public of to- starting from the pages with the vividness of life. The subjects drawn from a very extended tract of religious life, and a meed of pr is rendered equally to the popular preacher, the worker in the slu the gleaner in the Indian mission field, and the South African ev gelist."—Scottish Leader, October 24, 1889.

"A volume which many will be delighted to possess. It conta well-executed and life-like portraits of about a hundred of the known Christian ministers and workers of the present day, wit short account of the life and work of each of them. It is a treasur Christian biography, as well as a faithful record of earnest and s cessful Christian work, and in every respect a most interesting bo . . . All who can purchase the volume will be very pleased with It is beautifully printed and bound, a real drawing-room book."

Christian Progress, December, 188

"No more beautiful or more acceptable book has recen been issued from the press than The Christian Portrait Galle Whether one regards it merely as a work of art, or as he ful and stimulating literature, it alike gives the greatest satisf tion. There are over one hundred portraits of ministers and Christi men of all classes and creeds, and they are real likenesses, finish in the best style. And the letterpress is in every respect worthy of portraiture work. Biographical literature is, in our judgment, most helpful; it may not be the most interesting to many, but few v deny that it is to all the most inspiring and the most productive of that is good, true, and noble. Even from the life of a vicious, graded man we may learn many a lesson, and the power of a pure a noble life is ever felt; while, when this is put in even the most simp setting, it is as a precious jewel flashing its light abroad in the wor These sketches of men of God have not been produced in va Nothing could be more fit for a gift-book than this beautiful volume.

The Thirty-First Series of Weekly Cases is now publishing.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN"

Who may be personally or relatively

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

SEVERE BRONCHIAL CATARRH (SEQUENT on OLD DYSPEPSIA) at CHELMSFORD.

A very old and chronic case.

Mr. W. B. (whose name and address will be given to any bonâ fide patient of mine desiring it) applied to me in March of the present year. For twenty years he had suffered more or less from dyspepsia, and for three years the chest had become affected. The first symptom was oppressed breathing. This increased and became distressing; also cough troublesome at night, with difficult expectoration. Had become, very gradually, thin and weak. He had seen the cases, given weekly by me, in the Christian World.

"You describe my case as perfectly as if you had seen me (he says), in the description you give of Asthma and Dyspepsia in your book."

I sent him the medicine required, with such instructions as were needed; the result being that all his chest symptoms disappeared. And though constitutionally dyspeptic, the patient has been wonderfully relieved in these symptoms by the use of "Dr. Fleming's Quinine and Camphor Pills"—the gentle tonic aperient which I recommend in connection with strict diet (see chapter on diet in my book).

And writing me a short time since, he says: "I soon lost all my cough and expectoration, and am at my employment again. I am thankful for the great good. I shall recommend your medicine to all I meet who suffer from cough or bronchitis."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

SEVEN PER CENT. DEBENTURE

BONDS, repayable in 7½ years from the present time, are being issued by the Christian Herald Company, Limited, which constitute a first charge in priority to all other claims or charges upon its income, which is certified by Messrs. Turquand to average for the last three years nearly three times as much as is needed to pay the interest (at seven per cent. quarterly) on the debentures now being issued. The Christian Herald has been established for sixteen years, and has a very large circulation. Hence these debenture Bonds constitute a safe and secure investment. CHRIST LIFTED UP. SECOND THOUSAND.

By Rev. ROBERT GILCHRIST, of Shotts. Tinted covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"Right well has the Author done his work in this charming book. In the first part he exhibits 'CHRIST LIFTED UP' on the cross; and deals in an inexpressibly sweet and tender manner with the words and spirit of Jesus while nailed to the tree. In the second part, Christ risen from the dead, and exalted to the right hand of the throne of God, is evidently set forth before our eyes. In both sections there is much sound exposition; and the book from beginning to end sparkles with fresh, and beautiful, and inspiring thoughts."
Primitive Methodist New Connexion Magazine.

SCRIPTURAL HOLINESS NOT SINLESS PERFECTION.

By Rev. CHARLES GRAHAM, of Shepherd's Bush. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s 6d.

"With considerable skill and sagacity Mr. Graham has proved his title, and wheeled away much fanatical rubbish. Anything that will promote true holiness has all our heart."—The Sword and Trowel.

GEORGE WHITEFIELD.

A LIGHT RISING IN OBSCURITY. By J. R. ANDREWS, Barrister-at-Law. With Portrait. Tinted covers, 6d.; Cloth limp, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

PESENTATION EDITION, with Steel Portrait. Cloth, bevelled boards, 5s.

"The popular and powerful preacher, whose efforts synchronized with those of the Wesleys, is here set before us in a striking piece of portraiture; and the extracts from his diaries give many life-like touches to the sketch. The details of his work, both in America and in this country, are full and complete, and afford a striking proof of his immense capacity and unceasing energy."

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Dr. Charles Stanford, of Denmark-place Church, Camberwell.

The editor of The Pall Mall Gazette appears to have constituted himself advocate in general to the Roman Catholic Church throughout the world. Any man who does so needs to have a conveniently short memory, if not a very blind eye. If Mr. Stead succeeds in his heroic enterprise of reforming that Church system, which many people believe to be the modern Antichrist, we need no longer ask whether the Ethiopian can change his skin or the leopard rid himself of his spots. Our journalistic confrère appears to assume without question that the Pope's monstrous and blasphemous claim to be the Vicar of Jesus Christ is a sound one. If he is able to swallow that claim, the rest of the process of conviction must be easy enough.

In another column we publish a statement from Dr. Barnardo, setting forth in detail the circumstances under which he is required to give up one of his children, and the grounds upon which he has declined to do so. As the law at present stands he is liable to great injustice; and not he only, but the Christian and philanthropic community at large. Firstly, it encourages disreputable parents to burden an Institution like Dr. Barnardo's with their children, and relieves them of all responsibility in caring for them during the most trying years of child-life; and as soon as the child reaches an age when it can help itself, and prove a credit to the Institution, the parents can demand it back to aid in supporting them in idleness. Thus in handing over the child, the parents gain all and lose nothing, while the Institution loses all and gains nought.

Secondly, the law encourages Romanists to foist the children, for whom they profess to be so solicitous, upon a Protestant institution, to bear the anxiety and responsibility of feeding, clothing, and rearing them until they reach an age when they can make themselves useful. Then they (the Romanists) avail themselves of the law to demand that the children be handed over to them. And in each case neither parent nor Romanist contributes a penny to meet the expenses which the Protestant and Christian community have spent in caring for the children during those earlier years.

Here is an obvious injustice. In the first place, the law needs changing. Other countries have decided in their legislature that if parents willingly and wittingly hand over their children to philanthropic institutions, they henceforth lose their right to control their future. In the second place, until the law is altered, such institutions should not be bound to deliver up the children so committed to them, unless the parents or the Catholic societies who pull the strings agree to pay substantial compensation for the past care of the children. As an appeal is pending we refrain from discussing the details of the case in question; but believing as we do that issues of the gravest importance, bearing upon various branches of philanthropic work, are involved, we would urge our readers to continue their heartiest support of the Homes at this trying time.

With great regret we learn that the headquarters of the Salvation Army in Queen Victoria-street were almost entirely destroyed by fire on Tuesday morning. This will be an opportunity for practical expressions of sympathy, of which we trust our readers will avail themselves.

We sincerely hope that a career of great usefulness is before THE KING'S OWN, the new monthly edited by Rev. John Urquhart (6d. J. F. Shaw & Co.). From an advance copy of No. 1, dated January, we learn that the special mission of the new-comer is to show the sure ground of Christian confidence by exposing error and declaring truth as it concerns Divine revelation. In an opening statement, after referring to great necessity for vigorous defence of the faith, in view of the activity of the modern propaganda of unbelief, Mr. Urquhart defines the purpose of the magazine thus:—

> Our part in the struggle is not controversy, but the quiet presentation of evidence which will amply justify belief and re-establish wavering faith. Foreseeing the necessities of this time, God has providentially supplied us with the means of conviction in overwhelming abundance. We shall endeavour, month by month, to draw from these storehouses, and to show our readers how modern discovery has answered modern criticism.

That is, criticism of the kind which discredits Holy Writ. Mr. Urquhart has made a beginning full of promise, one of the most attractive articles in the January issue being entitled, "The Bible and the Monuments."

In social meetings for prayer, and in private supplications, there is no subject more to be commended to Christ's followers than the Anti-slavery Conference in Brussels. Such questions are before it as the measures to be adopted for the suppression of the traffic in its very centres, the routes that the slave caravans follow, and the conditions under which the trade is carried on. The difficulties of suppression are great, but at length civilisation is awakening to see the scandal of inaction in the presence of crying enormities. Ceaseless prayer should go up to God during the sittings of this Conference, attended by representatives from all the Governments of Europe.

The cartoon in last week's Punch represents the meeting of the Anti-Slavery Conference, but the artist makes the glaring mistake of putting Cardinal Lavigerie in the forefront rank of delegates. The fact appears to be that the Pope has no representative at the Conference at all. A correspondent in Rome states that the Pope is greatly annoyed at not having been invited to send a delegate. Seeing that the Conference is one of the great European secular powers, we think the conveners are to be commended in excluding the Vatican from its councils. Within its legitimate sphere the Roman Catholic Church could not be better employed than in endeavouring to free the slave, but there is no place for it at a conclave of European temporal powers.

The Christian public are much indebted to Dr. Charles H. Wright for his paper in The Nineteenth Century on the "Stamping out of Protestantism in Russia." This is the story told, and there are few more scandalous ones: Lutheranism was the creed of the inhabitants of the Baltic provinces when they became the possession of Russia; the peasants, to the number of 140,000, were, by a gross official fraud, numbered with adherents of the Greek Church; it was not permitted them to secede; their impassioned cry, when they awoke to the deception, was totally disregarded. Since the accession of the present Emperor the intolerant and persecuting spirit has grown; churches erected for Protestant worship have been appropriated by the dominant Church; and pastors banished; in short, these provinces are now wrapped in the flames of a persecution intended to burn out Protestantism with a reckless disregard to the pleas and entreaties of the people.

Dr. Wright has serious charges to bring against the English Evangelical Alliance for inadequate attention to these evils, with which they attempted to deal. Into such charges we cannot enter after hearing one side. Other associations may be impelled to take action, and there is reason to believe that Alexander III. will interpose when an expression of public opinion really reaches him. We quote the following from the article:—

> It is well known in Sweden that a young man who attended the Conference of the Y.M.C.A. last year in Stockholm, and spoke about the sufferings of his co-religionists in the Baltic provinces, was arrested on his return home, and transported to Siberia. Such cases are not permitted to be mentioned in the public press.

A discussion has been going on in The Nonconformist and Independent respecting a sermon preached at Hull before the Autumnal Assembly of the Congregational Union, wherein the sacrificial nature of the death of Christ was unambiguously set aside. Some of the letters, in strong protest against the Unitarian views advocated by the preacher, have been remarkably vigorous, and must convey a clear impression of the soundness of many Congregationalists in relation to the doctrine impugned.

PLYMOUTH.—A mission to the fallen has lately been held in Plymouth and Stonehouse. A large number of invitations were distributed wherever the women could be found, and all the care taken that was possible to reach those whom it was desired to rescue. There is great promise of good as the result of the mission. Mr. John H. L. Christien, of the London Midnight Meeting Movement, superintended the work, and was assisted by an excellent staff of Christian workers.

GROCERS' LICENCES.

WE are glad to find that a real desire is manifesting itself in many quarters that this subject should be decisively treated. As we recently reported, the Bristol "British Women's" Association is taking the matter up; and in Dundee an active and business-like Association has been formed, chiefly by grocers, for the complete separation of the grocery trade from that in wines and spirits.

A correspondent (see page 27) protests against what he calls "boycotting" the "licensed" grocers. We insert his letter to obviate a charge of supposed "unfairness," but we must also point out what we consider to be the fallacy of his contention.

We unhesitatingly condemn "boycotting" in any form, but the term seems to us to have no place in this matter. Customers usually choose one grocery establishment at which to "deal." We advocate that their choice be directed to a grocer who considers his conscience at the expense of his pocket, and foregoes the sale of intoxicants. It is an admitted fact that a grocery business in which spirits, &c., are sold, pays better than one in which that element is absent. To give it up is therefore clearly a point of conscience, and not one of profit.

If we support a Parliamentary candidate whose views coincide with our own, can we be charged with "boycotting" because we refrain from giving the rival candidate our vote? It is merely a matter of choice, and the same reasoning applies to the question before us. The Bristol ladies do not publish the names of licensed grocers, and cry, "Do not deal with these." Their list is of those who, being unlicensed, are nearer the side of temperance, and who therefore have a claim upon the support of abstainers.

Non-abstainers as a class deal with licensed grocers. Is it therefore "boycotting" for the friends of temperance to support those who are the friends of that cause? We have known painful cases of Christian grocers being ruined (after giving up their licence for conscience' sake), when the support of the temperance community would have saved them. It is unreasonable to expect a man to endure the loss consequent upon the giving up of his licence, and then, for the sake of saving a penny a pound on purchases, to deal with one who, by reason of his licence trade, can afford to undersell his neighbour. It is still more unreasonable to make the licensed grocer to pose as a martyr to "boycotting" when he has the non-abstaining community as his constituency.

With regard to our correspondent's illustrations—our choice would be directed (wherever possible) to travelling by a railway that was not concerned in "the iniquitous Sunday toil"; to buying our Bibles of a bookseller who did not sell "pernicious literature," and to purchasing our umbrellas of a trader who did not "sweat in the cheap tie department."

The Apostle says, "As ye have opportunity, do good unto all men: specially to them that are of the household of faith." It is a fair application of the principle to say, "As ye have occasion, deal with all grocers: specially with those who forego the grocers' licence to sell strong drink."

We would urge the friends of temperance to avail themselves of the interest now awakened in this important subject, and to individually exercise the same spirit of self-denial (if dealing at an unlicensed shop involve this) that they demand from the grocer whom they press to give up his licence.

THE DAY OF REST.

OUR correspondence columns have lately indicated considerable diversity of judgment among Christians on a subject concerning which it would be of great advantage to arrive at something like unity—the preservation of the Day of Rest. As indicating the general disagreement and the individual inconsistency which exist, we may mention a few facts and circumstances which have been very recently brought before us.

(1) There are Sabbath Observance and Lord's Day Rest Societies, the names of which indicate their purpose; while other societies and missions recognise or even systematically provide for the travelling of their agents to and from their engagements on that day.

(2) A Christian worker sends to us a very warm and strongly worded vindication of the sanctity of the day, and a denunciation of travelling during its hours; shortly after we find him taking a prominent part in a service to which the preacher comes by rail, and has to hurry from the after-meeting to catch his train.

(3) Attendance at all the popular places of worship is accomplished in a large number of instances by means of train or tram, omnibus or cab.

(4) A minister used to come from the suburbs to his church in a tram, and return in the same way at night. Being remonstrated with, he now walks in the morning, but returns at night by tram, considering that the day of rest is then practically over.

(5) A Christian lady goes one Sunday morning to the Metropolitan Tabernacle in an omnibus, and keeps her Bible and tracts under her cloak. On Thursday evening she happens to go in the same bus, her tracts are not hidden, and she offers one to the conductor, who asks her, "Why did you not offer me one on Sunday?" An evangelist remarks, "I sympathise very much with that young lady. I never attempt to give tracts when I am travelling on Sunday."

(6) Some friends are talking over the subject, when a member of a Y.M.C.A. committee remarks, "I was going into Kent by train on Sunday to take a meeting, but I think I must give it up."

(7) An elderly brother has a Bible-class, to which he could ride on his tricycle, but he objects because he may be supposed to be taking his pleasure; he therefore rides in omnibus or tram, taking care to secure an inside seat.

Is it not possible for members of the body of which Christ is the Head to become "of one accord, of one mind," to be "perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment," on this subject? Are there no principles in the New Testament by which such agreement might be attained?

A correspondent argues that we are freed from the law, and that the Sabbath-keeping being part of the law, we are under no obligation to observe it. Yet, while he claims freedom from the law of the Sabbath, he wishes not to be deprived of the privileges of the Lord's Day, nor to deprive others of the day of rest. We are freed, indeed, from the law as a covenant of works, and the law is shown to be impossible as a way of justification; but we are not delivered from its claims as an expression of God's righteousness. One of the most blessed purposes for which the Saviour of sinners died was "that the righteous requirement of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit" (Rom. viii. 4). It is an utter misconception of the Gospel of God to suppose that grace has set aside (except as above stated) that law which teaches us to love the Lord our God with all our heart, and our neighbour as ourselves.

We respectfully submit to the consideration of the Lord's people generally these very serious questions:—

Are we not in danger of losing the day which God made for man, which is universally acknowledged to be needful for the well-being of man and beast, and which is invaluable to us Christians as a day of worship, and as an opportunity of preaching the Gospel?

All wholesome public opinion must proceed from the Church of Christ; if, therefore, the privilege and blessing of the day of rest slips away from England, will not Christian people be largely responsible for the loss?

Want of reverence and godly fear is one of the saddest signs of the time: is it not to be expected that a closer recognition of the Lord's Day, as a day of private and social as well as public worship, by the people of God for themselves, and a day of rest for all men—would more than compensate for the loss of testimony, the value of which is already heavily discounted by the preachers coming and going, by tram or train, by omnibus or cab? Would not a higher tone and quality of Christian life exercise a more powerful spiritual influence than a quantity of preaching weighted by the failure to commend ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God?

THE BRITISH ENVOY TO THE POPE.

THE Protestant Alliance have forwarded a strong memorial to Lord Salisbury, protesting against the appointment of Sir J. S. Simmons as a special envoy to the Pope on questions of religious jurisdiction in Malta. In the memorial they state:—

"The Roman Catholic subjects of Her Majesty in the Island of Malta enjoy the fullest rights and liberties in the exercise of their religion, and the Roman Catholic Ecclesiastics have the full and free exercise of Spiritual jurisdiction in the island, and even temporal jurisdiction beyond that accorded to the Roman Catholic Ecclesiastical power in any Roman Catholic State in Europe. The object sought by the Church of Rome can only apply to the extension of temporal jurisdiction. Far from extending these privileges, it is desirable to restrict the Roman Catholic Clergy in the exercise of such usurped powers—powers which conflict with civil rights. It would be a humiliation for the British Government to solicit the authority of the Pope in order to control the subjects of the Crown, and to govern and reduce into subjection to the law the Roman Catholic recalcitrant clergy and their co-religionists. Such an appeal would be especially dishonourable, for it must be either a formal recognition of Papal authority in temporal matters, or it would be a requisition for the aid of the Pope's spiritual power, and constitute an acknowledgment that when British rule has failed to enforce obedience, when the law appears too feeble, then we are to enlist the so-called supernatural powers of the Pope and get him to frighten our fellow-subjects into subjection by threats of spiritual terrorism—threats which we believe to be a blasphemous imposture, wielded by a power which, wherever it prevails, has been found to be fatal to every good and wholesome growth in the mind of man."

Lord Salisbury has formally, through his secretary, acknowledged the receipt of the memorial.

BEHIND THE SCENES.

IS THE LABOURER WORTHY OF HIS HIRE?

A MODERN APOSTOLICAL EPISTLE.

Joses Barnabas, the Cypriot, to Paul of Tarsus, greeting.

Brother Paul, there is something amiss with the churches; and I want to give you a hint upon the subject. You know my own position, how some years back I gave up my prospects as a landed proprietor, and took to the life of a preacher of the Gospel. I've kept to the same line since the day we parted, and have given most of my time to tending the flock in and near my old home in Cyprus, whilst you have been on your missionary journeys. As I hear that you are intending to call here on your way up to Jerusalem, and will, of course, give us some exhortation and counsel, I thought it would be well to let you know of a matter much in need of your correction. There is a sore here which badly wants some of your salt, to sting it up and effect a cure.

Whilst you have been away among the heathen, we have had a considerable revival of religion and godliness at home. Among other forms in which this has shown itself is an extraordinary growth of

CHRISTIAN CONVENTIONS.

These are not exactly the mission services which you and I used to take together, and which aimed mainly at the conversion of unbelievers. But they are assemblies of professed believers, who are in need of the same kind of help which I gave at Antioch first of all, when we began our work together; and just what dear good Aquila and his wife did for Apollos when they first met him at Ephesus.

Now the matter for correction concerns these Conventions. They send invitations to me and to other pastors who are set over the flocks, to come and speak at these gatherings all over the island; and for the past few years we have been increasingly occupied with this work. One usually leaves home on the second day of the week, and finds meetings arranged for two, four, or even eight days, and then returns to one's own work again. I receive most pressing invitations, am told of the eager longing for these meetings in all quarters, find enthusiastic assemblies, and hear of new blessing, fuller life, and fresh power for the Lord's service resulting from them. Whereat I rejoice much, even as the ox rejoices to see the fields ripening which he ploughed in the spring, and the garners bursting with the grain which he trod out in the autumn.

THAT OX

brings me to the point. You remember writing to Corinth, in special reference to yourself and to me as forming exceptions to the general rule, that they were not to muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn; because the Lord had ordained that they which preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel.

There are, I know, some good people who don't hold with this doctrine—don't agree with you at all in this matter, and hold that you made a complete mistake, and that the Lord never intended his labourers to have any hire at all. Of course you are right; for there is no possibility of mistaking the Lord's words, that the workman is worthy of his meat, and the labourer is worthy of his hire. But these good people have propagated their doctrine, which may be expressed in a word, as, "Hearing for nothing," or "Don't pay the preachers." Unfortunately, some of these Conference conveners seem to have forgotten your counsel, and the command of the Lord, and have acted according to this new doctrine. That's where I want you to put in a word; as none of us can do so ourselves, lest we appear like beggars, and lower the dignity of the Gospel. Though I have often wondered how the churches can listen to the letter of Brother James, which he sent out some six years ago, without feeling uncomfortable at his solemn warning about keeping back the hire of labourers. But from your independent position as General Superintendent, and as you have already given instructions that this ought to be done, you will be able to enforce it without difficulty, and see that it is carried out all round.

There is a sentence in your letter to Timothy of last year that had to be translated into the island dialect, and got quite a wrong meaning in the process. You told Timothy to instruct the churches that the elders who laboured in the word and doctrine were to be counted

WORTHY OF DOUBLE STIPENDS.

But the translators improperly changed "stipend" into "honour"—perhaps they put honorarium, and the copyists mistook the word; anyhow, it stands as "honour." Well, honour's cheap, and money's dear, so there isn't a church in the island that takes your method of honouring the faithful labourers.

However, whether you say anything about that or not, things are even worse in relation to these Conventions. They call us away from our regular work, where we generally have to provide a deputy during absence; they demand full and frequent addresses, the fruit of our closest study, and most fervent and prayerful meditation—the very fat of the wheat; they expect this for some days at a stretch; and then send us back with the bare amount of our road-money in hand—and sometimes not even that. Now, is that the fair hire of the labourer?

Not to let you suppose this is an isolated case, or applicable to a single place, I will give which I have gathered from various quarters.

Simeon Niger was called to one of our northern towns the other day, travelled by plain bullock cart to avoid needless expense, spent three days in earnest labour there, and returned home on the fifth day after his departure. The presiding brother of the place sent him a missive the following week, and inclosed a sum, which he called "travelling expenses," but which proved to be less by one ounce (Matt. xx. 2, margin) than his actual outlay.

Epænetus was asked to run over to Salamis just for a day's meetings; so he did, and back late that night. He was thanked warmly by the organiser, and allowed to go back out of pocket by an ounce and a quarter, though a contribution of a mite apiece—and two mites make a farthing—from the assembly would have covered his expenses. But then they had to pay sixteen ounces hire for the Gymnasium where they met, and barely raised that!

Nicanor went once to the great summer assembly in the hills at Idalium; a trying journey to and fro. A wonderful gathering was there, almost as large as those gathered in on the first day of Pentecost. For eight days, from Lord's Day to Lord's Day, the feast was spread; some of the brethren being fully occupied on each one of these days. When they left, each one, judging by Nicanor's case, received his road-money, no more and no less. Is that the fair hire of the labourer?

Poor Aquila, he came back the other day from one of those longer Conventions, quite worn out. I was supping with him and Priscilla that night, and asked him what blessing he had had. "The hand of the Lord was stretched out to heal; virtue went out of Him, and healed them all"; and then he told of the week's work with a glowing face and warm heart. Presently Priscilla said: "Aquila dear, our eldest boy's school-bill is four staters higher than we reckoned for. I was thinking perhaps you would bring back a sesterce with you as hire for your labours, and that would meet the charge." The tired face looked sad, as he answered: "No, dear,

THEY JUST GAVE ME THE ROAD-MONEY.

But the Lord will provide. Perhaps He'll send some more parchment copying to do for the city chamberlain." "No, brother," I broke in, "it's all wrong. The Lord told his people to provide hire for his labourers; and it's high time that Paul came by and set things right."

Trophimus is a man without any settled charge; and, knowing this, the Convention people send him invitations thick and fast, and not a few he has accepted. But of all the places he has attended, only in one was he given an overplus beyond the bare road-money, though they all knew he received no hire from a settled post. Poor fellow! A muzzled ox has a hard time of it at the threshing season. And he told me that his empty pocket made him speak of God's promises as he had never done before. But, of course, he couldn't, for very shame's sake, say a word about God's command against muzzling the oxen.

John Mark has been supporting his mother since she lost her land and house, and I had nothing left to keep her with. Well, you remember his rather independent ways; and, though he is all right in principle now, there's something of the old nature still at work. At any rate, he took to replying to all these invitations by requiring a golden stater daily for the time he was out on work; stating that his mother was dependent on him, and the hire was the labourer's need as well as right. Some declined to have his help on those terms; and some took it, but grumbled!

There are six cases for you, to prove the need of some sharp words. Only remember that this does not apply to the annual Convention in the Capital, which first began this work. For there they always give the labourers at least a stater apiece over and above their expenses; which so surprised and pleased me, when I went there once, that, being supplied by the Lord in another way, I gave them back the whole sum—road-money and all—to help on the good work, and show my love of honesty.

And remember also that all this is probably unknown to the great body of the faithful who assemble at these gatherings. They probably never thought about it, never asked, and never heard. Doubtless they would be much hurt, and perhaps indignant if they knew that those men, of whose spiritual things they had received so liberally, had never had a daric of carnal things in return.

The First Epistle of Peter.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XII.—THE PLEA FOR A BLAMELESS LIFE.

1 PETER ii. 11, 12.

WE now pass from the more purely doctrinal to the practical. All the Apostles begin their epistles by laying adamant foundations of Gospel truth, on which they erect a superstructure of exhortations to practical Godliness. Perhaps this division is less noticeable in the writings of the Apostle Peter than in those of his "beloved brother Paul." Still there is clearly a transition at this point. The sermon is a failure that has no personal application. Doctrine without precept tends to dry speculation. Precept without doctrine tends to a sapless formalism, destitute of power.

How tenderly these exhortations are expressed! It is not easy to realise that Peter, the strong Rock-man is speaking here. But years of sorrow have done their work, in mellowing and toning the roughness of his character. And there is a gentleness in his voice, as he beseeches his dearly beloved readers, which must have been one of the strongest persuasives to the life for which he pleaded. This plea for a blameless life must have gone home with double effect, because the shaft was winged with feathers drawn from love's gentle breast. The force of the expression is the greater, because it is not often that we find Peter pleading thus. Christian love does not always require the use of tender and effusive expressions. There is always a danger of their losing their meaning and power, through incessant repetition; but there are occasions, especially when we yearn for the welfare of others, at which, though we might be bold enough to enjoin them that which is convenient, yet, for love's sake, we rather beseech them.

Fleshly lusts are enumerated in detail in several passages of the Word of God (Gal. v. 19). Lust is inordinate desire—the desire for too much of a good thing, or for anything of a bad one. Fleshly lusts are those which seek their gratification through the avenues of the physical nature with which God has endowed us. We are all provided with certain natural instincts and desires, which have been implanted for right and useful purposes, and are innocent enough when regulated by the will of God. But these natural appetites are constantly fretting against restraint, yearning for unlawful gratification, seething and foaming as the sea-waves against a harbour bar. If you yield to them, if you love anything outside the circle of God's will, if you follow your own wild instincts, irrespective of the self-restraint demanded by conscience, if you indulge any one side of your nature out of the due balance and equilibrium of the whole, if you allow an undue monopoly of taste or thought in one direction, then beware, you need especially to be on your guard against the fleshly lusts of which the Apostle speaks.

They war against the soul.—That word "war" is full of meaning. It gives the idea of the march of an army against a city, as of the Greeks to surround and capture Troy—an assault which began with open war and ended by the stratagem of the wooden horse, from which the armed warriors descended into the heart of the city at dead of night. Of course we should all admit that excessive indulgence in any appetite injures the body, and especially the organs through which the sin against the whole fabric has been committed. But we may not all realise how destructive these fleshly lusts are to the inner life. They attack and conquer it, and lead it into captivity, impairing its energies, sullying its purity, lowering its tone, and cutting off the locks of moral strength. Remember, then, when tempted to yield to some unholy prompting, even though you only indulge the thought and wish, you are exposing yourself to a certain diminution of spiritual force, which will inevitably cripple your endeavours, and show itself in failure and defeat. No act of sensual indulgence is possible without inevitable injury to our true selves. It may be forgiven, and put away, through the forgiveness of God, by the blood of Jesus; but the soul can never be quite what it would have been had the temptation been overcome, and the grace of self-restraint exercised.

How many there are around us, eminently fitted by their gifts, to lead the hosts of God, who, like Samson, grind in the prison-house, making pastime for their foes, because they have been mastered by appetites which they should have controlled, as the horseman his fiery steed. Is there not a deep spiritual truth in the notion of the savage warrior, that the strength of a fallen foe enters the arm which has smitten him to the dust? Indulge the flesh, and you are weak. Curb it by self-restraint, and you are strong.

We need, however, to notice how this abstinence from unholy indulgence may be realised. And it may be helpful to remember the following points:—

(1) Let us understand that self-restraint is possible.—It is quite true that we are children of a sinning race, and come into life with the taint of evil in us. This is not a matter for argument, but of each man's individual experience. Though the third chapter of Genesis and the fifth chapter of Romans had never been penned, we must have felt that somewhere there had been an awful lapse in the story of our race, or that it had been the sport of some malign fate. From the first there is in us all an hereditary tendency to gratify to excess the promptings of the natural appetite. Besides this we have deepened and intensified these inherited tendencies by our actual transgressions. There have been repeated yieldings, each one of which has nourished and fostered their strength. And we resemble an athlete, who has permitted himself to be bound around with threads of cotton, any of which could be snapt in a moment, but all of which together hold him like an iron chain.

But, notwithstanding all, it is true that no temptation can happen to us but such as is common to man, or which God cannot deal with. It would be impious to say that God has permitted evil to arrive at such a pitch that He cannot cope with it, or that there is any sin, usurping his throne in the inner realm, which He cannot quell.

It is immaterial how strong may be your inherited tendencies towards evil, or the habits which you have formed by successive acts of sin, God is able to give you deliverance, and to keep you from being overcome. It is possible even for you to abstain from the fleshly lusts, which have been subjugating your soul, as Moabites and Philistines did the fair land of Israel in the days when the Judges ruled. Every command carries a promise at its heart; and this loving entreaty for a better, purer life hides a divine undertaking that you shall yet be more than a conqueror, putting your foot on flesh and self, and reigning where now you groan in slavery. Take heart, it is possible even for you to abstain from fleshly lusts, because God is able to keep.

(2) Choose death.—There is a sense in which we all died in Jesus Christ our Lord, when on the cross He yielded up his spirit to his Father. There is also another sense in which we must die daily, in the constant denial of self. But, besides this, there must be one definite moment in each Christian's life when death is definitely chosen for all that is selfish, worldly, fleshly, and of the devil. This is surely the meaning of the Apostle, when he says, using a tense, which signifies a definite past act: "They that are of Christ Jesus crucified the flesh with the passions and the lusts thereof" (Gal. v. 24).

Too many of us never come to that point. We accept the incursions and reign of evil things too much as an inevitable experience to which we must ever be liable in this world. We yield, and repent, and curse ourselves, and yield again. Christians often speak of their besetting sins as natural infirmities, which they cannot help, but which must be borne as the diseases incident to childhood. There is too little of the rising up of a holy and almost fierce determination to be free.

Or if there be such a resolve, it often lacks completeness. It shuts the front door, but not the back door of the nature, against the thought of possible indulgence. It leaves an almost invisible thread of communication between the soul and the evils of which it would fain be rid, and along it the contagion is still free to pass. And as long as there is the smallest flaw in the integrity of the soul's purpose, there is no hope of deliverance. We must cut all connection, close every aperture, and abandon all thought of fleshly indulgence in every shape and form. In short, we must choose death.

Is not this the secret of your repeated failure? You have heard about the keeping power of Christ, and have appealed for it. But you have not been kept. You have been overcome in spite of your cries for help. And you will never get right until you go down into the grave where Jesus lay, and place yourself on that rough rocky niche, whilst the heavy stone shuts you away from all that you held dear. And when you count all things dross for his sake, you will win Christ. Through the grave you will come to the Easter dawn. Death will be the gate of life. Having been crucified with Christ, you will discover that his life will flow into you triumphantly.

With much earnestness do the pages of the New Testament appeal to us to come to this definite resolution. But especially is it the keynote of that marvellous sixth chapter of Romans, which appeals to us as having died with Christ, and as therefore being free from sin. Expressions are employed, from which we would have shrunk, as being too forcible, too extreme, in order to show how complete the deliverance is for those who have been with Christ in the likeness of his death. There is not the least doubt that our deliverance from the power of all fleshly lusts is in the precise measure in which we have embraced that idea of complete severance from them, which is suggested in the one final, all-severing, awful word, Death.

(3) Walk in the Spirit.—There are Christians who live in the Spirit, but who do not walk in the Spirit (Gal. v. 25). The distinction is an obvious one. We live in the Spirit, because only in Him we share at all in the life of Christ, a life which is everlasting and Divine. But how few of us walk in the Spirit from hour to hour; at each step stopping to deny ourselves, that He may work or speak; looking to Him for guidance at each turn of the path; and adopting the track which He indicates, as the cloud of old, moving over the desert sands.

But nothing less than this will suffice. "Walk in the Spirit," says the Apostle, "and ye shall not fulfil the lusts of the flesh." It is not enough to resolve to abstain, the resolution will not be able to keep the door shut against the pressure of temptation. We must have something positive. Not the water of a negation, but the fire of a possession. The indwelling and pre-occupation of the Holy Spirit in his fulness can alone suffice for our need. And this can only be had by a reverent and perpetual communication being maintained between the soul and Him; as air must be pumped into the diver's helmet at every movement he makes on the ocean floor.

But when the soul is pervaded perpetually by the presence and power of the Holy Spirit, it is easy to abstain. The soul loses its very taste for things in which it formerly delighted. It detects them when yet far distant, and shudders at their approach. Satisfied with the provision of the Father's house, it turns with disgust from the husks of the swine-trough.

The motives for this abstinence are more than sufficient. (1) We are strangers and pilgrims.—"Consider what you are. If you were citizens of this world, then you might drive the same trade with them, and follow the same lusts; but seeing you are chosen and called out of this world, and invested into a new society, made free of another country, it is very reasonable that there be this difference betwixt you and the world, and while they live as at home, your carriage be such as becomes strangers; not glutting yourselves with their pleasures, not surfeiting upon their delicious fruits, but living warily and soberly."

However gay or comfortable the hostelry may be, the traveller hastens homewards. It is not for him to entangle himself with the fascinations and allurements of the towns through which he goes. Indeed, he has no time to be allured; before the meshes of the net enwrap him he is gone. And the attractions of the beloved circle which await him so engage and monopolise his heart that he has no desire for the unholy baits which are offered to him. What, then, have we in common with fleshly lusts, when our citizenship is in heaven, whence we are looking for the Saviour?

(2) We must consider our influence on the world.—Our behaviour among the Gentiles must be honest, i.e., fair or beautiful, not only for our sake, but for theirs. Followers of Jesus must never be surprised to find themselves spoken of as evil doers. They called the Master Beelzebub, how much more will they malign the slaves of his household. The most monstrous stories were circulated throughout the Roman Empire of the rites which Christians were said to perpetrate in their secret meetings; and on the ground of those stories they were punished with torture and death.

Such baseless charges are sometimes made still, and we must take care not to give any occasion for them in our behaviour. Nay, we must so live, that, in the day of crisis and trial, men may be compelled to acknowledge the worth of our religion, and to glorify God for having enabled us so to bear and suffer and endure.

There are arguments being built up in the sick-chambers and furnaces of trial, through which Christians are called to pass, which silence detractors, and compel them to admit the presence of a strength, a patience, and a fortitude for which their philosophy cannot account. And in many such cases has blasphemy been turned to adoration, and railing to praise.

With such motives to animate us, let us give a favourable response to this touching and earnest plea for a stainless and blameless life.

AMERICAN NOTES.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

THE week following the great Conference on the Person and Ministry of the Holy Spirit, another Conference was held of a far different character in the same city of Baltimore. It was the centennial commemoration of the first Roman Catholic See in the United States. One hundred years ago the Roman Pontiff appointed the first bishop; now hosts of priests, bishops, archbishops, and cardinals commemorate that event. In addition to the American prelates there were representatives from Mexico, Canada, England, and even Rome itself, to participate in the gorgeous processions and imposing ceremonies of the occasion. Other great movements were included in the celebration, notably the inauguration of the first Congress of Catholic laymen, and the dedication of the new national Catholic University at Washington.

The hand of the Jesuits could be traced in both speeches and resolutions. It was by their influence and persistent clamour that the Bible was removed from the public schools, and now on this centennial occasion the Roman officials declare:—

> We are committed to a sound, popular education, which demands not only physical and intellectual, but also the moral and religious training of our youth. As in the State schools no provision is made for teaching religion, we must continue to support our own schools, colleges, and universities already established, and multiply and perfect others.

The Catholics no longer hide their policy. They have openly stated that the most glorious enterprise for the Catholic Church to engage in at this day is the conversion of the United States to the Catholic faith.

That there is uneasiness regarding the future of the Pope, and of Catholicism, among the inner circles may be gathered from the following declaration made before adjournment:—

> We cannot conclude without recording our solemn conviction that the absolute freedom of the Holy See is equally indispensable to the peace of the Church and the welfare of mankind. We demand in the name of humanity and justice that this freedom be scrupulously respected by all secular Governments.

Meantime, leading Protestant ministers all over the country have their patriotism aroused, and from pulpit and platform come loud and earnest protests.

Dr. John Hall, of New York, has taken occasion at the funeral of one of the city judges to declare his faith in the doctrines of orthodoxy regarding the state of the dead; that it has been determined for all eternity, and that the period of probation has ended. The funeral service, he added, is therefore for the living and not for the dead, who have gone beyond the reach of human prayers. The late Episcopal Convention of New York had brought the question of prayers for the dead to the front. Hence Dr. Hall's protest.

The Mormons are applying for citizenship. Their case is therefore investigated, and decision awaited both by Gentiles and "the faithful," with suppressed excitement. Meantime the sermons and public utterances of the Mormon hierarchy are being overhauled, and ghastly revelations are coming to light. Heber C. Kimball, one of the twelve apostles of the church, declared:—

> Will the President that sits in the chair of state be tipped from his seat? Yes; he will die an untimely death, and God Almighty will curse him, and He will also curse his successor if he takes the same stand, and He will curse all those who are his coadjutors, and all those who sustain him. What for? For coming here to destroy the kingdom of God, and the prophets, and apostles, and inspired men and women, and God Almighty will curse them in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. According to my calling, and if there is any virtue in my calling, they shall be cursed, every man that lifts his heel against us from this day forth.

Mormonism still increases by European emigration. Why not petition Parliament to forbid the entrance of Mormon missionaries to Great Britain?

The first number of The Soudan and Regions Beyond has appeared. H. Grattan Guinness is its editor. The object of the journal is to disseminate information regarding the Soudan, and like territories awaiting the missionary and evangelist; also to report the development of the Kansas Pioneer Soudan Mission, and the movements of the missionaries, the first batch of whom will soon be on their way to attempt pioneer work beyond the Kong Mountains. Many individual churches have promised to support these men, and to have them prayerfully in constant remembrance. It is a grave undertaking for a young mission to send forth these young ardent brethren, but the Lord is rich in mercy, and will hear the cry of those who fear Him.

HELP FOR WORKING WOMEN.

SIR,—The graphic descriptions which are now appearing in the press of the way in which the poor of this wealthy city live, and of their fearful struggle for a bare existence, must strike a sympathetic chord in all humane hearts. The question arises whether something cannot be done, in addition to improving their dwellings, to lift the poor people out of their wretched condition, and help them to help themselves.

It is with this object that I now write to tell your readers of a scheme which has been successfully tried for the last two years in Avenue-road Church, Avenue-road, Goldhawk-road, Shepherd's Bush. A few ladies formed themselves into a society, which they called "The Avenue-road Self-Help Society." About £40 was laid out in purchasing linen, flannel, calico, prints, &c., as cheaply as possible. These materials are cut out by the committee into all kinds of ladies' and gentlemen's underclothing of different qualities, children's dresses, pinafores, &c., and given out every Wednesday to deserving women to be made up; a fair price is paid for the work, care being taken that the work is well done.

Some of the women can earn, working only at odd times, 7s. a week; for instance, one woman last winter, although she had six children to look after, and her domestic duties to see to, was able to earn 7s. a week and keep the home together, while her husband was out of work for three months. From 1s. 6d. to 3s. 6d. is paid for making a night-dress, and other work in proportion.

The articles, when made, are ticketed and priced, and a sale of work held about every quarter. At the last sale about £20 were taken, and orders received for more work. Thus the Society is self-supporting, and the poor are put in the way of helping themselves.

The next sale of work takes place at the Lecture Hall adjoining Avenue-road Church, on the 11th and 12th instant, from three till nine. Should any of your readers desire further information as to the practical working of this admirable Society, which has been in existence about two years, the committee will be happy to see them on that occasion.

A SYMPATHISER.

WORKING GIRLS' HOME (73, Drury-lane).—The evening gatherings in connection with this Home were reopened in September. Temperance, needlework, &c., are taught, and there are also seasons of recreation. The factory girls have their own special night. On Sundays those girls who are in service near, and have no friends in London, gather round the table for Bible-reading, singing, and often have tea. The nursery keeps full, and many little lives are helped. In this locality many mothers must work out of doors, and there are sad tales of what befell the little ones while the mothers were away. Fuller particulars of the Home may be had from the hon. sec., Mr. W. F. Barratt, 50, Eardley-crescent; or from the Matron.

Some Scottish Missions.—VII.

EDINBURGH MEDICAL MISSIONS.

ONE of the most important agencies at work for Christ in Edinburgh is its Medical Missionary Society. Not there only is its influence felt, but all the world over; for there are few centres of foreign missionary labour which are not, or have not been, associated in some way with the home Society, by its graduates going forth to preach the Gospel, healing the sick, in various parts of heathendom.

The scope of this article, however, confines us to a glimpse of the work actually carried on in the Scottish capital, and so numerous are its branches that time and space will be fully occupied in considering these.

It is now over forty years since Dr. Handyside, a prominent Edinburgh physician, who died a few years ago, first responded to an urgent appeal from the missionary to the Irish to visit some of the sick poor in the city. In the spirit of true Christian philanthropy, he undertook this labour of love, and thenceforth, wherever there were sick and suffering Irish, there, with the missionary, was the doctor to be found. Thus he became acquainted with the misery and woe of the Cowgate and Grassmarket, mourning alike the spiritual darkness and the many sorrows of those destitute wanderers from the sister isle.

But it was soon discovered that kind treatment of the body opened the way for dealing with the sin-stricken soul; and, revolving in his mind how the influence thus acquired might be turned to the best account, and be brought to bear in a more systematic way for the spiritual good of the people, the doctor conceived the idea of establishing a Medical Mission. Trusting in God for the necessary means, he opened the Main Point Missionary Dispensary in 1853.

For five years an excellent combination of medical and spiritual work was carried on, the aid being secured during that period of thirty-three medical students, of whom seven afterwards found spheres of labour in the foreign field. In 1858 at 39, Cowgate, to which the work was transferred. Such are the happy memories associated with this spot in the minds of the helpers during the twenty years of its existence, that it was not without a touch of regret that they saw "dear old 39" demolished in 1877, to give place to the present commanding premises, called the Livingstone Memorial Medical Missionary Training Institution.

A WHISKY-SHOP WAS TAKEN

One cannot here trace in detail the growth of this veritable "tree of life for the healing of the nations"; but its present-day development is a study full of interest. Like the Pool of Bethesda, it is visited by "a great multitude of impotent folk," seeking relief from many and varied infirmities, while the missionaries also attend those in their own homes who are unable to come to the dispensary.

It is found that, in the course of a year, some 24,000 "attendances" are recorded—that is, of patients to the dispensary and of doctors to the homes; while a careful calculation shows this to represent between nine and ten thousand individuals who are thus brought face to face with practical and soul-saving Christianity in the course of the year. No figures can estimate the actual spiritual results, direct and indirect, accruing from such a far-reaching work as this; but the workers have been cheered to know, from time to time, that many have been who forgiveth all their iniquities, and healeth all their diseases.

Of course, in this as in every other kind of mission work, the great obstacle in the way of progress is the curse of drink. A Temperance Society was, therefore, soon found to be a necessity. For some years this branch of the work was only in operation during the winter months; but since 1883 it has been carried on regularly summer and winter alike. And, as year by year goes round, each has seen a larger number of persons reclaimed than its predecessor—a fact that greatly cheers those who labour in this difficult sphere, especially as comparatively few of the pledges taken are subsequently broken. This is no doubt due to the fact that those who sign are carefully visited and followed up; good sound literature also being distributed amongst them.

But while the cure of habitual drunkenness is good, prevention is better. Therefore, special efforts are directed towards the young by means of the Band of Hope. A great feature of this branch is that the children themselves are encouraged to take part in its meetings, by singing, reciting, or reading, for which (as also for regular attendance) prizes are periodically given. Not only are these greatly valued, but it is surprising what a hold the importance of the pledge has upon some of these young minds, as the following incident will show:—

A little girl, eleven years of age, about the least hopeful, and one of the most unruly, of all the children, seemed very much depressed during one meeting. Her parents, well known at the dispensary as amongst the most depraved and drunken in the district, were as often in jail as not. Everything went for drink. Clothes given to the child were pawned, and the money expended on drink, so that she appeared at the meetings in rags, barefooted and bareheaded, seemingly cared for by no one. She was, on this occasion, quiet—a most unusual thing for her. At the close, after all the other children had left, there she was still in her seat, looking very sad. Spoken to kindly and asked why she did not go home, she said, "Please, I've broke my pledge." "Have you? How did you come to do that?" "Please, some whisky." "What was that for, lassie?" "I was sick, and mother made me drink it. I didn't want to, but she made me." "I am so sorry that you should have broken your pledge, but——" "Please, I want to sign again," said the child; which, of course, she was gladly suffered to do.

MOTHER MADE ME DRINK

Talking of the children brings us to the Class for Children who used to loiter and play about the door of the Cowgate dispensary on the Sabbath evenings. This was one of the most difficult enterprises the Mission at home ever tackled. I have seen little Arabs in North Africa, in their native classes, but their behaviour was princely to that of these little "arabs" of the Cowgate. At the outer door each urchin received a "sweet," which served as a passport to the inner room, which was reached with a whoop and a rush. A scramble for seats, followed by a deafening uproar, seemed ill-suited precursors to devotional exercises; in fact, a subdued hubbub (rising to Babel height during the singing) was the chief characteristic of the evening; and their eagerness to get into the meeting was even surpassed by the precipitate haste exhibited to get out when it was over, as, like a band of little savages on the war-path, they tore out into the street.

But all this was altered in time. Mark the stages of development—at first the "sweets" formed a bait; soon they were reserved as a reward for good behaviour; at last they were dispensed with altogether. Tickets for attendance came into vogue; the children were classified, according to age, into different departments, until a quiet, orderly, and profitable service succeeded the turbulent proceedings of earlier days; and the Sabbath evening classes became bright spots in these young lives for daily retrospect and prospect.

On Sabbath mornings, too, attention was likewise devoted to the young folk by the establishment of a Children's Church (divided into senior and junior branches), to afford a separate service for those who had hitherto joined the adults in morning worship. On this occasion the International Lessons are used, and once a month a missionary address is given—often by someone lately returned from the foreign field. Collections are also made, which mount up in the year to a dozen pounds or more, this sum being forwarded to one or other of the mission stations abroad, in which an interest has been created.

But these notes must not convey the idea that, with so much being done for the children, the adults are neglected. A very valuable adjunct to the Mission is the Adult Bible-class, held on Sabbath afternoons. Usually consecutive portions of Scripture occupy the attention of the members; thus the life of some Bible character will be studied week by week, and many are the practical lessons for every-day life which are learned from such subjects. The members are most, if not all, of the artisan class, and gladly receive visits in their own homes from the workers. Thus a bond of fellowship exists which proves very valuable in following up those whose interest has been awakened.

Much good has also been wrought through the Young Women's Association, which was commenced in 1887 by Dr. Hœrnle who afterwards went as a medical missionary to Persia. Under the direction of the President, a number of ladies undertake this work, each having from twelve to fifteen girls under her special charge, whom she visits regularly and endeavours to lead and help in the way of life. The members vary in age from fifteen to twenty-two. Bible-classes, Scripture union, temperance and sewing-classes, music, savings bank, and a number of other aids, are invoked to instil principles of piety, virtue, and thrift into the hearts of these young women, who will have the bringing up of a succeeding generation. Thus the seed sown may go on bearing fruit for years and years to come. One evening a month is spent as a missionary sewing meeting, the proceeds of the year being sent to medical mission stations abroad. In this manner, as throughout the whole Mission, the needs of the heathen abroad are kept well to the front, and laid upon the hearts of the poor at home.

The secretary and superintendent of the work in Edinburgh is Rev. John Lowe, F.R.C.S.E., who may be addressed at the Medical Mission House, 56, George-square. A quarterly paper is published in February, May, August, and November, which communicates the most recent medical missionary intelligence from all parts of the world, as well as information regarding the work of the Society at home. These may be had from Dr. Lowe for one shilling per annum, and will prove a wonderful stimulus to carry the interest of their readers through home-channels to "regions beyond."

HAMMERSMITH Y.M.C.A.—The sixth annual meeting was held in the Vestry Hall, Hammersmith, on Tuesday evening, November 26, when Lord Kinnaird presided. The work done for the past year was pleasing to note, there having been an advance all along the line. Much praise and thanksgiving were sent up to God for permitting his workers to close another year with such happy results. Stirring addresses were given by Revs. A. R. Shrewsbury, F. B. Monti, and H. W. Webb-Peploe.

SOUTHALL GOSPEL BARN, belonging to Mr. H. P. Baxter, which was burned in July last, is being replaced by a substantial "Barn Mission Hall," for which help is asked. Since the fire, Gospel work has been continued, first in a tent, and then in a shed which Mr. Baxter had enclosed for the purpose. The services are well attended, and there is a large Sunday-school. Railway mission work is also carried on, and the brickfield lads are encouraged to spend their evenings profitably. The lads are many of them members of a "True Blue" Society, pledged to abstain from strong drink, smoking, using bad language, and gambling. The new hall will be opened shortly with a ten days' mission. Fuller information from Miss H. J. Baxter, The Green, Southall, Middlesex.

DR. PIERSON IN LONDON.

REV. DR. PIERSON, of Philadelphia, occupied London pulpits on Sunday last, and profited by grand occasions to stir up Christian people to active zeal in the evangelisation of the world. In the morning at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, before a large congregation, he founded his discourse upon Acts i. 8: "But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto Me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." Noticing the marginal reading: "Ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you," he well pointed out that it is with the Holy Ghost that the power to witness for Christ comes. These were the Lord's last words before his ascension, and they prescribed the grandly simple work of witnessing—or telling out what we know.

This witnessing is a universal privilege, for it was not to the eleven Apostles that the Lord said, "Go ye into all the world," but to the great body of disciples in Galilee. There is a common notion that preaching is to be confined to ministers of the Gospel, but the New Testament knows of no such arrangement. The distinction between clergy and laity is a pernicious

SURVIVAL FROM THE DARK AGES.

The woman of Samaria, who went into the city of Sychar, and said, "Come, see a man that told me all things that ever I did," had never been ordained or licensed, yet she was one of the most earnest, evangelical, experimental, and successful preachers the world has ever seen. Moreover, witnessing for Christ is a very effectual thing, for all true testimony carries power with it. The power to convince is the power of being convinced; and the man who would persuade must first be persuaded. Our testimony will, however, be limited by our experience, for we cannot tell what we do not know. The reason we do not witness more is that we have so little to witness about—so little positive knowledge and deep experience of the things of God.

Passing on, the preacher showed that the witnessing is perpetual, and will not cease to be the prerogative of believers until the Lord comes. Also, it is the highest possible privilege of believers. Angels do not preach the Gospel; but we may, because we are sinners saved by grace, and that cannot be said by Gabriel. In some concluding words, eloquently expressed, Dr. Pierson urged a personal and determined application to the great missionary work of the Church, of the Lord's injunction to bear witness concerning Him.

In the evening there was a large congregation in Regent-square Presbyterian Church, when Dr. Pierson preached with great power from Matt. viii. 21, 22, combined with Luke ix. 60. The two passages present the nameless disciple's words, with Christ's answer, in this form: "Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father. Jesus said unto him, Let the dead bury their dead; but follow thou Me, and go and preach the Kingdom of God." The Lord was not opposed to the discharge of filial duty, but He wished to save the man from contact in which he would probably suffer the loss of the good impressions that had been made upon him. He urged the disciple not to follow a dead corpse, but Himself, the Lord of life and glory. He told him to rather than take part in vain lamentations for the dead. Christ came, not to bury dead people, but to wake them to life.

Having pointed out that "Follow Me" expresses discipleship, and "Go and preach the Kingdom" expresses service, Dr. Pierson addressed himself to Christians, and proceeded to enlarge upon the second point—"go and preach." If we follow Christ and get salvation and life, we must preach Him and give salvation and life. Every believer in the Lord Jesus is a herald of the Gospel and saved in order that he may serve. This thought led the preacher to his great theme. Christ alone can save the world, but He cannot save the world alone. That is the paradox of missions; believers are the missing link between the cross of Christ and dying and dead souls. This is not only Christian doctrine, but was the practice of the early Church. Before the world can be evanglised, the whole Church must awake to mission work. The devoted men and women who are at present labouring in foreign fields are the right arm of the Church of God; but, unless the entire body moves, the unreached millions cannot be effectually got at. The command of Christ is intensely individual: "follow thou Me"; "Go thou and preach." God never overlooks the "thou" in the "ye," nor the "me" in the "us." Christ's solemn appeal is addressed to each one of us.

There have been great turning-points in the history of missions. The first of these was at the resurrection of Christ, and the giving of the commission

"GO YE INTO ALL THE WORLD."

The magnificent triumphs of the first century may be attributed, almost exclusively, to the fact that the Church at large did the witnessing. The responsibility was regarded as resting on every believing man and woman. The result was that within the compass of the first century the Gospel was more nearly proclaimed throughout the world than it has been ever since. The second great turning-point was at the conversion of Constantine, but this was followed by a thousand years of darkness. Then came the Lutheran Reformation regarding Christian doctrine, but the Church had to wait three hundred years before she clearly recognised her duty to a lost world. She has now wheeled into line at mission work, but we have yet to have sounded in our ears the trumpet of a new reformation, completely restoring the sense of individual responsibility. By telling facts and figures, the preacher went on to show the world's sad need, and the Church's present opportunity. Were the Church to rouse herself to-day, to consider her duty and privilege with reference to the evangelisation of the world, she might, before the present generation shall have gone down to its grave, give the knowledge of salvation through Christ to every human being on the face of the earth. God is now calling upon us to put all our enterprise into his work, and as we use our resources, so we shall find that He multiplies them to the praise of his Great Name.

In some informal remarks, Dr. Pierson said that he had undertaken his present mission in obedience to an unmistakable call from God, in the hope that, by putting certain great facts and truths before the people, he might intensify the already burning flame of missionary zeal. It is his purpose, he said, during December to visit the West of Scotland, and to spend January in London and the great cities of England. He hopes during February and March to make a still more complete tour of Scotland, possibly going to France and Italy in April. In May he expects to labour in Ireland. The prayers of believers are asked for with confidence, that God's abundant blessing upon the effort may be vouchsafed.

BRIXTON Y.W.C.A.—The eighth anniversary of this branch was recently celebrated. The report spoke of the great success of the evening classes, and told of an increase of members; 125 joined during the year, making a total of over 300. Mrs. Hind Smith, Miss Malden, Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, Dr. Concanon, and Rev. M. Rainsford gave short addresses. The following week the members and friends met for a social tea, when over 200 were present.

THE GROWING LILIES.*

"Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow."—MATT. vi. 28.

"Desire the sincere milk of the Word, that ye may grow thereby."—1 PET. ii. 2.

"Holding fast the word of Life."—PHIL. ii. 16.

"WE are such tender lily buds,
So very weak and small,
We wonder if we ever can
Grow strong, and straight, and tall;
We hope, and wish, and strive to grow,
It seems no use at all."

Thus foolishly and needlessly,
The lily buds complain,
When, softly on their petals falls,
A gentle shower of rain,
And then the glorious summer sun,
Shines down on them again.

They open wide their snowy cups,
To sunshine and to shower,
Drinking the light and freshness in,
With every golden hour;
And smile, and breathe their gladness out,
Through all the leafy bower.

As they received the dew and rain,
The sunlight, and the air,
And gave it forth in fragrance sweet,
In leaf and blossom fair,
They knew not that they grew apace
Without their toil or care.

Receiving in, and giving forth,
Is how the lilies grow,
The simple secret is the same
In everything below;
The blossom, and the heaven-born soul,
Alike this growth must know.

THE MISSIONARY BUREAU.

THIS agency, now located at 186, Aldersgate-street, seems about to enter upon a new and extended lease of existence. The general committee, including General Haig, Messrs. George Williams, J. E. Mathieson, H. W. Fry, Robert Burn, R. C. Morgan, Revs. G. D. Hooper F. B. Meyer, and others, has engaged the services of Mr. R. Caldwell, for some years associated with the China Inland Mission, and considerable energy is being put forth to realise the objects for which the Bureau was founded.

A good work has already been done in helping candidates for missionary work to find suitable fields of labour, whether in connection with existing societies or otherwise; and several self-supporting missionaries are now at work in different parts of the world, who owe much of their present opportunity to the advice and help they have received from the Bureau. But it is felt that in addition to the work of stirring up a missionary spirit, and inducing separate congregations to seek representation in the mission field, it may become necessary to help certain cases with outfit and passage-money, where every other consideration is favourable, but means are lacking. This part of the work will require funds, which will be carefully administered, as the Lord may send them.

The basis of the Bureau is thoroughly evangelical and catholic, and every effort is made to associate the missionaries sent forth with workers already in the field, so that they may become auxiliaries and helps. In this marvellous time of quickening in missionary zeal, and when so many young and ardent spirits are eagerly offering themselves for service, it is a matter of great importance that there should be an agency like this in existence, ready with advice and information, and in touch with all kinds of existing operations.

Supping with Criminals.

ONCE a year Mr. George Hatton and his helpers make a feast strictly after the orthodox and New Testament type. He invites as guests those who have small chance of returning the compliment, though all of them have at some time or another sojourned in one of Her Majesty's palaces—goals, to wit. About 300 of these "lapsed" brethren supped at the Mission Hall, Little Wild-street, on Monday evening. Half of them were said to be fresh from the cell, while the other half had been for awhile receiving benefit from the Mission. All were apparently in good trim for discussing the creature comforts bountifully provided.

After prayer and singing a statement of the years' work was read by Mr. Tointon, one of the committee, in the universally regretted absence of Mr. Hatton from illness. It is the first time within our recollection that this devoted friend of London poor has failed to put in an appearance at these interesting anniversaries. Mr. Wheatley, however, was there, and the estimation in which he is held by his special clients was shown by the storm of cheering that greeted the mention of his name. The statement made reference to a marked decrease in the criminal ranks during the past ten or twelve years, and naturally claimed for the labours of the Mission a share of the credit in bringing about such a reduction, and in a corresponding decrease of prison expenditure. During the bygone year more than 8000 men have been helped in various ways. Out of 19,800 discharged from four Metropolitan prisons, nearly 500 long-service prisoners also got a lift on their discharge. A new branch of work is found among lads, who can now, under the Probation of First Offenders Act, be dealt with leniently, so as to give them a chance of escaping the prison taint. Mr. Wheatley has been incessantly at work throughout the year, and his untiring energy has met with a rich reward in the case of many. It was rather disappointing to find from the report that the funds are £2000 in arrear; if the public could be made to understand its indebtedness to this agency, we think it would not hesitate in relieving the Mission of all monetary anxiety.

Earl COMPTON, as chairman, was more than sympathetic in his references to the work of the Mission, and in his commendation of Christian missions generally. Indeed, we have heard many a less effective sermon from a pulpit than the earnest and hearty appeal he made to his frail brethren before him, to accept a helping hand in raising themselves from a sinful to a godly and honest life. Spoken as from the heart to the heart, and in the most kindly fashion, his words must have dropped into receptive soil. "The drink" came in for a word of condemnation, and we hope his lordship's warning on this vital point will be remembered by guests and visitors alike.

The hero of the evening, of course, was Mr. WHEATLEY, who, in the course of his "straight talk" to the men, put in a very strong plea for the boys, so many of whom are led astray by those who are old in crime. Weighty words were addressed to them about unkindness to wives and families, about wasting hard-earned money in drink, about laziness and other weaknesses to which these poor fellows appear to be prone. It was really astonishing to see how the men listened to Mr. Wheatley's searching remarks, and how they applauded at the close. No better tribute could have been paid to the splendidly practical character of the work.

Mr. CURTIS BENNETT, speaking as a London magistrate, said he really did not know how he could have got through the anxious work of dealing with young and first offenders, without the assistance of Mr. Wheatley. He thought that matters were improving in London—thanks to this Society and other good agencies—and if he lived to be as old a magistrate as some of his colleagues on the Bench, he hoped to find a vast change for the better.

Rev. J. MCNEILL, as a preacher of the Gospel, was glad to be there to tell of Jesus Christ as the One who can help in time of need. Human help is good, and there is a tingle of Christ's hand in the grasp of the hand of a man like Mr. Wheatley; but beyond all brother men there is that One who sticketh closer than a brother, and who is so ready to send speedy and certain deliverance. Mr. McNeill rehearsed the gist of his Sunday morning sermon, which had been about the victory of Shammah over the Philistines in the field of lentiles. These oft-defeated men were urged to copy the example of the courageous Israelite, and make a stand once more, notwithstanding the wreck of life they had made. God would be for them and with them, and they might yet redeem the past. As the speaker poured forth a torrent of impassioned appeal, many of the dull and dour-looking faces lighted up, and it seemed as though hope was entering in at the door and despair going out at the window. Mr. McNeill pleaded for the shutting up of the places of temptation—the drinkshops; but made a point that was quickly taken up, in hinting that they could apply the closure to themselves. Mr. Gainsford Bruce, Q.C., added some further words of exhortation. Mr. F. A. Bevan and Mr. D'Eyncourt had an easy task in moving thanks to the noble chairman and the other speakers. During the evening there were many kindly references to the way in which the police work with the Mission for a common end, and it was announced that Mr. Monro, the Chief Commissioner, has promised to show his sympathy by presiding at next year's supper.

*THREE BIOGRAPHIES.

As in the Father's house there are many mansions, so in the great world-wide vineyard of the Master there are many tasks to be done, needing the most varied gifts and graces, but all alike honourable, and with a common end in view, the advancement and manifestation of the kingdom of God upon earth. The life stories of three servants of the King are told in the books before us, and each has its distinctive and peculiar charm. First, let us note what is said about

THE MISSIONARY.

This second half of the Autobiography of the veteran apostle to the Southern Hebrides is not a whit behind its predecessor in genuine, living, fascinating interest. The record embraces Mr. Paton's visits to the churches at the Antipodes and in Great Britain as a missionary reporter and advocate; and also the narrative of his successes in direct Gospel work among the heathen in the island of Aniwa. As we read the wrondrous tale of "something attempted, something done," told in words that come red-hot from the heart of the honoured worker, we feel that of a truth the days of miracles are not ended. Whether as a delegate to the home churches pleading the cause so dear to him, or as a soldier of the Cross in the forefront of the battle with black heathenism, Mr. Paton is a grand specimen of what can be accomplished by one God-possessed and fully consecrated man. While Christianity continues to produce, equip, and utilise such men, it can afford to smile at the assaults of modern doubters, agnostics, or unbelievers. All the intellectual negations in the universe are powerless against such glorious and indisputable facts. The vivid pictures of missionary life in the far South embodied in Mr. Paton's "pen-portraits of Aniwans" and Mrs. Paton's graphic family letters, form chapters of missionary history that ought to be read for the good cheer and encouragement of all helpers of foreign missions.

The editor of these two delightful volumes deserves the best thanks of the churches of Christ, and we can but hope that his illustrious brother will yet live and labour long enough to furnish material for a third and crowning narrative of a singularly devoted and fruitful life.

THE POET PREACHER.

To the generation of Lowland Scotchmen that is fast passing away "Robertson of Irvine" was a name to conjure with for all that is bright, inspiring, and ennobling in platform and pulpit speech. And yet, child of genius though he was, his fame and the scope of his public service were more restricted than those of many men of fewer and lesser gifts. This was so partly because the light that burned so brightly in heart and soul tenanted a somewhat frail vessel of clay, and partly because he preferred to abide where he was first called to exercise the sacred ministry entrusted to him. Fortunately for those who survive him, there lived not far off a newspaper "chiel," of a kindred spirit, who recognised his worth and his unique talents, and caused many notes to be taken of his sermons and lectures. Mr. Guthrie, editor of the Ardrossan Herald, has given in this volume a picture of the man at once faithful and artistic. Coming of a Puritan stock, Mr. Robertson's preaching combined sound doctrine with all the warmth and colour that came from a rich and playful fancy, and an almost electric style of rhetoric. One of his early hearers tells in these pages how, as a preacher, he seemed to speak from immediate inspiration, so much were his sermons "quickened with fire from heaven." As a lecturer he won great fame, and all his utterances were so lit up with beauties of idea and of expression that his prose was far more poetic in conception and in style than much that goes by the name of poetry. The specimens given by the biographer of speech and sermon and lecture would be hard to surpass in their sustained elevation of thought and felicities of diction. Every man after his own order, and as a prophet of the beautiful in nature, in grace, and in the entire realm of God's dealings with mankind, Robertson of Irvine had no peer among the preachers of his time. This volume, which also contains an excellent photographic reproduction of the spirituelle countenance of the man, will help to extend the influence of a ministry too uncommon in this sombre, serious, work-a-day world.

THE AUTHOR OF UNCLE TOM'S CABIN.

Among all the books brought to their birth in some great crisis in human history, and written with a high purpose, probably none has achieved a more rapid and genuine success, than Mrs. Beecher Stowe's immortal story of American slavery, "Uncle Tom's Cabin." It did its work, but its fame will abide and its spirit will continue to inspire those elect souls who, possessed by a "noble rage," feel constrained to testify against the crying injustices and abuses of their generation. Mrs. Stowe is yet with us, but her earthly tabernacle is said to be nearing the point of its dissolution. At such a time, it is eminently fitting that a substantial and sympathetic record of her splendid life-work should be given to the public; and such a record we have in the handsome volume before us. The main interest of the book, of course, circles around the production of her chef d'œuvre—what inspired it, how it was written, what sort of reception it got from friend or foe, and the issues that came out of its publication. At the same time, enough is said as to the parentage, training, personal career, and other literary productions of this gifted woman, to constitute it an intensely interesting biography. The narrative has been written with the full knowledge and consent of Mrs. Stowe and her relatives, so that it bears the stamp of authority, and may be regarded as embodying a faithful picture of a most stirring episode in the life of a great nation. The perusal of this veritable history, presented in very elegant literary dress, ought to send many a reader back to "Uncle Tom" itself, there to learn how a sanctified pen can help to destroy a gigantic and deeply-rooted evil. Would that God might raise up some heroic and fearless soul, to do for the slaves of the drink what Harriet Beecher Stowe was enabled to do for the victims of demoniac greed and inhumanity in the United States of North America. Then the time would surely be well-nigh ripe for the throttling of the alcoholic fiend, and another Lincoln would appear with moral force and statesmanship enough to sign the death warrant of a system as foul and soul-blighting as any that was ever spawned in hell and sent out to poison the flowing tide of human life.

Morning Calls in Whitechapel.

WHITECHAPEL is one of the least aristocratic districts in London. The normal poverty of the great majority of its inhabitants has been intensified by the recent commercial crisis. Hideous tragedies have specially distinguished it during the past twelve or eighteen months. Chronic poverty, and frequently recurring crimes of the most cruel and revolting character, are anything but inviting subjects; nor are the accompaniments of poverty very savoury; while scenes of crime have fascination only for the vicious.

"How the poor live" is still one of the unolved mysteries of modern London, and the poverty of the people dwelling in densely popuated districts is an undefined and unknown quantity. Happily there are not a few earnest, faithful Christian workers who make it the business of their lives to go in and out among the poor, constantly seeking to lighten their burdens, and to diffuse sunshine into hearts beclouded by carking care. How greatly such workers are cheered by any manifestation of interest in their work on the part of those who are in other ways and in other spheres labouring for their Master, they alone can tell.

Very warmly did Rev. B. Sackett respond to a proposal that one or two friends should, under his guidance, visit a few homes in the neighbourhood of the church of which he is pastor, and where for ten years he has faithfully laboured to promote the social, moral, and spiritual wellbeing of the people; encouraged and supported by the generous sympathy and financial aid of the London Congregational Union in his religious work and numerous philanthropic agencies.

THE FIRST CALL.

The first of our morning calls was on a poor woman, whose very name was suggestive of deepest poverty, and whose surroundings were "confirmation strong" of the constant struggle in which she is engaged. A few questions elicited a painfully familiar story.

"Yes, it is a hard struggle; my husband has been laid aside by illness for the last three weeks, unable to earn a penny. I have six children, the eldest thirteen years old, and the youngest nine months; four of them go to school, but for the last six months I haven't been able to pay any fees, although it's only a penny school. What can I do with a sick husband and six young children?"

"How much do you earn at this work?" (trouser finishing).

"Some I get 3d. a pair for, and some 4½d."

"How many pairs can you do in a day?"

"Sometimes six, and sometimes four, according to the work. I begin at nine o'clock, as soon as I've got the children off to school, and I go on till twelve o'clock at night. If I could get constant work, it would be about eighteenpence a day."

Eighteen pence a day of fifteen hours! Little more than a penny an hour "if I could get constant work!" We ask, Why should such things be? Are they the necessary concomitants of high civilisation and commercial prosperity? Must women work "from weary chime to chime" for a penny an hour, in order that they and their loved ones may not utterly fall?

THE SECOND CALL.

What a delightful contrast was afforded by our next call! Up, up, up, to the topmost storey of a block of model dwellings; and there, in a well-lighted, bright, cheerful room, we had "a little bit of heaven," which sent a lot of sunshine into our hearts. A happy-faced lassie, the grand-daughter of the occupant, gave us a winsome welcome. The tidiness of the room and the scrupulous cleanliness of the furniture were indications of a loving ministry. In a moment or two we were introduced to a widow of four-score years and nine, who was resting awhile in a cosy, comfortable bed, from which, through a large skylight, she could watch the passing clouds, and, beyond the clouds, could see, in faith, her heavenly home. The bright smile of the old lady, as she greeted her minister, showed him to be a specially welcome visitor. Nor was she slow to tell of the blessing he had been to her, and how, by his ministry, she had been led "onward and upward."

Reverently we listened to the aged Christian's testimony. What a picture was presented in that calm, happy face, the silvery white hair peeping out from its snowy covering, the bright, clear eyes looking into the far-away world, and all the surroundings that spoke of peace. Ah! yes, and what a volume of Christian evidence was there in the words that came from her lips: "I know in whom I have believed—and I can trust Him." As we knelt together at that bedside, and talked to our Father, we felt that heaven was all about us, and that we had entered into the invisible.

We had a little insight into the old lady's life and character in a few words from the good minister. "It was not always as you have seen it to-day. Ten years ago the dear old lady was very different. Everybody, and specially little children seemed to avoid her, she was so cross and cantankerous. Very quietly, but in a most marked manner, the grace of God wrought a wonderful change, and now everybody who knows her loves her." And as the heart of the minister brightened at the thought of what God had done, he told us of a little incident, which we at once jotted down in our note-book of "evidences."

"A few months ago," said Mr. Sackett, "I was somewhat troubled about a small debt, in connection with our church fund. I mentioned the matter to my poor people, in the hope that they might be able to do a little towards it. One evening, as I was sitting in my vestry this old lady came in and handed me a small parcel, which I at once opened. There were so many coverings that it was some time before I got to the inside, but at last I found a treasure. There right before me lay eight half-sovereigns. I was utterly astounded, and concluded that there was some mistake. I took an early opportunity of seeing our good friend, and asked her if she knew what was in the packet.

"Oh, yes; it's all right," she said. "I wanted you to have it to help pay off the debt."

"But can you afford to give so much?" I said.

"Don't you trouble about that," she answered; "God knows all about it."

Not content with her own personal gift, in the course of a day or two the old lady took a journey of several miles, as a sort of collecting tour, and in that way was able to add nearly two pounds more to the fund. No wonder that the enthusiasm of other people was stirred up, and that the whole debt was quickly cleared. "Two or three times," said our guide, "I have asked the dear old soul to tell me where her gold mine is, but she declines on the ground that, if she did, I should very soon be found working it." The old lady has a bit of fun in her constitution.

THE THIRD CALL.

On the ground floor of the same building, we had a pleasing illustration of the help-one-another principle, in the way in which two aged people supplied each other's special needs. Reciprocity is a capital thing, "when it isn't all on one side." The old woman upon whom we called was evidently delighted to see her pastor, and ready to tell of her little pleasures.

"You see, sir, I am not quite so strong as I used to be, and old Mr. ——, who lives next door, doesn't understand much about house matters, so while I tidy up his things, and make his room look pleasant, he comes and turns my mangle, and does the work that I find difficult."

THE FOURTH CALL.

Our next visit was to a poor blind woman, whom we found in a small room about seven feet square. Five years ago she entirely lost her sight, but this loss of her natural seeing power seems to have been a turning-point in her history, for she has been a happier woman ever since. It is somewhat significant that a children's service connected with the place of worship of which our guide is pastor was the special means of leading her to decision for Christ. It was pleasingly pathetic to hear her say, "I can just see the sun"; meaning by that, that she was conscious of the difference between the darkness of night and the brightness of noonday. But it was especially delightful to hear the glowing terms in which she spoke of her pastor. "Yes," said she, "although I am now blind, I thank God that I am not deaf; I heard his voice, and he led me to the Saviour"; the pronoun referring to the minister whose influence upon her life had evidently been very great.

THE FIFTH CALL.

Again we proceeded on our round, and were soon treading a narrow, rickety staircase which led to a small cellar not more than six feet square. Here we found a poor widow who had not left her underground dwelling for more than four years. A pair of crutches standing in one corner indicated the means by which she was able to move about in the small space in which her lot was cast. Here again, we had evidence of what the grace of God can do. Some few years ago, a large quantity of flowers was sent to our guide for distribution among his people. He took a large bunch to this apparently forgotten old lady. An opportunity seemed to present itself for putting an earnest question—"Do you know anything about the Lord Jesus?"

The sense of utter loneliness which was conveyed in the answer can only be imagined.

"He has forgotten all about me; nobody cares for me now."

"It was very touching," said our guide, "and we have all tried to be very kind to her ever since, and her heart has responded to the kindness."

As we talked with this poor lonely widow, it was evident that in her deep poverty she realised a peace to which many of the rich ones of earth are strangers.

"Yes, I am very poor; but I do know the Lord Jesus."

It seemed to savour of the ludicrous as the old lady immediately added, "Yes, and my cat sticks to me." One could understand how such a companion would be appreciated by one unable to leave the four walls of her very contracted dwelling-place.

"How do you manage to get a living?" we asked.

"By hemming the bottoms of trousers, such as you see I am doing now; for this I get a farthing a pair."

"And how many pairs do you do a day?"

"Just now I can't get much, not more sometimes than four pairs a day—and that doesn't bring in very much."

"Supposing you could get all the work you are able to do, how much money would it bring in?"

"I really don't know; if I could get fifteenpence a day I should be a lady, but just now I don't get much more than about ninepence a week."

"And how much do you pay for rent?"

"Well, I am supposed to pay a shilling a week, but I can't pay that out of ninepence."

"And I suppose you don't have roast turkey, or provisions of that kind, every day?"

"Dear me, no! but I get a little tea and bread now and again. It doesn't take very much to keep me; I am a good deal like my old bedstead—somewhat broken-down."

"Now, if you had your choice, what would you like for dinner to-day?"

"If I could have an egg, I should like it, or a little milk; but, better than that, I should enjoy a little bit of fish."

Needless to say, the old lady's special fancy was soon provided for. We suggested sending the cat for the fish, but to that the old lady would not assent. "But," she added, "the cat will have a good share of it—she sticks to me."

A promise of an additional sixpence per week to her income seemed almost too much for this care-wrinkled cripple, and it needed a further assurance that she was really to be the possessor of this extra provision, and that every week it would be sent to her through her minister. A small sum for immediate necessities changed the anxious care of a few minutes before into gladness and rejoicing of heart.

THE SIXTH CALL.

From the cellar of this aged cripple we proceeded to a garret in a house in a neighbouring street, and had further evidence of the struggle for existence which is experienced by so many in the district. In this miserable garret a widowed mother and four children find their home. For nine years the widowed mother has been striving, day after day, to keep her little bit of home together, and to provide for her children. While she is at work, the eldest daughter, twelve years of age, is trying to add to the family income by acting as a little mother to a neighbour's child, for which service she receives twopence a day. The income from all sources does not exceed six shillings a week, and out of this sum 2s. 6d. has to be paid for rent. So we went on making which added to our sadness of heart, and intensified the question which occupied our minds in the early part of the morning: "Why should such things be?" No satisfactory answer came to our question; yet, in the contemplation of the morning's experience, there came a ray of brightness in the thought that this wretchedly poor neighbourhood

Holds hearts and heroes, though in rhetoric dumb,
In raiment out of fashion.

It was a relief to sit for a few minutes in the little sanctuary where our worthy guide carries on numerous ministries of blessing day after day. It was pleasing to hear him gratefully acknowledge the help which had been rendered to him in connection with his labours; how, in addition to the aid of the London Congregational Union, in relation to the regular work of the ministry, help from the Relief Fund had been liberally given to enable him to minister to the temporal necessities of the poor among whom he labours. This district is only one of the many in which similar work is carried on. For several winters past the London Congregational Union has provided over 10,000 meals weekly for the poor children in the Metropolis. The garments distributed during the last five or six years are reckoned by hundreds of thousands, and in numerous other ways this Society is showing the practical side of Christianity. Further information respecting the Outcast London work of the Union may readily be obtained by communicating with Rev. Andrew Mearns, at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C., and those who are disposed to render financial help may find an outlet for their gifts through the same channel. Septimus Scrivener.

PHILIPPOPOLIS.—We are much encouraged in regard to the prospects of Mrs. Mumford's Mission School. It is evidently winning its way among the better class of citizens, who are of the Greek faith, and have not hitherto patronised a Protestant school. They now confess that in this school their daughters have greater advantages, as well as a more thorough training, than they can receive elsewhere. We have completed a much-needed two-storey cottage, which will add to the comfort and facilities of the school. In doing this, we were of course obliged to incur additional expense. (Mrs.) Mary E. For the Young.

THE HOLLY AND IVY:

WHAT THEY SAW AND HEARD ONE CHRISTMAS EVE

By Eva Travers Evered Poole.

It was a cold, cold Christmas—an old-fashioned Christmas people called it. Winter had set in early, and a good deal of snow had already fallen. Into a long, low room, filled with old portraits and older carvings, a great heap of holly and ivy had been carried to make it bright for Christmas time, and the servants had wreathed the purple and scarlet berries alternately into festoons and garlands. Each quaintly-shaped, high-backed chair standing against the wall had a holly branch, rich with red berries, stiffly fastened into it, and clearly reflected in its bright surface of polished mahogany. Just now the room was so still that several little mice played about on the floor quite unconcernedly, chasing one another in and out of the dark corners as the flickering firelight revealed their hiding-places now and again.

There was a splendid Yule log burning in the wide, open fireplace. In the hush and silence an Ivy Branch whispered softly to its neighbouring Holly—

"Why are we here?"

"Why?" crossly replied the Holly. "You may well ask the question; just to please other people's fancies. We are brought here to be festooned and twisted round these old carvings and pictures and to crown these silver sconces. It is a shame, say I, to tear you from your native walls and me from my plantation, just to decorate a room for a day or two for men's pleasure, then to wither and be ignominiously burnt," and the Holly, being of a proud nature, held its head up stiffly and rustled its shiny leaves in a very dissatisfied fashion.

The Ivy Branch, out of sympathy, shook its purple berries and waved its dark-green leaves, but very gently, lest it should frighten the little mice who were playing so prettily on the floor. Being of more clinging disposition, it did not resent its fate so bitterly as its friend, the Holly, and was glad to find it could be of use, if only for a very little while.

"We cannot do much to make the world brighter and happier," it replied, "and yet God made us for that purpose; perhaps we are fulfilling his wishes, although our branches are bruised and broken, and our leaves are cruelly torn. Let us bear our lot patiently."

"Ugh!" grumbled the Holly, not relishing this humble view of things.

Presently, light footsteps in the passage startled the little mice, and made their hearts stand still for fear. Whisk! went their tails: scurry! went their tiny feet, and they were out of harm's way in a twinkling. The door opened, and little Clare, the Squire's only daughter, ran in, followed by the solemn old butler, bearing a lighted lamp, which he placed on the table, and withdrew.

The child stood by the wide, old-fashioned fireplace, a pretty picture in her quaintly made cashmere dress, embroidered with gold; her long straight hair falling in sunny streaks upon her shoulders. Her hands were clasped together, and her big, brown eyes, gazed wistfully into the glowing heart of the great log, seeing, yet seeing not.

Presently her lips quivered, her eyes filled, and, with the low cry: "Oh! I wish I could see mamma! Why won't they let me see mamma?" she sank down on the soft, white rug, and sobbed bitterly.

The Holly and the Ivy saw and heard, and forgot their own troubles in sympathy for the child's sorrow.

The sound of someone entering the room startled her, and she checked her weeping. It was her father, white-haired and stately, still upright in spite of age. He took his usual seat in the big arm-chair, and warmed his hands at the blaze. It seemed strange that the old man and the young child should be father and daughter. She so daintily fair and childish, like a sweet spring flower; he with the snows of seventy winters on his head. He loved his child, but little Clare had passionately resented her mother's illness and isolation; for no excitement was permitted, and the child's lonely heart had longed in vain lately for her mother's gentle presence and sweet, tender words. The habit had been formed between mother and child of a quiet talk before bedtime, when Clare, cradled in her mother's arms, told out her wrong-doings and troubles, and always went to bed feeling comforted and forgiven.

I think this was what Clare missed most of all; for, kind though everyone was to the little maiden, nobody, of course, could be just like mother!

And to-morrow was Christmas Day. Little Clare had been wilful and naughty all the afternoon. Nurse had looked grave, and said how much her mother would grieve if she knew of her little girl's waywardness. Clare half fancied mother did know. Perhaps someone had told her, and not told her, too, how penitent and heavy-hearted her little daughter was, and how sorely she longed for a word of forgiveness from her mother's lips.

How should she endure till to-morrow feeling sad and sorrowful as now?

Clare took her seat on her father's knee. He was resting in the carved armchair, his eyes fixed upon the fire, gazing into the heart of the Yule log. He laid one hand caressingly on his little daughter's head, stroking it in absent fashion. I think he was listening to the wind outside, singing its Christmas carol to the old ivy-covered walls. As Clare nestled her fair head above her father's heart, and ventured, a little timidly—

"Father, couldn't I see mamma?"

The Squire roused himself from his reverie, and made answer—

"Eh? what? Of course not! She's getting better, they say, and must be kept very quiet. Play with your toys, little lassie, and have patience."

Then, putting her down from his knee, he began pacing the room, his hands behind him, his head stooped forward a little. There was a proud flash in his eyes. Was he thinking of the little son upstairs, and the stately inheritance that was to be his?

Clare sighed, and, finding herself forgotten, slipped quietly away—away! up the broad, oaken staircase, richly carpeted, down the red corridor, with its dim light and dark shadows, to crouch like a frightened fawn on the soft rug outside her mother's door—to look like the little piteous, lonely child she was—to sob quietly to herself, until her strands of sunny hair were all wet with tears, and clung round her face like spray-wet seaweed.

"Mamma, mamma! I want to see you."

No answer came but the wind's sorrowful song. "What was that?" The door noiselessly opened, startling the child, and the kindly face of Nurse Taylor was looking down upon her.

Nurse had ruddy cheeks, hair that was not white, but silver-coloured, softly folded back under her cap, and eyes motherly in their gentle expression.

The child sprang up with the exclamation.

"Can I see mamma?"

But Nurse Taylor laid her finger on her lips—

"No, dear, she is very tired after a long wakeful afternoon, it would only excite her to see you, especially with those swollen eyes and tear-stained cheeks," and she patted the little imploring face uplifted to hers. The sad look of resignation that crept into the child's big, brown eyes touched Nurse Taylor; it spoke of something more than a child's usual craving for the much-missed mother-sympathy, and prompted her to inquire—

"Is it something very particular, my dear? Can I take any message for you?"

A sudden pathetic gleam of hope dawned in the child's face, and, saying, quickly, "Wait a minute, Nursie dear—just a minute—I've thought of something," she swiftly darted away in the direction of her own room. When she re-appeared, she carried a slate in her hand, and, with a half-timid look, she placed it in Nurse Taylor's hands, standing before her like a little condemned culprit.

"Nurse says I've been very naughty and wilful to-day, and I'm VERY sorry, and it's Christmas Eve. I have never gone to bed yet without mamma's kiss, and asking her pardon for everything wrong; and because I can't tell her how sorry I am, and hear her forgive me, I am so miserable that I think I shall die!" and she pressed her little hands upon her heart, as her tears began to fall.

"Nurse Taylor, would you—could you take that slate into mamma, and let her read it? I've written down what I've done and how sorry I am, and, oh! I've wetted my little sponge"—holding it up eagerly—"and if it wouldn't hurt her very much, would you ask her just to blot it out HERSELF? That'll let me know she forgives me, and will make me so happy, and everything so different. Do you think you could POSSIBLY do it for me, please?" and the child pleaded as for very life, her eyes growing eloquently large, and standing on tip-toe with eagerness."

"Poor little dear!" said kind Nurse Taylor, soothingly, "I think I can manage that for you——"

"Just put the slate outside the door, Nursie; I shall know, if I see it all blotted out, that mamma forgives me everything. I shall go to bed so happy, so happy!"

Nurse Taylor opened the sick-room door, and closed it very gently. The minutes that elapsed seemed hours to little expectant Clare, who stood, eyes on ground, until once more a noiseless turning of the handle came, and looking up, she saw Nurse Taylor smiling down at her, and holding out a slate all clean and fresh—the record of her day's naughtiness blotted completely out!

It was curious to see the child's quiet joy. She took the wet slate and pressed it to her lips, and looked the grateful thanks she did not speak. "Is it all right?" asked Nurse, kindly.

"Oh, yes, all blotted out, all forgiven!" and the child's eloquent face told far more than her simple words.

With a low "good-night," she sprang away down the stairs two at a time, danced down the passage and into the dining-hall, once again empty. The Holly and Ivy watched her with deep interest.

Could this shining-eyed, glad-faced fairy, rippling all over with joyous smiles, be the sad-faced little creature that had sobbed her heart out before them only an hour ago. Clare answered their question by skipping from one picture to another, looking up at them, and talking to them somewhat like this—

"Dear pretty berries and shining leaves, I love you. I love everything and everybody, because I'm so happy. It's all rubbed out, it's all forgiven! Mamma knows it, and loves me still. Oh, I am so happy, I could die!" And the old expression was on her pretty lips.

Then the Holly and the Ivy guessed her secret, and they knew that mother-love and mother-pardon had shed light upon her darkness and made the child's heart glad and free.

Young reader, in what spirit are you meeting Christmas Day? Is there any cloud lying upon your heart, darkening and saddening all your joy? Is there unforgiven sin shadowing all your happiness? Ah! I know how you feel. I know how you long for sweet words of pardon from your heavenly Father's lips; for the "blotting out" of all your trangressions and sins, for some token of forgiveness from Himself.

What if I tell you to-day that He has given this token to every penitent soul who, standing without the gate of heaven, pleads through Jesus to be forgiven! The Lord Jesus is waiting to hear your story, and to plead your cause. He is lovingly anxious to have your sins blotted out.

I think you can trust Him, can you not? One faith-look up into his kind face is enough to enable you to put heart-confidence in Him. It seems to me that the Lord Jesus is holding out, to one and all who truly repent of sin, God's token of pardon, the message:—

"I, even I, have blotted out thy transgressions as a thick cloud, and as a cloud thy sins" (Isa. xliii. 25).

"Having forgiven you all trespasses" (Col. ii. 13). "Blotting out the handwriting that was against us" (Col. ii. 14).

Yes, there's a "clean slate." The hand of God Himself has blotted out the record, and now we, repenting and confessing, are forgiven and glad.

Looking back into the old year just passing away, and with its dark record of sin and shame, no wonder our hearts are heavy and sad. But when the hand of God blots out the dark record with the cleansing blood of his dear Son, the load lifts off our heart, and we do not fear the past, present, or future. It is a fair, clean sheet.

Are you sharing Clare's joy to-day, and is it all blotted out?

TOWER HAMLETS Y.M.C.A.

At the anniversary of the Tower Hamlets' Young Men's Christian Association, on November 26, Mr. Russell gave a cheering report. This Institution (only one of many under Mr. Charrington's fostering care) is distinctly and exclusively artisan. Its members, now numbering 234 (57 having been added during the year), are artisans, labouring to bring other artisans to the Saviour. This they do by preaching in the open air in Victoria Park, Mile-end Waste, and other adjacent places; while their indoor meetings are not confined to the Tower Hamlets, but extend to many parts of London and the suburbs. Their "straight talks" on Sunday afternoons are sometimes attended by 300 men. One distinctive feature is that all its members must be total abstainers from intoxicating drinks, and in their temperance meetings they had taken ninety-two new pledges this year. All these services are rendered without fee or reward; but the work has become so great that a general paid secretary has just been appointed, whose salary was pleaded for on this festive occasion.

What a fine outburst of song there was from hundreds of voices when the organ pealed forth, accompanied by cornet and violin! The effect of this musical and vocal band in a place like Victoria Park must be perfectly irresistible.

We cannot stop to specify the many good things said by Mr. Samuel Gurney Sheppard (the chairman), Mr. Edwin Kerwin, Mr. J. Fallaize, Mr. G. Neighbour (of Chester), Mr. E. J. Kennedy (of Exeter Hall), and others. There was a good attendance, a hearty feeling, and good cheer for these youthful workers, to whom all must bid God-speed.

LONDON MEDICAL STUDENTS.

MANY of our readers have, during the past few months, been praying for the mission to London Medical Students, at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate-street. Now it has come and gone, but its results remain.

Early in November, an invitation letter, bearing the signature of nineteen members of the staffs of the various London hospitals, was sent by post to the majority of the students in the different hospitals, over 2500 being sent out. This was followed by cards of invitation, given by student to student, and by bills placed in prominent positions in the hospital buildings.

On the first night of the mission, tea and coffee were provided in the "Hamilton" room of the Great Eastern Hotel, opposite Devonshire House. The men began to come in by twos and threes, and by a quarter to eight over sixty had assembled, and were seated in groups around the tables. A little before eight an adjournment to Devonshire House took place, and the hall was further filled by students who came later.

A stirring address was given by Mr. H. G. Guinness, M.R.C.S., on the words of Paul, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ." The power of the Spirit was deeply felt throughout the evening. On the second night over ninety men gathered in the hall after tea, and the subject of the address was most appropriate—"The Great Physician"; again signs of blessing followed.

On Wednesday an earnest and most helpful address on sin and its inevitable concequences was given. God's power was seen in a special manner; several men professed definitely to receive the salvation wrought for them by Christ. The fourth night of the mission saw an increased number of men, considerably over one hundred being present. Some of the reasons why men are not saved were dealt with, and God again worked in many hearts. On Friday the numbers were even greater. After continuing the same subject, Mr. Guinness earnestly pleaded with the men, and over a dozen desired prayer that they might find the way of life.

On the last night the keeping power of the Lord Jesus was brought forward, and we are sure many students were enabled to grasp the fact of this as they had never done before. The meeting closed with praise to God for his goodness, and with prayer that this first mission to London medical students might only be the beginning of a series of such efforts to win many in the London hospitals to serve Christ. We feel sure that all who have been praying to God for his blessing upon these services will continue to remember at the throne of grace the medical students of our great Metropolitan schools, and especially those who found their Saviour during the evenings of the past week.

The Secretary of the Medical Prayer Union (Mr. W. McAdam Eccles, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London, E.C.) would be pleased to hear from friends of any student in whom they may be interested, or happy to give any particulars of the work among the men in the London hospitals.

LONDON CITY MISSION.—A number of books describing the various phases of the work of this Mission have been written from time to time by its devoted friend, Mr. J. M. Weylland. The Mission is just now offering special terms to purchasers of a dozen or more of these interesting works, which, we may say, are well suited for prizes or presentation volumes. Our young Christians ought to be made acquainted with the history and operations of this most invaluable agency, and there is no better way of accomplishing that than by giving them copies of Mr. Weylland's graphic and sympathetic recitals. Circulars with list of books and terms can be had from the Secretary, London City Mission, 3, Bridewell-place, London, E.C.

ISABELLA MACPHERSON:

The Story of a Devoted Life.

CHAPTER VI.—PIONEERING.

WORK for God in the slums is the hardest work. Its cross is heavy, its discipline severe. It needs the loftiest courage; the most heroic endurance; a faith that never falters; a love that never tires. Put no hand to it without a purpose as pure as the heavens; take no step in it save in the clear footprints of the Master. If a man wants to know his true Christian stature, let him go down to the slums and stand up there for God. If one would discover how far short he comes of perfection, let him become a scavenger in those gutters of sin.

Would you find out how much you can love your enemies and bless them that curse you? An infallible test awaits you in the malignity and brutality of our city hells. Would you exercise yourself in the purest spirituality and the holiest walk? Then in God's name enter the lists against all the disorder and dirt, the drink and devilry, of those noisome dens. If you would have the fullest understanding of Christ's mission into a world of sinners, sell yourself, and die daily for the squalid children of vice and infamy. If you would taste the most Christ-like joys, if you would achieve the noblest triumphs, and win the richest rewards, then go down to that sea of misery, drink of its bitterest woes, and be the comrade of Him who was the Man of Sorrows. Such is work in the slums. Let me here give a few illustrative incidents from the experience of Isabella Macpherson.

THE GALVANIC BATTERY MAN.

One evening she enters a room where a man with a galvanic battery is administering a shock to another man suffering from rheumatism in his feet. The battery man is proud of his galvanic wisdom, and pours the healing influence upon the bare feet of the sufferer. Our visitor politely offers the scientist a tract, and invites him to the meeting. He rudely refuses the tract, and declines the invitation: he believes in nothing of that kind.

"Do you believe in God?" she asks. "No."

"Or in a hereafter?" "No."

"Have you not a soul?" "No; I believe that when a man dies, there is an end of him."

"Then, you are just a beast." "A beast! how dare you say so?" Drawing himself up proudly, with his hand on his battery, he added, "I am a man."

"But you said you have no soul, and that when you die you perish like a brute; I am only going by your own account of yourself."

The battery man grew pale, and raged furiously, whilst our visitor spoke of death, judgment, and eternity. The rheumatic patient seemed to listen as for life: above the rheumatic pains, above the galvanic shock, rose the question of the soul. That night, despite his lameness, he appeared at the meeting, and, in conversation, cleared himself of all sympathy with the infidelity of the galvanic battery man. He had received a shock from the battery of the visitor, and was resolved, whatever might become of his rheumatic limbs, not to lose his soul.

A HEARTLESS FATHER.

One Lord's Day she found herself in the house of a well-dressed man, who was reading a newspaper, his wife and seven pretty children sitting around him. Her gentle words were met with scorn. He had no religion, no God, and he wanted none. Appealing to his parental affection she said, "But what about these beautiful children? Will you not let them learn about the Saviour?" Usually the worst of parents desire their children to be better than themselves. In this instance it was not so: the heartless father was resolved his children should never learn religion. "At least," said Isabella, "you will let me pray for the dear little ones?" Dropping on her knees, she began to pray for a blessing on the house and family. Instantly the man sprang to his feet, and bending over her, broke out into roaring and howling, till at length, her voice being drowned, she was compelled to desist. As she went out and closed the door behind her, the man continued to yell in sounds such as she, familiar as she was with noises of every kind, declared were almost fiendish. He had won a melancholy victory: he had succeeded in preventing his children from hearing the voice of prayer.

A TERRIBLE BLASPHEMER.

In another house she found a burly working man with three stout sons. Neither he nor they would listen to her. All her kind words were met with terrible blasphemy. The language of this man was too shocking to be quoted in any form. He swore in a manner of his own, cursed God and the visitor, and seemed as if he might die in the paroxysms of his fury. She waited patiently, as was her wont, in the hope that the storm would pass, and then in the succeeding calm her opportunity would come. She waited in vain. The tempest of profanity waxed worse and worse. At last she stretched out her hand in a commanding attitude, and, with a look that for a moment overawed this bad man and his sons, she secured silence.

"I have come here to deliver a message from God," she said, "and in his name I will deliver it. You have blasphemed that holy name; you are trampling under foot his holy law; and you are deliberately rejecting his offered mercy. In a little while that God whom you are reviling will take the breath from you and your sons; your faces will be white in death; and your naked souls will appear at the judgment seat; and what will you say when, for your blasphemy and wickedness, the sentence goes forth against you? Oh, will you not listen to the voice of the merciful God, and turn to Him while——"

Here the storm of cursing and blasphemy burst out in fresh and more terrible fierceness. Aided by his like-minded sons, the man rose and with violent hands thrust her out. The elder who accompanied her was overwhelmed with sorrow. "To see that noble woman so shamefully treated went to my heart," says he. "I felt a lump in my throat; and when we were hurled outside and the door bolted behind us, I looked up into her face and said something, but the only answer I got was a heavy sigh, and it was ten minutes before either of us broke the silence."

Down in a dingy cellar, scarcely penetrated by the light of day, she finds a family in abject poverty. Two or three rude sticks in the name of furniture; bed with little else than the boards to lay on; no fire; no food; sheer starvation—such is their condition. Although they are without God, the trouble is not drink, not vice of any kind: it is want of work. The children are ragged and wan; the mother bloodless and sad; the father a skeleton gaunt and pale—and no wonder, when for whole days he tastes nothing but a drink of water. Oh, the tears of that mother; the cries of those famishing children; the silent agony of that despairing father! But a little way off men are rolling in wealth and living in luxury, spending in a single night's feasting more than would supply the wants of that family for a whole year.

GERMANY.—A temperance society has been formed at Berlin under the patronage of members of the Imperial family and the city aristocracy. Members are described as "Knights of the Blue Cross." The president is Colonel Von Knobelsdorf.

"THE SOUDAN."

BY MRS. GEO. C. NEEDHAM.

Write the Soudan on my heart!
Grave it, Lord, with graver's art
May the shadows of that land,
Drawn by Truth's unerring hand,
Picture of majestic gloom,
Stir my soul, till I assume
Afric's wide and dark domain,
As my tillage to maintain.

Write the Soudan on my heart!
Henceforth this my chosen part,
Toiling, her great cause to plead,
Grandly dying, be there need;
Mastered by delight supreme,
If I may but see the gleam
Of the Gospel's dawning light,
Break across her awful night.

Write the Soudan on my heart!
For the honour strength impart;
Large is this request I ask,
Gird me for the solemn task;
Would his saints their Saviour bring Back to earth to rule as King?
Only shall we see his face,
When the Soudan tastes his grace.

THE LIVERPOOL CONVENTION.

MANY Christian people in Lancashire are getting to anticipate the recurrence of these meetings, which owe so much to the energy of Mrs. Stephen Menzies, and are held in the Gordon Hall. The series of meetings held last week have attracted considerable audiences, and have been accompanied by very deep and marked impressions of Divine power and blessing.

The topics suggested for consideration were the Failures, Possibilities, and Resolutions of the Spiritual Life; and were treated with much earnestness of purpose and force of appeal. The principal speakers were Rev. W. S. Standen, who gave the morning Bible-readings, and Revs. W. E. Burroughes, of Kingstown, Gelson Gregson, W. J. Mayers, who also led the singing and sang suitable solos, and F. B. Meyer. Mr. Wilson presided at several of the meetings, whilst at others the chair was occupied by local clergymen. The attendance of clergymen and ministers of all denominations was a marked feature in the audiences. And the reverent attention, large after-meetings, hearty responses to the deep truths unfolded were very remarkable. The prevailing note of the Conference was the necessity of Christian people submitting to the daily death of self, if they would rise to the life of Christ.

We hope to give a further report of the great closing missionary gatherings in our next.

THE BALOLO MISSION.—Dr. H. G. Guinness, Jun., writes:—We have received most encouraging news from the Upper Congo. Our brethren and sisters have reached the Lulanga River, and are now further into the interior of Africa than any missionaries have been before. They are surrounded with tens of thousands of people, who seem eager and anxious for the Gospel of Christ, and their letters are delightful to read. May the Lord prosper them greatly, together with our three brethren who leave with the new steamer for Stanley Pool on December 4.

BATH PUBLIC-HOUSE MISSION.—At a drawing-room meeting recently held on behalf of this Mission, at the house of Dr. and Mrs. Prankerd, Miss Skinner, the secretary, gave a summary of the work done during the year by the missionary, Mr. C. Smith. His visits to cabmen, bath chairmen, and public-houses have been fruitful of good, not only in hopeful conversion, but in inducing his special clients to attend the means of grace. A letter was read from one of the "chairmen" expressing the gratitude of himself and his fellows for the efforts made on their behalf.

Bishop of the Niger Territory, West Africa.

THE story of the slave boy who became a bishop has often been told. It is a chain of remarkable providences, and an instructive commentary upon the wisdom of the ways of God.

SAMUEL ADJAI CROWTHER is the Christian name of one who in early life was known simply as ADJAI, a native of the kingdom of Yoruba, West Africa. Early in 1821 a devastating war was being waged in the country, the Mohammedan Foulah tribe, swelled by a multitude of escaped slaves and men-stealers, sweeping everything before it. The flourishing town of Oshogun was taken unawares, as the women were peacefully preparing the morning meal. The [illegible] were as terrible as their trade ever could be. After the [illegible] a short struggle; the town was then fired, and the escaping inhabitants were captured, with a view to being sold to Portuguese slave traders. In one of the huts, at the critical moment, was a woman with her three young children and many others. The latter, after warning them of their danger, returned to the town, and died in the defence of the homes of his people. The woman and her children, the eldest of whom was little more than in his thirteenth year, were afterwards captured.

From a Photograph by Messrs. T. J. Fowler & Co., 11 Broadway, Bath, W.

After the usual barbarities of the slave march the town of Ishaga was reached and there the captives were offered for sale. The child was left for himself and offered therefore as the others. Little Adjai and his sister became the property of the chief; his brother, with her mother in arms, was given into other hands. This was the first time the lad had been separated from his mother, and it was a source of acute grief.

The boy was without delay bartered away for a horse, but the bargain not being satisfactory, he was sent to the slave market at Dah-dah, where, to his great delight, he met with his mother again; and for three months enjoyed comparative liberty, and the privilege of seeing his parent whenever he wished. One sad evening, however, he was bound and carried away on the march again. After some days, he was sold, and, having changed hands several times, he finally became the property of a Mohammedan woman, and travelled with her through the Popo country, on the coast frequented by the Portuguese slave dealers. Although this woman treated him kindly, Adjai was very miserable; and, in his dread of the white man, he resolved that, sooner than fall into the enemy's hands, he would take his own life. God graciously overruled an attempt Adjai made to strangle himself. The lad's courage was not equal to an act of self-destruction, although it has never failed him in the many great and good enterprises to which he has since put his hand.

Having been sold to the dealers, the youth was, with other slaves, taken across the river to Lagos, where for a time he was employed as a storekeeper. Subsequently, with 186 fellow-slaves, he was placed on board a ship for transportation to the western hemisphere. The sufferings of the cargo were such as can only be contemplated with pain. Many deaths occurred in the confinement of the ship's hold; and sea-sickness, hunger, thirst, and varied forms of inhuman treatment made the living long for their end. Two British cruisers, however, were on watch along the coast, under orders to repress the slave traffic, and, giving chase, they caught and boarded the hateful craft. The human cargo was at once transhipped to the English man-of-war, and before long the slaves learned with joy that they had been saved from the hand of the oppressors. The two vessels, full of freed slaves, made for Sierra Leone. One was, sad to say, wrecked in a storm; but the other, with Adjai on board, reached Bathurst in safety. In this region the Church Missionary Society had for some years been carrying on an excellent work.

Placed in a mission school at Freetown, Adjai made good progress in his studies. Giving heed to the word of the truth of the Gospel, he soon realised a more glorious emancipation than that from the slave's fetters. On December 11, 1825, he was baptized by Rev. J. Raban, taking the name of Samuel Crowther. After attaining gratifying proficiency as a carpenter, the young man desired to drink more deeply from the fountain of knowledge, and, being in his eighteenth year, he accompanied Mr. and Mrs. Davey on a visit to England. The stay was less than a year, but it was eminently profitable to the earnest young Christian. Meanwhile the educational movement inaugurated by the Church Missionary Society at Sierra Leone had grown in importance, and Rev. C. L. F. Haensel went out in February, 1827, to superintend the institution, which in due time developed into Fourah Bay College. The first name on the list of six native students is that of Samuel Crowther. The promoters of the work were men of strong faith, and they fully believed that the difficult question of evangelising the pestilential regions of West Africa was to be solved by God raising up in a very short time a goodly number of able and worthy native Christian evangelists and pastors. From the post of assistant teacher in the College, Mr. Crowther was promoted to other spheres, only, however, to return to Fourah Bay, where for some years he exercised a deep and wide influence.

While thus engaged Mr. Crowther took to himself a wife. In the happy days he spent in elementary studies at Bathurst he made the acquaintance of a young girl named Asano, who, like himself, had been taken from the deck of a slave ship. The acquaintance ripened into love, and, on Asano being baptized a Christian, her name was changed to Susanna. The marriage was the beginning of a long and blissful union.

In 1841 Mr. Crowther accompanied the celebrated Niger Expedition, undertaken by the British Government for the purpose of aiming a fresh and effectual blow at the slave trade, and promoting legitimate commerce. He was accompanied by Rev. J. F. Schön, an experienced Sierra Leone missionary. It was hoped by the Church Missionary Society that one result of the undertaking would be the discovery of fresh and promising openings for Gospel work. The expedition closed, however, in sorrow and disappointment, a deadly fever striking the crews, so that forty-two white men out of the 150 died in two months. One word of hope was sent to England, however, and that was that the people were ready to welcome Christian teachers. Moreover, it was proved that the liberated Africans of Sierra Leone could be employed to teach them.

Determining to devote himself to mission work among the Yoruba people, Mr. Crowther visited Britain once more, and, having prosecuted a course of study at the Islington Missionary College, he was ordained by Dr. Blomfield, then Bishop of London. Returning to Sierra Leone at the close of 1843, he threw himself heartily into active work. Three years later he rejoiced to find himself face to face with his mother, from whom he had been torn about twenty-five years before. This was in the town of Abeokuta. Describing the meeting, he wrote in his journal:—

When she saw me she trembled. She could not believe her eyes. We grasped one another, looking at each other with silence and great astonishment, big tears rolling down her emaciated cheeks. A great number of people soon came together. She trembled as she held me by the hand, and called me by the familiar names by which I well remember I used to be called by my grandmother, who has since died in slavery. We could not say much, but sat still, and cast now and then an affectionate look at each other—a look which violence and oppression had long checked—an affection which had nearly been extinguished by the long space of twenty-five years. My two sisters, who were captured with us, are both with my mother, who takes care of them and her grandchildren in a small town not far from here, called Abàkà. Thus, unsought for—after all search for me had failed—God brought us together again, and turned our sorrow into joy.

In one of the tribal wars that often devastate the country, Mr. Crowther's sisters, their husbands, and children were sold as slaves. He, however, ransomed them; and his mother, safe in Abeokuta, became the firstfruits of the Mission there. The Gospel was in truth good news to the darkened race; and after hearing in their own tongue, and from one of their brethren according to the flesh, the wonderful works of God, they joyfully exclaimed, "Ke oh sheh!"—"So let it be!" The people in large numbers threw away their idols, and turned to the living and true God.

In 1849, in reply to a memorial from the chiefs of Sagbua, expressing gratitude for the repression of the slave trade, Queen Victoria sent a gracious letter and two magnificent Bibles—one in English and the other in Arabic; while Prince Albert sent a steel corn mill.

Mr. Crowther accompanied the second and third Niger expeditions. The last was undertaken in 1857, when the Niger Mission was started. In 1864, in Canterbury Cathedral, he was consecrated first bishop of the Niger Territory. He also received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from Oxford University. His career has ever since been one of devoted labour for God and Africa. Some of those who learned of Christ from him and his black missionaries, have stood the test of martyrdom, and died trusting in their Saviour.

Large numbers of once degraded heathen, many of them cannibals, have joined the Church by outward profession, and are under instruction; and although, as is to be expected in such cases, much of this nominal Christianity is very imperfect, not a few truly saved souls are to be found in even the vilest Pagan villages.

Bishop Crowther has also travelled in the Mohammedan countries on the Upper Niger, whither Mr. Graham Wilmot Brooke is about to conduct a missionary party under the auspices of the Church Missionary Society.

Dr. Crowther has been in England several times. In fact, he is now in this country, conferring with the Church Missionary Society respecting new plans in development of his work. He has translated the Bible and several other books into various native languages, and is the author of a grammar and dictionary of the Yoruba tongue. He is greatly assisted, in his spiritual oversight, by one of his sons, Archdeacon Dandeson Coates Crowther. His mother died some years ago in the faith of Christ, and his beloved wife has also entered into rest. He is himself still labouring, in his eightieth year, an earnest, simple-hearted man, revered by heathens as well as loved by followers of Christ.

The facts here related are for the most part taken from a biography by Mr. Jesse Page (1s. 6d. S. W. Partridge & Co.). The Bishop, in a brief introductory note, humbly says:—

If through my imperfect labour the work of God has been advanced on the Niger, the praise be all ascribed to Him, and not to me. I cannot expect to labour many years more in the cause of Christ which lies so near my heart; but it is my earnest prayer that these pages may be the means of leading others to enter the harvest field of Africa, or, at any rate, to support prayerfully and generously the workers already labouring for the great Head of the Church in my native land.

Africa needs as many friends as can to-day be aroused to deliver her from internal darkness, and the evils which enemies from without do not hesitate to introduce. We trust that this brief narrative of the good Bishop's career will excite sympathy with his people and hearty support of his work. Chiefs have, in goodly numbers, embraced the Christian faith; and when they say, "We learn that the white man knows about the true God," they lay a charge upon us to exert ourselves to make known Him whom Go has sent, even Jesus Christ, the Lord o black men as well as white.

"Gather Together the Strangers."

The East London Tabernacle, on the evenin of Sunday, November 24, was well worth visit. It was the annual gathering for wome only, and the sermon was specially for ther by the well-known pastor of the church, Archi bald G. Brown. There must have been 3000 o the sisterhood present, at the lowest computa tion, for every seat in that large building wa full—steps, platform, and all available space being made use of.

The sight cannot easily be forgotten, and t those who had been busy for the previous wee or so, trying to lay hold of those who went t no place of worship, or of their unconverte fellow-sisters, there was in that mass an inte rest which must be lifelong.

Side by side with many of the respectabl and respected could be seen the poorest of th the poor—weary mothers, fallen sisters, man an absent one from the country home circle the very contrasts gave a more pathetic touch to the whole.

Some hymns were sung previous to the service, and hundreds of hearts were going up in prayer as the pastor took his usual place He was indeed "the Lord's messenger in the Lord's message," and many a heart, as we afterwards heard, was touched as he dwelt on the text, "My daughter is even now dead; but come and lay thy hand upon her, and she shall live." First of all, piecing the story together from the Gospels, he went on to show how "there is hope even for a dead girl," and, dwelling on the spiritual counterpart, gave "the sadder sight of a soul dead in trespasses and sin: perhaps all that was loving, bright, and desirable in the home, with no outward token of death as yet, but none the less dead towards Him. Then that there were others already arrayed in the garments of death—"even now dead," with all the hopelessness attached to the thought. But after this sad statement, how glorious was faith's triumph. Other hands had grasped the dead girl's hands, and could do nothing; but at the last moment the Master is called in, and Jairus pleads, "lay thy hand upon her, and she shall live." He comes in, and turns out all who contend in that chamber of death. A living Christ and a dead girl; life and death are linked together, He speaks and says, "Maid, arise," and she lives! That scene has been enacted over and over again; He is taking some by the hand still, and his voice says, "Live."

MISS STEER'S RESCUE WORK.—A sale of work is being held at Regent's-park Chapel, this week, on Thursday and Friday, from 3 p.m., in aid of Miss Steer's work.

DUNKERQUE, FRANCE.—The spiritual needs of this important seaport town (the fourth in France) are very great, and seem to be but little known in England. From eighteen to twenty thousand British sailors pass through the port in the course of the year, and, as ships are paid off here, many become the easy prey of the crimps and low public-house keepers. There is a counteracting influence through a Sailors' Home and Institute, coupled with the chaplain's visits to the ships three times a week. There is, however, an ample field for any lady workers who would come and stay at the Institute, 81, Rue Emmery. The English residents at Dunkerque are so few that there are literally no workers; nor is there means sufficient to open an institute or coffee-bar on the quay, where it is most needed. Could not someone come and do the same good work at Dunkerque that Lady Beauchamp is doing at Hâvre and Honfleur? All information given, and a hearty welcome offered to any who would work with him, by Rev. George H. Moxon, Mission to Seamen's Chaplain, Rosendaël, Dunkerque.

VIGILANCE.

"You have undertaken a very disagreeable and difficult work," wrote Mr. Samuel Smith to the secretary of the National Vigilance Association, in expressing regret at absence from its annual meeting in Exeter Hall, on Tuesday evening last week. The comparatively small attendance was a proof that many other people think the subject a somewhat disagreeable one. The Chairman, Bishop BILLING, said that, if the subject were unsavoury, all the more credit is due to those who have so felt the burden laid upon them that they have stuck to their task from a sense of duty. The Bishop was as warm as possible in his approval of the efforts that had been made for the amendment of the law, so that all incentives to sin may be removed from public view. The evil literature which is so prevalent was strongly condemned, and his Lordship hoped that the Association would be able in some way to stop its circulation. He thought, also, that the disgraceful condition of the London highways and byways ought to be matter of loud and continual protest till that patent evil is taken out of the way.

In a brief review of the work of the past year, Mr. PERCY BUNTING justified the strong step taken by the Association in prosecuting Mr. Vizetelly for his propagation of pernicious French literature. It had been objected by some that works of acknowledged literary value, and written with a good motive, ought not to be interfered with. He contended, on the other hand, that no just claim of art could be pleaded in justification of that which has an immoral tendency. The fact of these books being translations from a foreign tongue made them more mischievous than otherwise. Mr. Bunting declared that the author of those books himself approved of the suppression of English editions. The ordinary work of the Association was described as very difficult and unceasing. As the outcome of prosecutions, a large number of miscreants had been sent to jail for punishment, and, it is hoped, serious reflection. "Mr. Coote works night and day," said Mr. Bunting, "and accomplishes much good work that does not come strictly within the four corners of the Association's programme."

The publicity now afforded to the existence and work of the Association has a very salutary effect on many petty tyrants, such as lodging-house keepers who will not give up servants' boxes, and other ill-designing people. Mr. Bunting contended that the work during the year had been done very cheaply, promptly, and effectually. It was gratifying to hear from him that some of the convicted evil-doers had shown signs of penitence and given promises of amendment. There is a deficit of £200 in the ordinary balance-sheet; surely that will soon be wiped out and transferred to the other side, in view of the noble achievements of the Association.

The question of the employment of young children in theatres was touched on by Mrs. FAWCETT. They had not obtained all they hoped for, but they had gained much in the absolute prohibition of the employment of children under seven; the strict regulation of the labour of those above that age, and the appointment of official inspectors. In Scotland the licensing authority is the School Board, and they are showing due solicitude for the welfare of the children; Mrs. Fawcett wished that the corresponding power in England had been put in the hands of the Board, and not given to the magistrates. The argument advanced on economic grounds in favour of allowing children to supplement the income of poor parents was blown to the winds by the citation of a recent case showing that the remuneration of two girls of fourteen or fifteen was infinitesimal. It would appear from Mrs. Fawcett's pathetic statement that for some of the crying wrongs of the children there are as yet no real remedies. While there are many women who are not driven into vice by actual necessity, yet the industrial question has a close bearing on the moral one, and everything possible ought to be done in raising the wage of women, in multiplying the avenues of occupation, and in giving to women such political power as will enable them to influence questions bearing on their social condition. A very earnest plea followed on behalf of the women of India, and a warm, womanly, almost tearful protest was made against the horrors of child marriage in that country. Quoting recent cases, she declared, with much emotion, that she had been pained to find how such atrocities had not even caused a passing ripple in the ocean of public speech in this country. All this indifference, she declared, results from the monstrous belief that women have been created for the mere possession and use of men.

Mr. LAWRENCE GANE, Q.C., eloquently urged that all necessary legislation should be backed up and made really operative by a powerful public sentiment. As representing a country branch, Rev. S. B. BENSON, of Oxford, spoke of the value of a good and well-worked local organisation. He told something of what the Oxford branch had done, but far too much in minute detail for the patience of the meeting.

A resolution, bearing on the spread of indecent advertisement and the means of dealing with it, was moved by Rev. JOHN MCNEILL. We cannot shut our eyes, he said, to the fact that there are insidious forces in our large cities sapping our national and individual morals. The best and the worst of everything finds its way to London. Sleepless vigilance is needed here and in country places, for there is sleepless activity on the devil's side. There is much hard swearing on the part of witnesses and hard winking on the part of authorities. The subtle working of evil books and pictures on a young mind was illustrated by the citation of a case that had come under the speaker's own notice. What he saw in a shop window in a London thoroughfare the other day made him wonder how in the world it could be tolerated. In cities like Edinburgh and Glasgow such things as go on in London streets and parks and shops are not permitted; why they are passed over here because the place is bigger he could not for the life of him imagine. Let the Christian Church awake to the gravity of the situation and take adequate action. Shall one actor be able instanter to stop a burlesque that offended his dignity, and shall that which offends the common religious instincts of humanity be allowed to go on indefinitely? This indignant protest evoked the fullest approval of the meeting.

Mr. COOTE, the indefatigable secretary, put in an earnest plea for greater help. We are sure that anyone who reads the report of the Society will come to the conclusion that it ought to be very liberally supported. The office is 267, Stand, London, W.C.

Among the letters of apology read was one from Mr. Welldon, head-master of Harrow School, who said that legislation should do all it can to shield the young from overt inducements to vice. Mr. F. D. Mocatta, wrote urging better provision for the employment of women, if necessary by emigration, and the more careful moral training of young men; attention to these points would diminish the evils against which the Association contends.

JEWS IN PARIS.—The work among the Jews in Paris, carried on by Mr. L. C. Mamlock, missionary of the London Jews' Society, is progressing favourably. In the Rue St. Denis, 133 (writes Mr. Mamlock), a large building has been secured by Mr. McAll, and portioned off for evangelical work. In one part of the building the Gospel is preached to the Jews. Many conversions from among the Jews have taken place, by the simple preaching of the Gospel, and several have of late applied for regular Christian instruction, with a view of confessing Christ openly in baptism. Mr. Joseph Rabinowitz, while in Paris, addressed a large number of Jews, who listened attentively to his earnest and impressive discourse.

THE OLD THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE.

IT is now eleven years since the late Hon. Ion Keith Falconer—whose memory is very fragrant in town and University alike—joined with a number of other like minds in securing the old "Theatre Royal," at Cambridge, for the work of the King of kings.

Very dark and degraded was the district of Barnwell (in which the theatre is located) in those days, lying a little outside the town proper. But the entrance of the Gospel brought light, and those who delighted in the darkness because their deeds were evil were dispersed like bats before the shining of the light. Some, however, ventured inside the old haunt, which was now so wonderfully transformed, and their souls were called out of darkness into God's marvellous light. Since then this has been the experience of hundreds, who are now rejoicing in the forgiveness of their sins.

The eleventh anniversary was celebrated on the 20th ult., when a number of local friends, clerical and lay, were present as speakers, in addition to Rev. W. R. Mowll, Messrs. Russell Hurditch and G. E. Morgan, from London One of the most happy features of the work has always been its success in winning and maintaining the confidence and goodwill of the clergy and ministers of all denominations. On this occasion the newly-appointed vicar of the parish, Rev. J. G. Dixon (late of Birmingham), expressed in the warmest terms his sense of the value of such a work as this, which, belonging to no denomination, helps all, and especially those whose ministers stand upon its platform as the friends of the people.

Mr. Mowll was an undergraduate when the theatre was first purchased for Gospel service, and has always been one of its heartiest supporters. He can make himself at home anywhere, but he is pre-eminently so here; and many are there who were led to God through him. Mr. Morgan, too, has taken a constant interest in the work since he made its acquaintance nine years ago.

The report, read by the hard-worked honorary secretary, Mr. W. K. Vawser, showed that the entire expenditure for the year had been £130; which includes £35 for repairs, renewals, &c., and a donation of £40 to the Evangelisation Society, in recognition of the kindness of Captain Smith in sending preachers for forty-six Sabbaths during the year. Had funds allowed, this amount would have been increased, for the amount sent is felt to be disproportionate to the help rendered by the Society.

Various institutions and classes are connected with the work, which in their several spheres have proved their value. We are sorry to find that Mr. Vawser is feeling the strain of combined business and philanthropy, which has, since the commencement of the Mission, occupied all his days—and much of his nights too. The co-operation of Christian undergraduates is always welcomed; it is only to be regretted that less of this has been forthcoming of late years than in former days. There are numbers of University men, now engaged in various spheres of work, at home and abroad, who look back with gratitude to the opportunities of participating in Christian work which this theatre-mission afforded. And that is not the least valuable of the many phases of its usefulness. Mr. Vawser's address is Petty Cury, Cambridge.

MRS. REANEY'S CONVALESCENT AND HOLIDAY HOME, BLACKPOOL.—During the present year 460 patients and visitors have been received into this institution, 160 of them being partially or wholly free cases. Mrs. Reaney writes:—"During the winter months I am open to receive more guinea patients—ladies and others, who, coming alone to the seaside, are glad of the advantages of home life. Applications should be addressed to me at Cavendish House, Victoria Park, Manchester."

The Home of Industry.

As another period of time is closing, we notice with grateful hearts that the sum of £241 has been sent to us during our financial year, by the readers of THE CHRISTIAN anonymously. As each sum came, it was received from our loving Father as an answer to prayer. These gifts have enabled us to rescue and start in life several children, and have helped to employ four widows in a weekly sewing class. Whilst this has been accomplished, many a bright young worker has learnt how to cheer the aged, and teach and discipline the children who are now on their farms in the far West, while the young missionaries are now telling the wondrous story to the heathen in the far East.

THE HOME FIELD.

We returned from Canada at the close of the Dock strikes, and found the poor people much softened, open to the least kindness, and ready to listen to the Gospel. The crowds in Bird Fair have been as large as ever, causing us continually to praise God for the opportunities given of preaching the Gospel and distributing tracts. Costermongers, plate-layers, chimney-sweeps, who were savingly converted twenty years ago, under the ministry of William Caster, have been the preachers morning and evening. Our faith is much encouraged in the Lord that much seed for eternity is being sown. We ask prayer for helpers in this work from ten to one o'clock every Snnday.

A KNOTTY QUESTION.

Match-box makers were easy to deal with twenty-five years ago because they were young and very poor. But our independent factory girls are shrewd beyond their years, and get their 8s. to 10s. weekly. They are keen and critical, and in their unconverted state down-right impudent. They cost those who work among them bitter tears and much crying to God for patience. Poor girls, how can it be otherwise? They know little, and reject the One who only can lighten their life's load.

Gradually we have twisted away at this difficult knot, and the past year has given cheer and encouragement to the devoted fellow-workers. When in Canada, letters came telling of one and sometimes more who had become new creatures in Christ Jesus. The numbers of these are now increasing, and our bright parlour on the upper floor of the new Home is one of the places already sacred and loved by many a young heart who has been "born of God" there.

There they learn to read and write, there they learn to cook and make their dresses, there they sing and have their musical drill after the drudgery of the daily bread earning in the factories around us, thanks to those who have sent us a piano, pictures, &c. Our other touches of decoration are simple and inexpensive, they are but traps to catch our sunbeams, we would allure our young sisters from the hateful music halls to the joys of a pure quiet evening.

EAST-END "ROUGHS"—SO-CALLED.

Our bright lower hall is a lovely sight twice a week. Youths, whose evenings would be spent in sauntering about the streets, are to be found from 8 to 10 o'clock sitting around tables, going in for "the three R.'s." We aim at teaching them to cast up accounts and write a letter; thousands of our East-end lads, so quick and shrewd, yet miss the getting on in the City for want of these simple acquisitions. Young married men come as well, and how grateful they are! The evenings close with a hearty song and a Bible lesson, and this net has enclosed not a few whose voices are heard in our choir in Bird Fair and on Sunday evenings.

OUR MISSION NURSE.

This, also, is a much valued agency, one of the band of workers is trained specially for it. Amongst the 2000 who live around us in courts, and alleys, and model dwellings, many cuts, burns, poisoned fingers, coughs, colds, &c., need fomentations, bandages, and instant attention.

Here comes a little match-box maker; her mother is a widow, with several children. She has an abscess on the face, caused solely by poverty. Soon she smiles again, and goes on with her weary toil. Here she will get good soup. Bob has an abscess in the ear; he, too, gets to laugh, and is able to eat a plate of porridge and milk. Many an aged saint blesses the Lord for the relief from pain which we are able to give.

CATCHING BY GUILE.

A little help is worth a lot of pity. We found two wise, motherly women, whom we sent into these dens of iniquity in and around Spitalfields, to invite into a big, bright mission-room those who had strayed from home and virtue. The guile was womanly and inexpensive they were asked to come and sew, and in time the garment should be their own. Whilst sewing they all (about 20) had afternoon tea, and these Christian women talked of home and mother, singing the old familiar hymns to their guests.

All through the year there has scarcely been a week that one to three young girls have not been rescued and sent into Homes to redeem their character. Why cannot such simple efforts be increased? One young sister rescued, we are told, is worth all the whole year's toil; she is filled with desire to become a worker amongst those she has left in the broad road of destruction.

These are some of the many efforts of the Home of Industry, whilst the aged widows and rescuing and training the destitute children goes quietly on.

During January and February it is a sore pull for many known to us. The inmates of workhouses, infirmaries, and young people by hundreds look to us for a New Year's gift. We crave your prayers that much spiritual blessing may be poured out, that hearts may be won, and that the workers may be watching for the coming of the King. ANNIE MACPHERSON.

LORD AND LADY MEATH.

DEAR EDITOR,—I observe in THE CHRISTIAN of Nov. 8, that "the Earl of Meath had occupied the pulpit of Dr. Culyer in Brooklyn." This might easily be misunderstood. On Sunday evening, Oct. 20, a large public meeting was held in my church for the promotion of Christian philanthropy in several directions. The Earl of Meath, who was visiting me at the time, made the principle speech on some methods of philanthropy in London; and an admirable address it was too. Rev. Mr. See followed him in a strong appeal for Young Men's Christian Asssociations. Lord Meath began his address by saying "This is the first time I have ever stood in a pulpit"; but it ought not to be the last.

During that Sabbath afternoon the Countess of Meath made a very happy address to our Sunday-school. She has organised several leagues of her "Ministering Children" while in our country, chiefly in Episcopal churches. We are always glad to welcome the representatives of your Christian nobility, and we wish that more of them would come.—Yours fraternally,

THEODORE L. CUYLER.

Brooklyn, U.S.A., Nov. 19.

NEGLECTED CITY LADS AND LASSES.—A correspondent urges that something should be done to reach the boys and girls who wander in such large numbers about the streets of large towns on Sunday, as well as other evenings. He suggests that the schoolrooms connected with the various churches should be opened, and the young people be made comfortable and brought under Christian influence. This would, he says, supply the missing link between the Sunday-school and the church.

SEVEN WEEKS' WORK IN IRELAN

MR. J. C. RAINEY has returned to Paignt South Devon, after a season of Gospel work Ireland. He writes:—I have been for sev weeks in Ireland, and have greatly enjoy labouring in the old country again. The p verbial warmth of Christian love and energy Christian effort are as intense as ever, tha God, and I look back with gratitude to t great kindness everywhere shown me. It w delightful to revisit scenes of former labour Roscommon, Roscrea, and Newbliss, and fi numerous and attentive audiences, eager hear "the words of this life."

In Dublin the Lord's work goes forwar Once flowing in somewhat of a single ma stream, it has overflowed into numerous cha nels, reaching thereby many outlying sorts ar conditions of men. The Merrion Hall sti holds its own place—a place God has sure given it, as a bulwark of the faith once for a delivered to the saints, and Sunday by Sunda it gathers considerable audiences to hear th preaching of Christ crucified.

The work among the Dublin Metropolita Police and Royal Irish Constabulary also pr ceeds nobly. God gives constant encourag ment to those who labour so patiently an indefatigably among them. Under many dark blue or dark green coat there beats heart true as steel to Christ the Lord. No the least of my privileges was taking part in week of special meetings of the Royal Iris Constabulary recruits this month near thei depôt at the Phœnix Park. Every evening th mission-room was filled with manly fellows and a response was heartily given to th appeals to come over on the Lord's side, thoug not without inward struggle with unbelief, o prejudice, or self-righteousness. May we no pray that, as these go forth into every corne of Ireland, they may be true defenders of th faith, as well as representatives of law an order?

In returning home, it is my longing tha Paignton may get something more of God' blessing than ever before. That all may share I have sent out an address to all the Christians in the town, earnestly soliciting co-operation in five days' united prayer, to be followed by an eight days' Gospel mission. Surely we may "look up" for a mighty outpouring of "such a blessing."

THE BIBLE IN FRANCE.—From the time of the invention of printing down to to-day there has ever been a lively interest in Bible work among French people. At the recent Exposition, the Bible Society of Paris showed specimens of 744 editions of the Bible in French. During the present century there have been at least thirty-five translations of the Holy Scriptures, in whole or in part, in the French language. We are glad to notice an instructive article on French versions in the December issue of The Theological Monthly, from the pen of Dr. Weymouth.

SAILORS IN GLASGOW.—For six years Mr. A. M. Graham has laboured energetically amongst the tars who every year land in thousands upon the banks of the Clyde. His special forte is visiting the men on board their ships, and their families in their homes, pleading with them to accept the gift of God, and distributing religious and wholesome literature. Being strong in body as well as earnest in spirit, Mr. Graham is able to get through a good deal of hard work in this cause. He has some influential friends in Glasgow, and labours steadily on, trusting that the Lord will thus cause the seed sown to bring forth fruit. Mr. Graham has also a small Bethel where meetings are held, and in which the men can pass their leisure instead of in the public-house. For the first time since the establishment of this work, the funds in hand are insufficient (by £70) to meet the demands of accounts due—the rent being a considerable item. Friends interested in the work may communicate with Mr. Graham, Seamen's Evangelistic Mission, 59, Morrison-street, Glasgow.

The West London Mission.

To ascertain some reliable particulars of the two weeks' special Gospel crusade at Princes Hall, Piccadilly, one of our staff looked in upon Mr. Josiah Nix, at Wiclif House, Fitzroy-square, the other evening. Mr. Nix, who may be termed the head-centre of the intelligence bureau of the West-Central Wesleyan Mission, very readily acceded to the request preferred by our representative, answering the questions with his usual frankness and bonhomie:—

"How are you satisfied, Mr. Nix, with the results of the effort?"

"They have exceeded my expectations. As you know, we rented Princes Hall for a fortnight for what was probably the first Gospel mission ever held in the fashionable region of Piccadilly and Mayfair. Before the meetings began, our workers, visited every house from Regent-street to Park-lane, and from Oxford-street to Pall Mall. Their instructions were to see the head of the household, and in the majority of instances they succeeded in doing so."

"Did they get a good reception?"

"On the whole, much better than we anticipated. With very rare exceptions they were received and treated in the most kindly manner. They were repeatedly thanked for the interest and attention shown in calling. In other ways we made the meetings widely known. We utilised the magic lantern by having it fitted up on a conveyance, and by projecting on a screen views of the principal agents of the Mission, of Piccadilly-circus by day and by night, &c. This proved a very effective way of making the mission known. Then we had special invitations delivered to the heads of every business house in the vicinity, asking them to distribute tickets among those in their employ. We did the same with the managers of theatres, music-halls, and public-houses. The responses were gratifying. Even the publicans sent for tickets, and permitted their servants to attend. So did several managers of places of amusement, some of whom sent kind letters of thanks. Coming so soon after the music-hall agitation, in which we took a decided part, this friendly feeling seemed to us remarkable."

"How were the services attended?"

"Very well, indeed. There were good gatherings in the afternoon, and at the evening meetings the hall was always crowded. Many of those who came were evidently of the non-church-going class; we could tell by their not joining readily in the hymns that were sung."

"Did you have many of the so-called aristocracy?"

"More than I expected. Of course they were more numerous in the afternoon than the evening. Some of them, I may tell you, expressed great satisfaction at what they saw and heard. The power and freshness of the teaching to which they listened rather surprised them."

"Mr. Price Hughes addressed all the meetings, did he not?"

"Yes. In the afternoons he gave a connected series of addresses on various aspects of the life of Christ. In the last week of the mission there were two special evening meetings, one for young women, and another for young men. At the former there were from 900 to 1000 present, and about the same number at the young men's meeting."

"Can you speak definitely as to results?"

"There were many cases of undoubted conversion, and that from persons in all classes of society. At the two special meetings it was delightful to hear the responses from those who were seeking salvation, and who were asked to manifest their anxiety. Numbers stayed behind to be spoken with who did not go into either of the inquiry rooms. One happy circumstance in connection with the men's meeting was the decision for Christ of twelve out of one house of business, in which there was previously but a single professed Christian. On the same evening a cabman left his cab on the rank, went into the hall for a short time to see what the service was like, found his way to the inquiry-room, where he gave his heart to the Saviour, and left the place rejoicing. Some club men, too, were converted. Here is a letter from one of them (showing a missive with the name of a certain club embossed on the back of the envelope). Mrs. Hughes and the Sisters distributed pretty cards of invitation along the promenade at Rotten Row on Sunday afternoons, much to the interest of the young mashers who followed them about."

"What about the expenses of the mission, Mr. Nix?"

"The enterprise, as you can imagine, has been an expensive one, as everything had to be done in good style, in keeping with the character of the neighbourhood. We had collections at the meetings, but what was given did not suffice to pay the rent of the hall."

In answer to a question about future developments of the work, Mr. Nix said that a full programme of Christmas activities was in hand, but he could not give details for a week or so. He said that Princes Hall was now secured for Sunday evenings to hold the overflows from St. James's Hall. Then he referred to some interesting matters touching next week, when the great Cattle Show takes place in the Agricultural Hall. As a counter attraction to the vain and frivolous shows of the Metropolis, a Holiness Convention has been arranged for in the City-road Chapel, from Monday to Friday. The railway authorities were applied to, with the result that on the special announcements of cheap rates for Cattle Show week, this Wesleyan Convention is sandwiched in between Barnum's Show and the Niagara Panorama. Mr. Nix's idea is that as many Christian people will be in town on business or pleasure next week, they ought to have something provided for them so that they may not be left to the ordinary garish allurements of the great city. Our representative had to cut short the interview somewhat abruptly to keep another engagement, and he departed much impressed with the sanctified ingenuity of this red-hot Methodist brother, who is showing his fellow Christian workers "how to do it."

WAIFS AND STRAYS.—The Church of England Central Society for providing homes for waifs and strays has experienced considerable difficulty in dealing with those whose physical infirmities prevented their being placed in the ordinary Homes of the Society. A dwelling-house at Tooting was adapted as a temporary Home for twenty crippled children, and the Home has been full for some months. The committee is desirous of establishing a permanent Home in two separate buildings, for thirty girls and thirty boys. The hon. secretary is Mr. E. de M. Rudolf, 32, Charing-cross, London, S.W.

CAUTION.—Mr. Edward W. Thomas has had his attention called to the fact that a company of coloured people are travelling in Scotland and giving services of song, announcing that "A silver collection will be taken at the doors to defray the expenses of this mission," with a foot-note added: "The proceeds, after defraying expenses, are to be devoted to the London Female Friendless and Fallen Reformatory Institution." Mr. Thomas desires us to say these people have no authority to make such announcement, and that no report of collections and expenses has been made to the office of the Institution, 200, Euston-road, London, N.W.

SOLDIERS IN INDIA.—Lieut.-Sergeant F. McKenzie, of the Bengal Ordnance Department, writes:—"As I have been transferred to the Quetta Arsenal, I would thank those friends who have kindly sent me papers for the use of the troops at Ferozepore, to forward them in future to Mr. G. Baily, Ordnance Department, or to Mr. E. J. Adderly, schoolmaster, Royal Sussex Regiment, both at Ferozepore. These gentlemen will either distribute literature locally, or send it to troops serving on the field. Moreover, I shall be glad to receive parcels myself at the Arsenal, Quetta. The postage rate of newspapers is 1½d. for two ounces."

MAJOR WHITTLE IN LONDON.

WOOLWICH.

THE ten days' mission has come and gone, leaving results which have caused many hearts to overflow with thankfulness. Night after night the interest seemed to deepen; night after night individual cases of conversion were manifest. The last meeting of all will not soon be forgotten by those present. Long before the hour the place was packed, and many could not obtain admittance. A place was reserved for those who had found blessing, and the diverse character of these was in itself a signal proof of the adaptation of Christianity to all sorts and conditions of men. Young lads, stalwart men, many in army uniform; old grey-headed men, women, young and old, rich and poor, sat together, dominated as by one thought: "What shall I render to the Lord for all his benefits to me?"

Major Whittle's impressive address was on the "Comes" of the Bible. The crush was so great that it seemed impossible to manage an after-meeting, and an opportunity was given for those who wished to leave, but few seemed to go. While all bowed in prayer, those who were willing to accept the Gospel message were asked to indicate it. One after another rose, until it appeared that more than a hundred had come to the valley of decision. The closing hymn, "God be with you till we meet again," gave a much-desired opportunity for an expression of thankfulness to him who, under God's guidance, had brought blessing to many a home in Woolwich.

On Saturday evening a meeting was held at the hall at St. James's Church for the acknowledgment of mercies received, Captain Robertson (Royal Artillery) presiding. The first man to rise was his own pay-sergeant, and after him soldiers and civilians seemed to compete with each other in testifying to the reality of pardon and peace through Jesus' name.

STRATFORD.

Major Whittle opened a mission at Stratford last Lord's Day. We rejoice to learn that the blessing which attended his labours at Woolwich is finding encouraging repetition. The Conference Hall in West Ham-lane is a building of highly interesting associations; and it is hoped that the spiritual results of the present effort will be in glorious harmony with the circumstances that led to the erection of the Hall, and the establishment of the many evangelistic agencies of which it is the home and centre.

On Monday evening the Major spoke specially to young people, and his words were not only simple in the extreme, but faithful and true. The justice and love of God were presented to view, as explaining and enforcing the message of the Gospel; and, as on the previous evening, a goodly number of people signified their desire that the Lord should be entreated on their behalf. There have been cheering cases of decision for Christ, and many more are confidently expected. A choir of devoted men and women sing the Gospel at the meetings.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a three weeks' mission at Downton, Salisbury, to be conducted by Mr. Robert Cairns, of the Evangelisation Society; commenced on Sunday last.——For blessing on special Gospel addresses being delivered by Mr. John Elliott, in the new Wesleyan Chapel, at Victoria Park, Torquay.——For blessing on a special Gospel mission, at Brunswick Hall, Brunswick-road, Poplar, E., to Dec. 15; meetings on Sundays at 11 and 6.30; week-nights at 8.——For blessing on special services at the Baptist Chapel, Ross, Herefordshire, to Dec. 9, by the pastor and Mr. Opie Rodway, of Stroud.——For a revival of Gospel and spiritual work in the town of Epping, Essex.——For special services, to be held at Hazelbury Plucknett, Dec. 8 to 22, by Mr. John Bennett, of the Evangelisation Society.——For blessing upon five days' Gospel temperance mission at Peckham, Dec. 2 to 6.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Robert Cairns, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a most successful twelve days' mission at the Baptist Chapel, Corfe Mullen, near Wimborne, which has been attended with good results.

Kells, co. Antrim.—Successful meetings are held at this place by Mr. James Thompson, of the Irish Evangelisation Society. The place of meeting is often crowded, and nightly the interest increases. Rev. Mr. Eaton (Presbyterian), of Kells, heartily co-operates.

Wingates, Bolton-le-Moors.—A mission has been conducted by Mr. Thomas Payne, of Dalston, for four weeks, in the schools in this parish. It is believed that many have given their hearts to the Lord, and it has also been a time of blessing to many Christians.

Mr. George Clarke has closed a two weeks' mission in Derry. The evangelist quickly got into touch with the people, and soon the largest building in the city was crowded to overflowing. Anxious seekers filled the lecture-room evening after evening at the close of the address.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, after missions at Liverpool, has concluded eight days' evangelistic services in Hamilton-square Church, Birkenhead. Manifest tokens of the Divine blessing have rested upon the work. Many professing Christians have been led more fully to rejoice in Christ life. Several interesting cases of spiritual decision have witnessed to the power and persuasiveness of the preacher's appeals.

Successful Gospel meetings have been held in Regent-street Baptist Church, Belfast, by Mr. Robert Clark, assisted by Pastors Usher, M.D., and Haste. Similar meetings have been held by Mr. and Mrs. Powers in the Methodist New Connexion Church, Newtownards; by Revs. Robert Orr and H. N. Kevin at Antrim; and by Revs. George Barnes and G. W. Rea at Pettigo. In each case much blessing was experienced.

Miss Radcliffe (daughter of Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, Liverpool) has completed a series of mission services in Wales. Her testimony has been much blessed to church members in awakening them to a sense of the blessedness of wholehearted consecration to the service of their Lord. Many of the unconverted have also been reached by the Gospel. Miss Radcliffe's most recent visits have been paid to Carmarthen, Aberystwith, Merthyr Tydfil, Merthyr Vale, and Cardiff.

Mr. Samuel Mackenzie has been labouring for several months in the East-end of Glasgow, under the auspices of the Free Church Presbytery, holding a fortnight of meetings in each church visited. His labours have been greatly blessed. There have been some quite remarkable cases of conversion; many more professors have exchanged a false security for the Rock of Ages, and many lukewarm Christians have been quickened. The work has been deepening and widening, especially within the last fortnight, and it is hoped that Mr. Mackenzie may be able to stay longer than was originally contemplated. R. H.
